HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

All wise and patient Father, we bless Thee that Thou dost give us the zest of soul that sorrow cannot keep down and the cheer that burdens cannot crush. Be Thou the bow of promise in every cloud and the balance in every discord.

Heavenly Father, in this sad world where teeming humanity is struggling for mere existence, Thou alone dost hold the universal remedy for all human ills. O stretch forth those holy arms that once hung on the cross and help all to meet despondency with courage and disappointment with fadeless hope. From all tyranny of mind and heart do Thou deliver us. Bless us with the knowledge of Thy saving grace and dwell with us and all Thy people everywhere, and God Himself shall have the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 27, was read and approved.

THE IMMIGRATION MUDDLE

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, from time to time Members of Congress, newspaper reporters, and others have attempted to piece together the immigration picture. It has not been easy to determine how many people from foreign countries are in the United States and eligible for citizenship. Press reports indicate the number of aliens registered with the Department of Immigration and Naturalization is about three and one-half million. No one seems to know just how many are here on visitor's visas. On November 26, 1943, former Assistant Secretary of State Long testified in an executive session of the House Foreign Affairs Committee that about 307,000 visas of all kinds were granted to persons from enemy and enemy-occupied territories. Most of them came on visitor's visas.

There is then the question of nonquota immigrants. To qualify for the nonquota type it is necessary to have a relative in this country who will take care of you or show that you have $1,200 available in a bank and at your disposal. There is a very neat racket now of getting a letter from a bank showing $1,200 and then transferring the same $1,200 to another bank and getting a similar letter. This goes on indefinitely. The original $1,200 will serve many people.

The latest reports I can get from the Department of State which issues visas and from the Immigration Division is to the effect that from July 1, 1946, to January 1, 1947, an average of 4,500 a month came in on the regular quota visas.

There is another 7,000 a month from nonquota countries. Attorney General Clark estimated last June 9 that 2,000 people a day were entering this country illegally, that is, without visas. This would mean 730,000 a year from this source. The Immigration Service apprehended 85,000 who came in illegally the last 6 months of 1946.

Part of the difficulty in getting information from agencies dealing with immigration is due to a directive issued by the Attorney General on May 2, 1939, which reads as follows:

All official files, documents, records, and information in the offices of the Department of Justice, including the several offices of the United States attorneys, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States marshals, and Federal penal and correctional institutions, or in control of any officer or employee of the Department of Justice, are to be regarded as confidential.

No officer or employee may permit the disclosure or use for any purpose other than for the performance of his official duties, except in the discretion of the Attorney General, the assistant to the Attorney General, or an Assistant Attorney General acting for him.

This rather effectively ties the hands of anyone seeking information about immigration.

I hold here in my hand a photostatic copy of a list of passengers on a recent flight from Tel-Aviv, Palestine, to Miami, Fla. Also a manifest of a list from Cairo, Egypt. It is my understanding that there are daily flights from these southern European ports carrying displaced persons to the United States. There are chartered planes, and the flights are made with the blessing of the State Department and the military authorities.

I also have in my hand a story from a New York paper stating that 1,000 American travelers are stuck in Italy. They cannot get transportation home. They have little opportunity of getting over to the United States within the next year. It seems a bit unusual that American citizens should be stranded in foreign countries and at the same time there is available transportation to rush displaced persons to this country.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I called attention to the fact that there is much difficulty in getting accurate information relative to immigration. I am still of the opinion that the proper committee ought to have a full-dress investigation upon this important subject. This country has many difficult internal problems. Veterans are finding it difficult to get homes in which to live. Many of them are in school preparing for their future work. Does it not seem that immigration of a million people a year to this country, legally or illegally, should be stopped until there is an opportunity to get our own troubles adjusted?

Improper screening and a lowering of the bars on immigration may admit many a small-fry Axis Sally or members of the terrorist Stern gang of Palestine. It is time to call a halt.

WILLIAM McKINLEY

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Because this is a special occasion, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose, but this is not to be used as a precedent.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Ohio delegation in Congress, I wish to thank the present Speaker and also the former Speaker for their kindness to us on this the 29th day of January each year. This is McKinley's Birthday. Heretofore for years the Ohio delegation has taken some time of the House to call attention to the character and accomplishments of William McKinley.

McKinley's favorite flower was the red carnation. Because of his fondness for this particular flower, the State of Ohio has adopted it as its State flower.

Why do we request year after year that we be given this time? It is because we in Ohio at least think of William McKinley as one of the outstanding Congressmen of all time, especially from the standpoint of his contribution to constructive activities of the Nation. As we all know, he was one of our many illustrious Presidents, but we maintain that the most distinctive work ever performed by McKinley was his work as a Member of Congress in this Chamber. His work on this floor was done in the 25 years following the Civil War. His political and economic philosophies, which were followed by Congress, contributed mightily toward the upbuilding of the Nation. While his work as Governor of Ohio and his work as President of the United States, as a war President during the Spanish-American War, were outstanding, still the basis upon which he builded for the governorship and the Presidency was laid here in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a little story recently written by a lady in Ohio that sets forth why the carnation was McKinley's favorite flower.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

THE STORY OF THE McKINLEY CARNATION

The McKinley carnation, adopted in 1904 as the official flower of the State of Ohio, finds its origin in an act of sportsmanship (1876) when Dr. Lester Lamborn (Democrat) opposed William McKinley (Republican) for election to Congress.

Dr. Lamborn was a florist and owner of a private conservatory in Alliance. William McKinley was prosecutor of Stark County. The two men were opponents—and friends.

During the campaign, Dr. Lamborn sent gifts of carnations to his Republican opponent, McKinley, who wore them constantly as boutonnieres. The gesture created deep admiration in the mind of McKinley for his Democrat friend and the carnation became his favorite flower.

This admiration rose to high esteem and when Republican headquarters were again opened in Canton, with McKinley the candidate for President, thousands of carnations were distributed as campaign emblems.

McKinley was elected (1896) and the carnation became a Washington tradition. He was reelected in 1900.

When the Buffalo Exposition was opened in 1901, thousands were seen wearing the "presidential flower." At this exposition a tragedy ended the career of William McKinley—a highly honored and beloved President of the United States. When the train bearing the cortege of the President arrived in Canton, carloads of carnations were strewn along its tracks.

Being without a floral emblem, the State of Ohio, by act of the general assembly (1904), adopted the McKinley carnation as the official flower of the State of Ohio. Careful research was made to determine the exact color specified in the resolution. The color adopted was scarlet.

Excerpt of resolution:

"Be it resolved by the general assembly, the governor approving, That the scarlet carnation be adopted as the flower of the State of Ohio, as token of love and reverence for the memory of William McKinley."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that any Member of the House, epecially the Members from Ohio, be permitted to extend their remarks on William McKinley at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the aisle join the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and the other Members of the majority in commemorating the birth of a great American—President William McKinley.

At the time of his death he was loved and respected by the people of every section of the country, regardless of party affiliations. These red carnations worn by the Members today, his favorite flower, may be regarded as "the flowers that overhang the walls of party politics."

With the exception of Warren G. Harding, he was the last President to serve in either House of Congress until President Truman entered upon the duties of that exalted office; and he was the only President to serve both in Congress and in the armed forces of his country in time of war from Benjamin Harrison to Harry S. Truman.

He was a Christian gentleman. His favorite hymn was Lead Kindly Light, the very name of which carries the suggestion that Americans can well afford to follow during these trying times.

We gladly join in honoring the memory of this great American.

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the House of Representatives should have the benefit of the conclusions reached at a meeting held in Chicago by the Republican chairmen of 12 Midwestern States. These 12 Midwestern States comprise about one-third of the population of the United States. Their views are of great value in the deliberations of this body. I submit herewith a paragraph from a letter received from Mr. Paul C. Rosenquist, chairman of the Illinois Republican State Central Committee. You will note what is said relative to what the American people expect in regard to labor legislation. The people who actually work must be taken into consideration. Their views are not always expressed by those who claim to represent them. The people of the central West are also emphatic in their demands that there be a substantial and early reduction in personal income taxes.

Any labor legislation passed by Congress must be based on the fundamental principle that it will protect the rights of labor—meaning by labor the men and women who work. If new legislation is fair, industry will again operate freely to the benefit of all. Drastic reduction of governmental expenses must be made now. This will include the abolition of all unnecessary bureaus and personnel. Income taxes must be cut and these cuts must be applicable on the income of all citizens. Governmental legislation must be passed which will reverse the present trend of forcing small businesses into mergers. A broad base of small business is fundamental to healthy commerce. The country must go back to operation under specific laws instead of the present control by Federal commission ground rules and interpretation of laws. Every citizen of this country is now regulated by what bureaucrats and courts choose to designate as their interpretation of congressional acts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech by Mr. Francis G. Murray, of Philadelphia, on the subject of amateur sports.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial from the Wall Street Journal and in the other a resolution adopted by the retail food dealers of western Maryland.

Mr. NORBLAD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Oregon City Banner.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address by Dr. Everett P. Coleman.

GOVERNMENT IS OWN LAW VIOLATOR

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government always seems more than anxious to enforce obligations against its citizens. However, the Government violates its obligations, and the law of the land as well, by denying citizens of the United States payment on the bonds issued according to law. I am advised that on January 2, 1947, Mr. ———, of the ——— Co., of Bowling Green, Ohio, gave 30 days' notice that it desired to cash a certain G bond, being V-490258, in the sum of $5,000, surrendered the bond to the bank, and made application for payment, and on January 4, 1947, the ——— Co., of Bowling Green, was notified by the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland, Ohio, that payment of the bond would be deferred to after March 1, 1947, although on the notice itself is printed the statement that "F and G bonds will be redeemed on 1 month's notice in writing," and the bond itself so states thereon.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking why the Government is violating its obligation of contract on the bonds purchased by citizens. Such shabby treatment to the citizens of America who purchased Government bonds is beyond the realm of understanding. How can our Government expect compliance with the law while the Government itself wilfully violates its obligations on the bonds that it forced upon its citizens? The least the Government might do is to set a good example of complying with the law, instead of telling the citizens that the Federal Government is beyond the law and thereby setting a bad example of encouraging citizens to violate the law.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO COMMITTEE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 61) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and examinations authorized by section 202 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, incurred by the Committee on Appropriations, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $20,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting such study and examination or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

Sec. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "exceed", strike out "$20,000" and insert "the unobligated balance on January 3, 1947, of funds made available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETURN OF CERTAIN PAPERS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that certain papers which were filed with the House in connection with private claims bill H. R. 6820, Seventy-ninth Congress, may be released by the Clerk of the House to be returned to the claimant for his use in instituting judicial proceedings under the provisions of the Federal Torts Act.

The SPEAKER. Was there an adverse report?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No report was filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

BONUS OF 25 POUNDS OF SUGAR TO EVERY AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to suggest to the House a bonus, not to veterans, not to anyone else but to the individual American family. I should like to instruct the Secretary of Agriculture and the Director of the Office of Temporary Controls to reexamine the possibility of giving a special bonus of 25 pounds of sugar over and above any regular 1947 allotment per capita to each American housewife so that she can do more baking in the home, giving her children and her family the chance to consume more nutritious and palatable food.

So far we have done nothing but shadow-box with the sugar shortage. Speaking for myself, I think the time has come to give the people we represent a break. Why deprive them of a standard of living that has made Americans the happiest people in the world?

I would not propose this if I did not know that more sugar will be available for domestic use this year than at any time before the war. We can well afford the extra distribution, especially since no family today has enough sugar on hand.

This sugar bonus will show the folks back home this Congress is on the job, looking out for their welfare, and interested in seeing a well-nourished, strong, and healthy Nation, capable of taking the lead in bringing peace and progress to the whole world.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT OF 1940, AS AMENDED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1353) to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what the contents of the bill are.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the minority leader that the Veterans' Administration sent this bill with a letter explaining it and asked for its immediate passage. It was approved by the Budget or the Veterans' Administration would not have recommended its passage. We took the matter up in committee and it was reported unanimously by the committee.

The reason for its passage immediately is to extend the time from February 1, 1947, to August 1, 1947.

H. R. 1353 reduced to its simplest terms provides as follows:

First. Gives persons in the armed forces the option of originally subscribing for insurance on the 5-year level premium plan, or any other permanent plan such as ordinary life, 30-pay life, and so forth.

Under the present law, the original contract for insurance can only be made under the 5-year level premium plan.

Second. If the insured is totally disabled at the expiration of the 5-year level term contract and he does not otherwise elect, his insurance is automatically converted to the ordinary life plan.

This will automatically continue insurance protection for men totally disabled who are mentally incompetent, or who for other reasons beyond their control are unable to elect some permanent plan of insurance.

Third. Extends the time from February 1, 1947, to August 1, 1947, for reinstating lapsed term insurance by submitting a comparative health statement.

This is probably the most important feature of the bill, as it will permit hundreds of thousands of veterans who were disabled in active service to reinstate lapsed insurance without physical examination.

It will also eliminate the necessity of the Veterans' Administration making hundreds of thousands of physical examinations and afford the physicians of the Veterans' Administration time to devote more attention to the care of disabled veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is very short and I suggest that the Clerk read it. The Members ought to know what is in it. Then the bill can be explained more thoroughly.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H. R. 1353

A bill to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 602 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Every person who is commissioned and hereafter ordered into, or who is hereafter examined, accepted, and enrolled in, the active service and while in such active service shall, upon application in writing (made within 120 days after entrance into such active service) and payment of premiums as hereinafter provided and without further medical examination, be granted insurance by the United States against the death of such person occurring while such insurance is in force."

SEC. 2. Subsection (f) of section 602 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(f) Such insurance may be issued on the following plans: Five-year level premium term, ordinary life, 20-payment life, 30-payment life, 20-year endowment, endowment at age 60, and endowment at age 65. Level premium term insurance may be converted as of the date when any premium becomes or has become due, or exchanged as of the date of the original policy, upon payment of the difference in reserve, at any time while such insurance is in force and within the term period to any of the foregoing permanent plans of insurance: Provided, That conversion to an endowment plan may not be made while the insured is totally disabled. In any case in which the insured is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Administrator to be totally disabled at the expiration of the level premium term period of his insurance under conditions which would entitle him to continued insurance protection but for such expiration, such insurance shall be automatically converted to insurance on the ordinary life plan unless the insured has elected insurance on some other available plan. All level premium term policies shall cease and terminate at the expiration of the term period. Provisions for cash, loan, paid-up, and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, refund of unearned premiums, and such other provisions as may be found to be reasonable and practicable may be provided for in the policy of insurance or from time to time by regulations promulgated by the Administrator."

SEC. 3. Subsections (y) (1) and (y) (2) of section 602 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, are hereby repealed.

Mr. RANKIN. I was going to say that when this measure came before the committee, it was endorsed by all the veterans' organizations and by the Veterans' Administration, as the lady from Massachusetts said.

Mr. RAYBURN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker. However, I will say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, it is hoped that this is the last extension that will be necessary.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I doubt whether another extension will be necessary, I will say to the minority leader, but thousands of veterans cannot reinstate unless this bill passes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I quite understand.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I include the committee report on the bill amending the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended:

AMENDING THE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT OF 1940, AS AMENDED

Mrs. ROGERS, from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1353) to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, without amendments, and recommend that the bill do pass.

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

Section 1 of the bill would amend section 602 (a) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, to authorize the issuance originally of national service life insurance on any of the plans of insurance provided for in the act. To fully effectuate this purpose, section 2 of the bill would amend 602 (f) of the act, as amended, to provide that insurance may be issued initially on the 5-year level premium term plan or on any of the various permanent plans therein specified. Under present law only insurance on the 5-year level premium term plan may be issued originally and it must be carried for 1 year before it can be converted to a permanent plan. Your committee believes that the wartime need for restricting original policies to the 5-year level premium term plan has passed and that an applicant should now be permitted to avail himself of a permanent type policy without delay.

Section 2 of the bill would further amend section 602 (f) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, to provide that in any case in which the insured is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be totally disabled at the expiration of the level premium term period of his insurance under conditions which would entitle him to continued protection but for such expiration, such insurance shall be automatically converted to insurance on the ordinary life plan unless the insured has elected some other available plan. This amendment is necessary to protect those persons who are unable by reason of incompetency or other condition of total disability to apply for conversion of insurance within the term period and who, but for expiration of that period, would be entitled to further insurance protection with waiver of premiums during the continuance of their total disability. Under existing law such persons lose their insurance upon the expiration of the term period. Section 3 of the bill would repeal subsections (y) (1) and (y) (2) of section 602 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended. Subsection (y) (1) authorizes reinstatement of level premium term insurance upon payment of two monthly premiums and a showing of good health. This provision is of a character which may require a change at some future time to protect the interests of policyholders as a group. To permit flexibility the subject matter of this subsection is, therefore, more properly one for control by regulation than by statutory prescription. However, the Veterans' Administration has stated that no change in the present regulations authorizing this type of reinstatement is presently contemplated.

Subsection (y) (2) authorizes reinstatement of level premium term insurance within 6 months after lapse or within 6 months after the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, approved August 1, 1946 (February 1, 1947), whichever is later, upon payment of two monthly premiums, provided the applicant is in as good health on the date of application and tender of premiums as he was on the date of lapse. After February 1, 1947, term insurance which has lapsed more than 6 months may not be reinstated on a comparative health basis. The majority of discharged World War II veterans have heretofore allowed their national service life insurance to lapse. The Veterans' Administration is now preparing to institute a national campaign to inform these veterans on their rights, and it appears that the purpose of this campaign cannot be achieved unless an additional 6 months beyond the February 1, 1947, dead line specified by the law is authorized. If subsection (y) (2) is repealed, the Veterans' Administration proposes to issue regulations extending the period for reinstatement upon a comparative health basis to August 1, 1947, prior to which time it is anticipated that the Veterans' Administration will have solved its present operating difficulties and complexities to the extent that notices of lapse can be transmitted on a current basis. The Veterans' Administration further proposes that after August 1, 1947, regulations will restrict reinstatement on a comparative health basis to the period of 3 months. Your committee believes that under normal conditions the period of 6 months for comparative health reinstatement is excessive both from the standpoint of fairness to those policyholders who do not allow their policies to lapse and from the standpoint of the difficulty of determining comparative conditions of health at intervals longer than 3 months. This matter is considered to be one which should be subject to administrative regulation so that the period for comparative health reinstatement may be adjusted to any future recurrence of abnormal conditions.

There follows a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the Speaker of the House of Representatives which further explains the need for the proposed legislation:

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is enclosed herewith draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended," with the request that it be introduced and considered for enactment.

The purpose of section 1 of the proposed bill and conforming amendments contained in section 2 thereof is to authorize the Veterans' Administration to issue originally national service life insurance on any of the permanent plans of insurance authorized by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended. Under existing law, national service life insurance may be originally issued on the 5-year level premium term plan only, and such insurance must be carried for 1 year before it may be converted to insurance on a permanent plan. The need of these restrictions in existing law has passed and there is no reason why insurance on any plan should not be initially issued.

The further purpose of section 2 of the proposed bill is to provide that in any case in which an insured is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be totally disabled at the expiration of the level premium term period of his national service life insurance under conditions which would entitle him to continued insurance protection but for such expiration, such insurance shall be automatically converted to insurance on the ordinary life plan unless the insured has elected some other available plan.

It is anticipated that some policyholders of national service life insurance will be totally disabled at the expiration of the level premium term period of their insurance. Such individuals who will have been totally disabled for six or more consecutive months will be entitled to waiver of premiums until the expiration of the term, but insurance protection will cease at that time unless the level premium term insurance is converted to insurance on some other plan before the end of the term. Upon conversion of insurance to a permanent plan, the right of waiver of premiums which exist at the time of conversion will continue. Many such totally disabled persons, either because of incompetency or other circumstances beyond their control, may be unable to make application for conversion of insurance within the level premium term period. To guard against the hardship which would otherwise result under such circumstances, automatic conversion of insurance to a permanent plan must be provided. Under the provisions of section 2 of the proposed bill, the insurance protection and right to waiver of premiums of such individuals will be continued.

The purpose of section 3 of the proposed bill is to repeal subsections (y) (1) and (y) (2) of section 602 of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended. Subsection (y) (1) authorizes reinstatement of level-premium term insurance upon written application, payment of two monthly premiums, and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator that the applicant, subject to the provisions of the second sentence of section 602 (c) (2), is in good health. The part of section 602 (c) (2) which is referred to contains independent provisions relating to the exclusion of service-connected disability, less than total in degree, in determining good health for reinstatement purposes. These general provisions would continue to be applicable to reinstatement as provided for by regulations upon the repeal of subsection (y) (1).

Reinstatement within the term upon the payment of two monthly premiums and a showing of good health is now authorized under Veterans' Administration regulations, and to meet existing conditions was so authorized for several years prior to the enactment of subsection (y) (1). Although no change in such regulations is presently contemplated, it is believed that the matter of reinstatement generally is so affected by changing conditions involving the interests of policyholders as a group that considerable flexibility should be permitted in determining when and upon what conditions reinstatement may be accomplished. In keeping with this general principle, the provisions of subsection (y) (1) should be repealed in order that regulations with respect to the subject matter thereof shall be susceptible of such periodic changes as may be warranted.

Subsection (y) (2) authorized reinstatement of level-premium term insurance within 6 months after lapse or within 6 months after the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, approved August 1, 1946 (February 1, 1947), whichever is the later, upon payment of two monthly premiums, provided the applicant is in as good health on the date of application and tender of premiums as he was on the date of lapse. Under the provisions of this subsection, insurance which has lapsed more than 6 months may not be reinstated on a comparative health basis after February 1, 1947, and the Veterans' Administration will be without authority to provide by regulation for reinstatement on a comparative health basis in such cases on or after February 1, 1947.

If subsection (y) (2) is repealed, the Veterans' Administration contemplates the issuance of regulations which will allow reinstatement on a comparative health basis up to August 1, 1947, without regard to the date the insurance lapsed. Subsequent to August 1, 1947, regulations will authorize reinstatement of National Service Life Insurance on a comparative health basis within 3 months after lapse upon application and evidence satisfactory to the Administrator that the applicant is in as good health at the time of application and payment of premiums as he was on the date of lapse. Such privilege of reinstatement will be similar to the reinstatement provisions now applicable to converted national service life insurance policies. This right is more liberal than the reinstatement privileges generally provided under policies issued by commercial insurers and affords reasonable protection for policyholders. In regard to permitting reinstatement to be accomplished for an indefinite period in the future on the basis of comparative health within 6 months from date of lapse, there is grave doubt that such practice would be equitable to those policyholders who continually retain their contracts in force. This conclusion is based to some extent upon the reinstatement requirements as published by other mutual insurers. It is difficult, if not impossible, to determine comparative conditions of health at two periods more than 3 months apart.

A great majority of the veterans who have been discharged from World War II have allowed their national service life insurance to lapse. It will be the purpose of the Veterans' Administration, on a national scale, to carry on an informative campaign so that veterans may be fully enlightened relative to their rights and privileges regarding national service life insurance. This program will comprehend the solicitation of assistance from all organizations interested in veterans' welfare. It is planned to utilize all recognized media, such as the mail, newspapers, magazines, radio, moving pictures, etc., for carrying information to the veterans. This program will have been completed before August 1, 1947. It is obvious that the proposed plan will be ineffective unless and until subsection (y) (2) is repealed.

The proviso of subsection (y) (2) authorizes the granting of an additional period not exceeding 60 days for the payment of premiums by an insured who makes inquiry prior to expiration of the grace period disclosing a clear intent to continue insurance protection. Similar provisions were contained in Veterans' Administration regulations prior to the enactment of subsection (y) (2). For the reasons heretofore stated in support of the repeal of subsection (y) (1), it is believed that this proviso, which also was intended to meet an existing situation, concerns a matter which is more properly one for regulation.

The proposed bill, if enacted, will not involve any cost in addition to that contemplated under existing law.

Because the right of reinstatement on a comparative health basis will expire February 1, 1947, in those cases where insurance has lapsed more than 6 months many veterans will be unable to reinstate lapsed insurance after that date under existing law. It is therefore respectfully urged that the proposed measure be specially considered for enactment at the earliest possible date.

Advice has been received from the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection by that office to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

OMAR N. BRADLEY,
General, United States Army, Administrator.

"(2) Any level premium term insurance which has lapsed may be reinstated within the term upon written application, made within 6 months after the date of such lapse or within 6 months after the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, whichever is the later, and payment of two monthly premiums, provided such applicant is in as good health on the date of application and tender of premiums as he was on the due date of the premium in default and furnishes evidence thereof satisfactory to the Administrator: Provided, That when the insured makes inquiry prior to the expiration of the grace period disclosing a clear intent to continue insurance protection, an additional reasonable period not exceeding 60 days may be granted for payment of premiums due, but the premiums in any such case must be paid during the lifetime of the insured."]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

News-Democrat, Friday, January 24, 1947, on the very same matter. I invite the attention of the Members to this editorial and to the many editorials in support of the policy of reciprocity which have recently appeared in the Nation's newspapers, both Democratic and Republican.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, a little while ago I heard the statement made in a radio broadcast that although this session of the Eightieth Congress is barely under way the House of Representatives is already bypassing the Congressional Reorganization Act by permitting closed hearings to be held by important subcommittees. The broadcaster had reference to the provision in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 which reads as follows:

All hearings conducted by standing committees or their subcommittees shall be open to the public, except executive sessions for marking up bills or for voting or where the committee by a majority vote orders an executive session.

In the last session of Congress distinguished members of the present majority party in this House created an international issue by demanding that the United States Government refuse to extend relief to any nation which would not permit full freedom of the press within its borders. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the present Congress will put itself in an indefensible position if it denies freedom of the press in its committee hearings.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN R. MURDOCK

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to announce that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] was elected yesterday as chairman of the Democratic steering committee. I think it is a very fine honor that has been paid him, and it is a recognition of his years of loyal effort in behalf of the Democratic Party and of his constituents.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, just a moment ago the very able chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], made some remarks about our foreign policy and secured permission to insert in the RECORD a resolution unanimously adopted by that committee. His announcement was greeted with more or less applause. I wonder if the Members know what is in that resolution. Just to keep the record straight and to avoid the later charge that the statements in it were not challenged, hence here accepted, permit me to read it, and then make answer. I read:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs make a detailed study of the laws affecting the relations of the United States with foreign nations generally and that a study be made of the international organizations of which the United States is a member.

As the unanimous expression of the opinion and desire of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, the resolution which, by unanimous consent, is to be printed in the RECORD, is directed to and no doubt will receive the respectful consideration of the Members of the House and in particular of the members of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

If designed to lessen the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, it is futile; neither is it probable that the proposed recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the procedure to be followed by other committees of the House will be accepted without comment. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments derives its authority from section 105 (a) of title V of the United States Code in force prior to the passage of Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, cited as the Legislative Reorganization Act. Section 105 (a) reads as follows:

Every executive department and independent establishment of the Government shall, upon request of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the House of Representatives, or of any seven members thereof, or upon request of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the Senate, or any five members thereof, furnish any information requested of it relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of said committee. (May 29, 1928, ch. 901, sec. 2, 45 Stat. 996.)

Rule 11, subsection 34, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, outlined the duties of the committee.

Section 101 of the Reorganization Act reads, and I quote:

The following sections of this title are enacted by the Congress:

"(a) As an exercise of the rule-making power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply; and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

"(b) With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House."

Under rule X of the Reorganization Act the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to consist of 25 members is established.

On page 2 of the resolution of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, cited by the gentleman, there appears the following language:

(2) That the Committee on Foreign Affairs invited the Secretary of State to cooperate with the committee in such study and to furnish all necessary information as to the organization, the personnel and the policies of the Department of State and international agreements to which the United States is a party, and that the committee agree to safeguard such information against any disclosure which is incompatible with the public interest, and

(3) That upon the acceptance by the Secretary of State of this invitation and agreement, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs recommend to the Speaker and to other committees of the House of Representatives, that no other committee make any unnecessary duplicating studies of the organization, personnel, and operation of the Department of State.

In my opinion no committee of the House, no Member of the House, at least on the majority side, and I assume the same applies to the minority, desires to unnecessarily duplicate the action of a committee which is authorized to or which has entered upon either a study or an investigation of any executive department.

Permit me to quote the applicable words of rule XI of the Reorganization Act:

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMITTEES

(1) All proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subjects listed under the standing committees named below shall be referred to such committees, respectively.

Turning to subdivision (h) which establishes the committee we find these pertinent words:

Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Then among others we have this provision:

Such committee shall have the duty of—

* * * * *

(D) Studying intergovernmental relationships between the United States and the States and municipalities, and between the United States and international organizations of which the United States is a member.

The Congress, in its wisdom, having seen fit to charge the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments with one of the duties which this resolution would impose upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, it becomes my duty to call attention to the futility of the resolution adopted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs insofar as it attempts to limit the duty of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and to announce that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will, in my opinion, be required to carry out the obligations imposed upon it by the statute, by the rules of the House, as previously written and enforced. The title of the committee is significant. It is Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. In no sense of the word can it be construed as a legislative committee. As long as your humble servant is permitted to act as chairman and to guide the activities of that committee, it will not knowingly trespass upon the jurisdiction of any other committee. It will not conduct either studies or investigations into legislative procedure. It will not attempt to lay down policy for any legislative committee. It will endeavor to at all times confine itself to the consideration of measures referred to it, to the duties imposed upon it by the rule and precedent. Its chairman, and in my opinion, its members, without exception, will seek and appreciate the advice and help of the chairmen and the members of other committees who, from time to time, honor us by an acceptance of our invitation to sit in on any and all studies or so-called investigations which may be undertaken by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Omar B. Ketchum on the subject of humane treatment of veterans who were prisoners of war.

THE LATE HONORABLE GUY U. HARDY

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I announce to the House the death of a former Member of this body, Hon. Guy U. Hardy, of Canon City, Colo., which occurred at his home in Canon City on last Sunday morning. He had been ill for several weeks but was active until the day before he passed away. Mr. Hardy represented the district I now have the honor to represent, the Third Congressional District of the State of Colorado. He was first elected to Congress in 1918 and began his service in the Sixty-sixth Congress in March 1919. He was reelected to each succeeding Congress until 1932, and served seven consecutive terms in this House. He was a member of the Republican Party. Our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] made reference to Mr. Hardy in a speech on the floor last week in which he gave him credit for compiling information on Congress and the duties of a Congressman, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 5, 1930. Mr. Hardy's speech is still used as the basis for articles on the organization of Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I served with Guy Hardy. I regarded him as not only one of the most attractive but one of the most resourceful men who ever served in the House.

I remember on one occasion when he told a story, which I hope the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH] will look up, of a pioneer newspaperman who went west. When he started to publish his newspaper he found that he had lost all the f's and k's and that he had none of those letters in his possession. The method he used to spell out his words in the absence of those letters was one of the most amusing stories I have ever heard told on the floor of this House.

Guy Hardy was a Christian gentleman whom everybody on both sides of the aisle literally loved. His death brings profound sorrow to all his friends.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I am deeply grateful for the comments of the gentleman from Mississippi. I am sure he expressed the sentiments of everyone who knew Guy Hardy. He made friends and retained them. I never heard of him having an enemy.

Mr. Hardy was born in Abingdon, Ill., on April 4, 1872. He attended Albion Normal College at Albion, Ill., and the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky. After leaving college he taught school in Illinois and Florida from 1890 to 1893. He moved to Canon City, Colo., in 1894 and remained there until his death.

Mr. Hardy engaged in the newspaper business in Canon City and was editor and publisher of the Canon City Daily Record. He was recognized as one of the leading editors of the State and in 1918 was honored by being elected president of the National Editorial Association. He was active in civic and community affairs and founded the University Club of Canon City. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster by President McKinley.

Mr. Hardy served with great distinction in this body, and was a member of the Appropriations Committee. He was most diligent and energetic in the performance of his duties, and his faithful service is still remembered throughout the third district. I first met him when he was serving in Congress and we formed a close friendship that has meant a great deal to me through the years. I shall greatly miss him. Colorado has lost one of her outstanding citizens and I have lost a dear friend.

He leaves his widow, three sons, and a daughter to mourn his passing, as well as two brothers. I am sure this House wishes to express its sympathy to Mrs. Hardy and the children on the loss of their distinguished husband and father.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise also to express my regret at the loss of our former Congressman from Colorado, Guy U. Hardy, of Canon City. I know a great many of you in the House recall him. We in Colorado all loved Congressman Hardy. I remember one of the first letters I received after being elected to this body was from Guy U. Hardy. He did not live in my district, but he immediately wrote me a letter wherein he gave me a great deal of advice as to what a new Congressman should know about the legislative branch of our Government and how our House committees operated. I appreciated his advice.

Congressman Hardy was a faithful, loyal, and patriotic public servant. He will be greatly missed by his friends of Colorado. Everyone of us regret his passing.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, we have been greatly shocked to learn of the death of Guy Urban Hardy, of Colorado.

He served as a Member of Congress, representing the Third District of Colorado, from 1919 to 1932, having taken up his residence in Canon City, Colo., in the year 1894.

By profession he was a newspaper editor and journalist, and his honesty and integrity in serving his community in this capacity during the early days of the growth and development of our State, won for him the respect of all.

During the years he served in Congress, he was recognized by his colleagues as a fine gentleman, of excellent character, and high ability. His devotion to his duties as a Representative, and his efforts in behalf of his people, accomplished much for us, and the people of Colorado will always be indebted to him.

We have lost a statesman who served his State and his Nation with honor, and a friend who was devoted to his neighbors. He will be sorely missed.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, it was with a heavy heart that I learned of the death of my old friend, the Honorable Guy U. Hardy, of Colorado.

Only a few days ago I heard indirectly from him with respect to my recent revision of the informative pamphlet of which he was the originator and in which he undertook to collect for the use of Members of Congress and the general public a wealth of valuable data concerning the Congress of the United States and its procedures.

Over the years, ever since I first undertook in 1939 to keep his compilation up to date, Guy Hardy and I have had frequent correspondence and have enjoyed each other's company on more than one occasion. It is hard for me to believe he has gone. I know his reward will be that of a just man made perfect.

Guy Hardy was a great but modest man who made an everlasting mark upon his day and generation. He exemplified Kipling's definition of character—

There is neither East nor West, border nor breed nor birth,
When two strong men stand face to face, tho' they come from the ends of the earth!

He was reckoned a leader in Congress because of his character, his integrity, and his ability. The call of home and the life he loved meant more to him than presence in these Halls, and after seven terms in the House he returned to his beloved hills and mountains. He felt, as did the poet, Constance E. Hoar, that—

Something that never dies lives in these hills,
The ancient forests have gone but the soil is there;
Something was born in those mountains that comes back as an avatar;
For this is the soil of America, not even a war
Can intimidate that which reaches and touches a star.

When Guy Hardy left Washington, the Congress lost an able legislator and his former associates lost the close companionship of a good friend and wise counselor.

His interest in legislative matters and procedures never diminished. The last time I saw him, he said to me: "You are to be congratulated and so is every member of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress.' It took courage even to present the reorganization bill to the House for consideration. It will take time to iron out a lot of trouble growing out of petty jealousy for power, but you boys are on the right track. More power to you."

Guy Hardy looked to the mountains from whence came his strength. He successfully emphasized the truth which the poet so gloriously suggested in the following lines:

"All roads lead down from the summit,"
The plodding and worldly say,
"Down from the stars and glaciers
To the roofs and walls of day."

"All roads lead down from the summit,"
Oh, not for him who knows
Those mightier peaks ascending

Not for the climber spellbound
On twilight's purple crest,
When darkening golden ranges
Loom in the cloudy west!

He, with fierce wings aspiring
Where the last sunbeam dies
Soars bodiless to pathways
Where never an eagle flies.

And, in a passionate worship,
With a vision freshly born,
Perceives that from man's summits
All roads lead up and on!

That was Guy Hardy's text. God rest his soul.

PUBLICATION OF LIST OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have an unusual request to make.

I ask unanimous consent that whoever publishes the RECORD publish in the Appendix tonight a list of the committee members. That has always been done heretofore. We have been in session since the 3d of January. I looked through the RECORD last night and I could not find a list of the members of the various committees.

The SPEAKER. Permit the Chair to state that is a matter for the Joint Committee on Printing. The Chair will consult the chairman of that committee.

Mr. RANKIN. And if the Speaker will ask their unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD, I am sure the Members will be grateful.

SPECIAL ORDER TRANSFERRED

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for today. I ask unanimous consent that that be transferred until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE JUDGE GRAFTON GREEN

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week a great judge and a beloved citizen of Tennessee was called to the high bar of justice when Judge Grafton Green of the Supreme Court of Tennessee quietly passed away in Nashville. Judge Grafton Green was 74 years old, and had served as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee from 1923—24 years. He was elected membership on Tennessee's highest court in 1910, and had served continuously since that date—a period of judiciary service, more than 36 years.

Judge Green was a native of Lebanon, Wilson County, which is in my district, where he maintained his home. He was the illustrious son of an illustrious father. His father, Judge Nathan Green, was for many years professor of law at Tennessee's famed and historic law school, Cumberland University at Lebanon. His grandfather was Judge Nathan Green, who was also a member of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, where he served for 21 years. Judge Grafton Green and his father and grandfather have made a great and lasting contribution toward forming the laws of Tennessee, perhaps more than any other family our State has produced. Judge Green's opinions and decisions are recorded in more than 60 volumes of decisions of the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Judge Green, in addition to being a great and wise liberal judge and humanitarian, was also a popular and much-loved citizen of our State, not only among the members of the bench and bar, but also a host of other friends and acquaintances. Tennessee has lost a truly great and honored son in the passing of its beloved chief justice, Judge Grafton Green. His passing is mourned in Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

WAR-EXCISE-TAX RATES

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 70.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war-excise-tax rates, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, of that time I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a moment.

A few days ago the Committee on Ways and Means, by unanimous vote, reported to the House a bill relating to wartime excess-tax rates. A request was made to the Committee on Rules that the measure be expedited to the consideration of the House itself. By unanimous vote of the Committee on Rules, this rule, which has just been read by the Clerk, is proposed for the consideration of the membership.

The reading of the rule, as you have already heard it, explains the situation pretty completely. Briefly, this rule might be termed a closed rule, and I might say in that connection it has been the custom of the House for many years, regardless of the political party in power, that tax measures of this sort should be considered under a so-called closed rule.

The Committee on Ways and Means believes this measure should receive prompt consideration at the hands of the Congress, and the members of the Committee on Rules join in that belief.

As you have noted, the rule provides for 3 hours of general debate, half to be under control of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the other half under the control of the ranking minority member of that committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman from New York that I have seen a great many of such bills brought in and passed under suspension of the rules, but I do not believe I ever saw one that also waived all points of order and at the same time confined amendments to members of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not argue the question with the gentleman from Mississippi, but my recollection runs to the contrary. This is not an unusual procedure. In any event, the situation that confronts the industries of the country demands action on this matter, and whatever it may be it should be prompt, because there are various industries in the country important in size and character which are for the moment left in a state of uncertainty as to what their future shall be. Doubtless many Members of the House have received communications to that effect.

I do not intend to address the House any further upon this subject. The rule is plain. I have yielded 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time and no disposition to consume any myself.

While I am on my feet I think I may properly make the observation, and pleasingly so, that in the resolution we find confirmation and approval of the record made by the minority, while it was in the majority, in the handling of matters of this kind. This is a closed rule, and it is the kind of rule that the Democrats when in power supported for the consideration of legislation of this type. It is the only manner, we believe, in which such legislation can be properly and efficiently handled.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Since amendments are denied to anyone except members of the committee and since points of order are waived, why the necessity for 3 hours of debate?

Mr. COX. The committee feels that it is of such importance that probably that much time is needed in order that the country may be informed by speeches made by interested parties.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, points of order as to the bill itself may be waived, but I seriously doubt if the House has a right to waive any point of order based on the Ramseyer rule, that is, that the provision of law amendment shall be published in the report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no opposition either to the rule or the bill itself. I therefore yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR] such time as he desires.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, we have before us for consideration House Resolution 70, which is a rule under which H. R. 1030 will be considered. H. R. 1030 is more commonly known as the luxury-tax bill. May I read to you a portion of what House Resolution 70 contains:

No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

This, Mr. Speaker, is what is known as the gag rule, and I have always opposed the gag-rule procedure. I have high regard for the great Committee on Ways and Means of Congress, but I believe my people sent me to this legislative body to consider each paragraph of every bill that comes before us, and not to be forced to follow the dictates of one individual or a small group of individuals. I firmly believe that every bill that comes before Congress should come before this body under an open rule, so that the membership will have an opportunity to amend such legislation. I believe each bill and every paragraph of each bill should be passed or defeated on its merits or demerits. To me the gag rule does not adhere to our principles of government.

I believe that H. R. 1030 should be discussed under an open rule and subject to amendments, because there are articles now taxed as luxuries that certainly do not come under that category but are really necessities.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons stated, I am opposing House Resolution 70 and will vote against it, because we should not be forced to vote "yes" or "no" on a measure without the opportunity to amend the various sections of that legislation.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, in order to keep the record straight and in answer to my very dear friend from Georgia, I wish it to be recorded that our approval of the continuation of these excise taxes is from necessity and not choice. The Republicans are sorry it is necessary to continue these high taxes, but we always have to do that because of the high debt that is always bequeathed to us by the Democratic Party.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the motion.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yielded back my time but I find I have one request for time. Will the gentleman yield the time back?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this body should give long thought and sound, calm deliberation as to how it shall vote on this proposed rule.

One of the major questions of the last campaign was that of taxation. The Republican Party in that campaign promised clearly and definitely to reduce all taxes. The people evidently had faith in the promises of the Republican Party, for they returned a Republican majority to both this and the other House. There is not a man nor a woman in this country whose pocketbook is not vitally affected by this bill which will come before us if this rule is approved. Yet, here we are with a bill given to us by the Republican-dominated Ways and Means Committee to which we are not allowed to make either amendments or deletions, despite the fact that it will take several billions of dollars out of the pockets of taxpayers of this country. The bill is being brought in under a closed rule which does not give the people's Representatives the opportunity they should have to discuss and revise this measure. Because some have taken a flip-flop and have forgotten their campaign promises in the last few days, I do not think that the entire House should be penalized. There should be an open rule. If we are going to do our duty to those whom we represent, let us vote this rule down.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, let me make just one statement. My reference to the approbation that we were here giving to the record with reference to what the minority did during the last session had reference to procedure and not to the substance of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise-tax rates, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1030, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, aside from the fact that this bill, H. R. 1030, bears my name, there is perhaps no reason why I should inflict myself on the membership at the outset of this debate, except perhaps for the fact that our chairman, being the able general that he is, has sent his shock troops out in front and has reserved the big guns to bring up the rear.

This bill is known as the excise-tax bill of 1947. It comes to you with the unanimous support of the Committee on Ways and Means. May I say that as a new member of that committee, just privileged to have been assigned thereto at the beginning of this Congress, I have been very deeply impressed with the attitude with which the members of that committee, both the majority and the minority, have approached the problems of our Nation's fiscal affairs. Many of them, as many of you, have problems very greatly affected by the bill that is now before us, but in each case those individual problems have been submerged to that greater interest, the country's good, as evidenced by the unanimity of the report with which this bill is brought to the floor.

This bill has the endorsement of the Treasury Department, and as you know, the President in his message to the Congress at the beginning of this session recommended the continuance of these war excise rates. The purpose of the bill H. R. 1030 is to continue without a definite termination date the war excise rates that were imposed by the Revenue Act of 1943, and that, at the present time, in view of the proclamation by the President that hostilities ended on December 31, 1946, are due to expire on June 30, 1947. Ever since it became known that these war rates were due to expire at the end of next June there has been considerable stagnation in the marketing of furs and jewelry and luggage and other items covered in this bill. It is imperative that this situation be remedied and it must be done promptly. The effect of the indefinite continuance of these war excise rates as proposed by this bill would be to increase the receipts from these excise taxes by $1,130,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. In addition, too, receipts for the fiscal year 1947 will be increased by $37,000,000 due to the effect on current consumption. In other words, it is thought by those in the Treasury Department who did the estimating that there will be some resumption of buying between now and the end of June. When this situation has been clarified, by doing away with the present termination date of June 30, they estimate that additional income to the Treasury for this fiscal year will be another $37,000,000. Receipts for the year 1949 will be increased by approximately $100,000,000, due to the lag of receipts behind liabilities. In other words, reports on these taxes are made at the end of each month and receipts for the last month of the coming fiscal year, the month of June 1948, will spill over into the fiscal year 1949. In the aggregate the net effect is to increase receipts for these 3 years approximately $1,267,000,000.

Section 2 of this bill would continue without a definite termination date again the war-tax rates on admissions, cabarets, membership fees or dues, jewelry, furs, toilet preparations, distilled spirits, wine, beer, billiard and pool tables, bowling alleys, and electric-light bulbs.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand, this bill just continues the excise taxes indefinitely?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. That is right, without termination date.

It also includes telephone and telegraph service, transportation of persons, and transportation of property.

The war-tax rates and the previous rates are all set forth in detail in section 1650 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Section 3 in similar fashion continues the retailers' excise tax of 20 percent on luggage, brief cases, toilet cases, purses, billfolds, and so on—imposed by section 1651 of the Internal Revenue Code and by virtue of section 1654 made dependent on termination of hostilities—which otherwise would be replaced after June 30, 1947, by the former manufacturers' excise tax of 10 percent on luggage and toilet cases. This section 3 also eliminates the definition of the term "date of termination of hostilities in the present war," which no longer would have any application to the war excise-tax rates.

Section 4 is the technical amendment made necessary to retain in the Internal Revenue Code the present provisions for the mechanics for making floor stocks refunds of war-tax rates on distilled spirits, wines, and beer, and electric-light bulbs held by retailers and wholesalers, if and when such war rates on these items are repealed. Also retained is the technical provision for reduction of the war-tax rates on communications on a bill-rendered basis, if and when such rates are eliminated.

Section 5 is another technical amendment made necessary in connection with the indefinite continuance of the war-tax rates on billiard and pool tables and bowling alleys.

Section 6 is a technical amendment which would continue indefinitely the present rate of draw-back on distilled spirits used in the manufacture of certain nonbeverage products, mainly medicinal, at the rate of $6 a gallon, which is necessary in view of the continuance of the war-tax rates on distilled spirits, upon which such $6 draw-back is based.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield to my colleague from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to compliment the gentleman on the clear statement he is making regarding this measure. There is one question I should like to ask. Upon what theory is an electric-light bulb or a telephone classed as a luxury rather than a necessity?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I think the gentleman has stated a very fair question. The same question could be put as regards communications, such as Western Union telegrams and local and long-distance telephone service. May I point out to the gentleman, however, that a number of our wartime excise rates were written into the Revenue Act of 1941. Others were written into the Revenue Act of 1942. Those tax rates are on the books without any termination date. Others were written into the Revenue Act of 1943 with a termination date of 6 months after the end of hostilities. It is the desire of the committee by this legislation to place those items covered by the Revenue Act of 1943 in the same category as those items which are still taxed under the Revenue Acts of 1941 and 1942, there to remain until such time as this Congress can apply itself to the overall problem of excise taxes and correct such inequities as certainly do exist.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, as I understand it, this extension merely incorporates those which are embraced in the original act of 1943?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. That is right. It puts them in the same category as are all the other items on which excise taxes are today paid.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I, too, wish to congratulate the gentleman on the very fine statement he is making with respect to this legislation, and I congratulate him particularly on the fact that he is presenting the legislation, being one of the very new members of the Committee on Ways and Means. However, I wish the gentleman would make this point crystal clear. I can well understand the impropriety of fixing a definite termination date of these so-called luxury taxes. At the same time, it is my understanding and the understanding of the members of the Committee on Rules who voted to support the rule and who will vote to support this legislation that because the date is left undetermined it does not mean that the Committee on Ways and Means will not quickly make a reappraisal of the whole luxury-tax situation. As has been ably pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] and others, there are many things in this bill that some of us do not think should be too long delayed in the matter of reappraisal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. RIZLEY. We hope the fact that we are supporting this legislation today, which was recommended by the President, the Treasury Department, and everyone concerned, does not mean that the committee will not hurriedly, expeditiously, and quickly reappraise this whole luxury-tax situation.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I am sure that the Ways and Means Committee will give the gentleman's suggestion the very earliest possible attention.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Indiana has already referred to the total amount of revenue by which the Treasury will benefit as a result of this legislation. I notice in the report on the bill that following the total of $1,267,000,000 there is carried this sentence:

> This does not include the increase in postal receipts that would result from restoration of postal rates affected by the President's proclamation which would amount to an additional $65,000,000.

May I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether or not any of the provisions of this bill, by direct reference or in any other way, affect the postal rates or restore those rates?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. No; the provisions of this bill have no application whatsoever to the matter of postal rates. That is a different proposition and the gentleman understands, I am sure, that there is not the urgency on the question of postal rates that there is concerning the extension of these excise rates. For that reason, it was deemed necessary and advisable to deal with that separately. Postal rates are not included and are not in any way concerned in this legislation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I simply thought we ought to have that point made clear so that it would be understood that additional legislation would then be necessary to protect that $65,000,000 in revenue.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. The gentleman is correct.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I would like to know: What is the purpose of indefinitely extending the excise-tax rates?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I can answer the gentleman very quickly. If we fix another definite termination date, be it 90 days or 9 years, we are only fixing another dead line against which people can sit and wait before making their purchases until the tax is removed. That is the very situation we want to avoid.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If I understand the temper of the people, as expressed in the last election, they are expecting some relief from high taxes. If we wrote this bill and put on the time limitation and extended it as a war measure, I cannot understand why we could not do the same thing in peacetime. My point is that I do not believe the people will feel very good about the situation when they learn that the very first measure we are passing relating to taxes is the reenactment of a tax measure for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will join me in supporting this bill, because when this proposed legislation is on the books we are going to be doubly sure that we are going to be able to give the country that tax relief and make those payments on the debt about which the gentleman is so rightfully concerned.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. What the gentleman has in mind, from the point of view of the gentleman from Indiana, is that the extension of these wartime excise taxes is permanent. Does not indefinitely mean permanently?

Mr. KNUTSON. No, no.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; that is what it means from the gentleman's point of view.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana so that he may enlighten the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, enlightenment is always very difficult to get from the gentleman from Minnesota. Indefinite means permanent, does it not?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Indefinite in this case means until such time as the Congress gets around to the matter of surveying the whole hodgepodge of tax legislation we inherited from the New Deal.

Mr. McCORMACK. When this bill passes, it will be making these temporary taxes permanent; is that not correct?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. It is making the terminating date indefinite.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is no use arguing with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] because he is determined to be wrong and he is making a good job of it. I would like to read, if I may, from the President's budget message:

> I have recommended that the war-excise-tax rates due to expire July 1, 1947, be continued.

The gentleman from Massachusetts will see that we on the Republican side are giving the Commander in Chief better support than he is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why does not the gentleman read the rest of it?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will read it:

> When the time comes for excise-tax revision, the Congress should review the entire group of excise taxes, rather than concentrate attention on those that were imposed or increased during the war.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman has not read all of it; because, what the President said——

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not have time to read all of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. One of the recommendations is that Congress take early action to continue throughout the next fiscal year the war-excise-tax rates.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. If we were to do that which the President recommends, and fix another dead line on June 30, 1948, we would be only establishing for ourselves another headache, having people sit around waiting for that day, 17 months hence, before they would buy their fur coats and other luxury items affected by this resolution.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MASON. I just wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] to the fact that he had better consult Noah Webster's dictionary on what the word "indefinite" means. He will find that it does not mean "permanent."

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does the gentleman realize that some of the members of his committee, when they intimated they would wipe out the excise taxes, ruined and killed the markets of many businessmen?

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to proceed.

As I have said before, the amount involved is $1,130,000,000. Slightly more than half of the amount of revenue comes from the sale of beer, wine, and liquor, including imported perfumes containing distilled spirits.

At this point I include a table prepared by the Treasury Department showing the present rates of these taxes, also the new rates that would become effective July 1, 1947, by the President's proclamation, and in the absence of the passage of H. R. 1030:

The above loss in revenue is figured as the actual loss for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948.
Because of some lag in collections, this does not reflect the entire loss on account of the proclamation.
It is also believed that some additional loss will be incurred for the fiscal year 1947 due to purchases being held up prior to July 1, 1947.
The amount of additional loss is roughly estimated at around $170,000,000.

There is a great deal of argument going around as to whether debt reduction or tax relief should take precedence, and as to what form and in what amount any tax relief should be. But whichever theory you adhere to, I believe you can all support, with me, the pending resolution.

Our legislative budget committee is presently meeting to fix a ceiling for our legislative budget. That committee holds the key to the whole question of debt reduction and tax relief. The country expects real economy and not mere lip service in our Federal expenditures. The country expects and the country must have a balanced budget; substantial payments on the national debt, and tax relief as well. If our individuals are to have tax relief, and the country is to have a balanced budget, together with a substantial payment on our national debt, then there seems no other alternative except to continue these present war-excise taxes on so-called luxury items in effect, at least until such time as the Congress has an opportunity to consider the whole budget picture.

I hope you will support this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT] has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill under consideration by the committee provides for the indefinite maintenance of the wartime excise taxes which were superimposed upon an already burdened list of select items. There was never any justification, to my mind, in singling out an item here and another there for discriminatory taxing purposes, but there was even less excuse for the additional "superduper" sales taxes which were levied upon these same items as a war emergency revenue measure.

I have always opposed the imposition of excises upon goods or services, and I am now opposed to the principle involved. In committee I waged combat relentlessly against imposts of this kind, and when I could not prevent the levy, I then sought to limit the amount or aimed to designate the level or the source at which the tax was to be collected, whichever was lower. Success crowned my efforts with regard to the imposition on automobiles, tires, and accessories in that they were held to 7 percent. My motion to block additional cigarette taxes and to prevent the nuisance bank-check tax prevailed, but all in all the limited sales-tax list has grown to produce a swollen and disproportionate amount of revenue which is exacted from certain industries in addition to the income tax. This practice or policy is as unfair as it is unwarranted, if it is intended to be indefinitely continued.

There is neither rhyme nor reason for the continued tax upon the products of the automobile industry. The automobile in the life of the average American citizen is indispensable. America lives and advances upon wheels. To tax the product of this industry which has been the bellwether of our peerless industrial prosperity is to paralyze profits and progress. Many items taxed as luxuries are in fact essentials to the consumer. Some have been singled out for punitive reasons, I suspect; and if we do not fulfill our promise to the American people as contained in the report at the time of adoption to the effect that these super-sales taxes would be terminated 6 months after cessation of hostilities, we will break faith with the taxpayers and the industries which will suffer in the coming normally competitive market. Do not tax the product lest you retard production; tax the profits. No profit, no tax, is the only sound basis for taxation.

The responsibility for these taxes is not mine. In his message, the President recommended a year's extension. In 1943 I initiated the move to terminate the nuisance 6 months after the war and had that assurance put into the report. Following this, the committee and the House acted favorably upon my move to fulfill the pledge when the last tax bill was presented in the Seventy-ninth session; but in spite of my views in conference, excepting the repeal of auto-use tax, it was bartered away for the full and immediate repeal of excess-profits tax, favoring corporations.

The fur industry, including trapper, cutter, and merchant, seems to me, could better stand the uncertainty of 6 months than the harassment of permanent tax discrimination. The workingman's dream of a 5-cent glass of beer can never be realized under the present excise-tax schedule. The tax on beer must be reduced real soon. The user of cosmetics, the patron of the night club, and the bowler or billiard player is not going to supinely submit to mistreatment without recourse—and the responsibility is yours of the Republican majority. You have grown to maturity. It was one thing to snipe at the Democrats all these years, to shoot from cover, hit and run, and disavow any responsibility, placing the blame upon the Democrats; but you cannot get away with that now. From this day on you are at fault for the maintenance of the discriminatory "superduper" select sales taxes until they are repealed; and if you calculate that I am going along with you upon the premise that the excises will pave the way for your frosty sham of a horizontal income-tax cut of 20 percent, you are mistaken.

Frankly, I believe that there should be no tax cut for 1947; that all surplus revenues following a balanced budget should be applied to the reduction of the public debt, and thus to bolster the Nation's credit. Your reckless Republican campaign pledges, used as election bait, cannot be fulfilled without dire consequences to millions of small American investors who hold billions of dollars in Government bonds. You need only to harken back to March of 1933 to recall that the Treasury of the United States was an empty cavern and that postal savings could not have been redeemed if the public made a concerted demand.

The press quoted Chairman KNUTSON as saying that retention of excises makes easy the proposed 20-percent horizontal income-tax cut. So that is the plan to penalize the consumer for the high-bracket income-tax payer. I want to serve notice now that when the time comes for tax relief I will insist upon the raising of exemptions for dependents from $500 to $1,000 and the increase of exemptions for married couples from $1,000 to $2,000. If the budget is trimmed with sanity and safety to our Government services and armed forces so that neither will be impaired and the savings justify further relief, I will insist upon following the established precedent of the Democrats in the last tax bill of 1945 by striking off the tax rolls with one stroke several million more of the small taxpayers at the bottom of the column, for they are the least able to carry the burden.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. I would like to remind the gentleman that I made those recommendations a year ago, and so did a good many other Republicans.

Mr. DINGELL. I made the recommendation in the report filed in 1943, I may say to the gentleman and, further, since the gentleman raises the question, I will say that I made the motion in committee in connection with the tax bill of 1945 which passed here in the House and, as I state in my remarks, that action of the House was bartered away in conference for the excess-profits-tax repeal.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. I am wondering if our good friend from Pennsylvania is now assuring us that when the Democrats make the proposal just referred to by the gentleman from Michigan we can count on his vote, or has he changed his mind?

Mr. DINGELL. I am not prepared to answer for the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Despite what my good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] said to the contrary in an effort to put a different construction on the word "indefinite" from a legislative angle the fact remains that the bill now before the House calls for the fixing of these wartime excise taxes permanently. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. DINGELL. I take it to be that.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, the only way they can be repealed or reduced is by affirmative action on the part of the Congress?

Mr. DINGELL. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any legislation passed by the Congress without termination date is what we call permanent legislation?

Mr. DINGELL. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Despite all of the efforts of my dear friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], to camouflage to the contrary, the fact is that "indefinite" and "permanent" in the sense of legislation are synonymous and the same?

Mr. DINGELL. Identical, and we so discussed and understood that in committee. They were made permanent so it was said in order to give assurance to business.

Mr. McCORMACK. Furthermore, is it not the gentleman's experience on the Ways and Means Committee—it certainly was mine in 10 years' experience on that committee—that when a bill comes up in reference to the lowering of taxes, excise taxes are considered last?

Mr. DINGELL. That is true. There is no question at all about it, and that is the reason I insisted that we stipulate in the report at the time that the "superduper" select sales taxes imposed upon industry and its products stood repealed 6 months after the termination of the war or by the act of Congress. That is, by proclamation of the President or by action of the Congress.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact my good friend from Massachusetts insists upon his definition of what the word "indefinite" means from a legislative standpoint, he cannot change the authorities on the meaning of words that have existed for years and "indefinite" never has meant "permanent."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman six additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am amazed that the gentleman from Illinois would make that statement. Any time we pass a law without a termination date it is permanent legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any law without a termination date could be charged to be indefinite, but from a legislative angle it is permanent for all time unless Congress repeals such a law.

Mr. DINGELL. By specific action.

Mr. McCORMACK. By affirmative action on the part of the Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. The definition of words in Webster's dictionary is one thing, but the definition of words as understood legislatively is something else, and it is something else we are considering now. It is the legislative meaning we are concerned with here.

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with the gentleman from Arizona. Thus far in the debate there has not been a shred of evidence to point to the arguments of the majority as to what "indefinite" means or that it is only temporary. I assume that permanency is intended by the action of the committee and as prescribed by the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe the gentleman made the statement that in 1933, if the holders of postal savings would have demanded full payment, that that demand could not have been met; is that correct?

Mr. DINGELL. I believe that was quite generally conceded at the time. When we Democrats came in I think it was necessary on March 5th or 6th to meet a certain amount of maturing obligations in interest of about—well, I hesitate to say the amount of the interest, but it was in the millions of dollars, and we did not even have millions of cents which the Republicans at that time would pass over to us for the Treasury. It was, as I remember, empty.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does the gentleman not think that the Federal Government still had some borrowing power?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; it had borrowing power and that is what had to be done. The President courageously closed all banks. We took stock and put the country on a firm financial basis where it is today.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where what is today?

Mr. DINGELL. Well, your bonds are worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. KNUTSON. Fifty-five-cent dollars.

Mr. DINGELL. Your bonds are worth 100 cents on the dollar, and all your other obligations, including some of the outstanding old Liberties, are a way high, and when the Republicans yielded control to the Democrats in 1932, I believe that the 4-percent Liberties were selling anywhere from ten to twelve dollars under par, and the Wall Streeters were taking them up out of the hands of the poor.

Mr. KNUTSON. When was that?

Mr. DINGELL. That was while the Republicans were in power. The Liberties are now back to full face value and above par.

Mr. KNUTSON. Woodrow Wilson was President when the Liberties went to 82.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; and that is when the Republicans rigged the market and bought the bonds that the poor man had to let go.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, that is what always happens when the Democrats are in power.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan that I expect to vote for this bill, but since you have given the Committee on Ways and Means the right to offer amendments and denied that right to the rest of us, I certainly hope that there will be a softening of the heart so far as light bulbs are concerned. I hate to see them perpetuate this tax when we are striving every way possible to put electric lights in every farm home in America. That amendment certainly would be adopted, if offered by the committee.

Mr. DINGELL. I know the gentleman's leanings and actions in regard to the user of electric power, and I am in entire sympathy with him. But I want to say to my friend from Mississippi that what we will have to do is to strike off these "superduper" taxes all at one and the same time, because if we do not, I will say to my friend, some of the fur trappers down in his State and Louisiana and elsewhere will be handicapped with this tax forever. You cannot take these items out one at a time. The impression of the American public was that they would be terminated 6 months after the war by either proclamation of the President or by action of the Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am just a little surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, who served for so many years on the Committee on Ways and Means, should have raised the red herring about the question of indefiniteness or permanence as to this legislation.

Certainly his experience should have informed the gentleman of the fact that when you put a definite termination date on taxes of this character you get a buyers strike for some period in advance of the expiration of the tax. As I understand it, the purpose of the Committee on Ways and Means here is to leave the thing open so that the committee may have an opportunity to consider what should be changed, and if and when, and not tip off their hand to some speculators or others in advance of the termination.

Mr. DINGELL. In the meantime, it is permanent until we take affirmative action.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The purpose of the gentleman from Massachusetts was to show that the Republicans had got themselves into a trap and are trying to alibi themselves out of the trap by saying that "indefinite" means something other than "permanent" from a legislative angle.

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, all the Republicans are trying to do here is get out of the mess that was created by the President's termination of hostilities without making any provision for the strike situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, it is to be regretted that the minority has seen fit to drag politics into such an important discussion. We do not come here asking for an extension of these excise taxes with any degree of satisfaction. We are here by necessity. Of course, when the President of the United States submits a budget calling for $37,500,000,000, which is five times as high as any peace budget in all the history of the Republic, we must retain some taxes that we would under ordinary circumstances repeal. These excise taxes are not our children. They were put on while you folks were in control, and they were necessitated by the war that Roosevelt again and again and again said would never happen. We regret exceedingly that it is necessary to extend these excise taxes indefinitely. But let me assure my good friend from Massachusetts, who loves to have his head in the clouds when it suits his purpose, and he is very adroit——

Mr. DINGELL. That is better than in the sand.

Mr. KNUTSON. If he were not so tall he would have his head in the sand.

Mr. DINGELL. He would have to bend over, though.

Mr. RANKIN. Go ahead, points of order are waived.

Mr. KNUTSON. I repeat, it does not give us any satisfaction to ask for the extension of these excise taxes, but I say again to my good friend from Massachusetts that "indefinite" does not mean "permanent." We will go over the whole excise-tax list before long and see if we cannot give relief where needed. The gentleman from Massachusetts was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means when many of these taxes were imposed. They are all New Deal children, you know, all of them.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I do not see any occasion for getting too excited about this one bill. We have 17 tax bills that were put on the records by the New Deal, and, of course, we want to take them off, but we cannot take them all off at once if we are going to pay anything on the debt.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think what bothers the minority whip is that we are proceeding so expeditiously to carry out the promises we made to the people last fall.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not interested in shadow boxing about the words "permanent" or "indefinite," but I wonder if the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota, would support an amendment to eliminate electric light bulbs from the provisions of this bill. I think that ought to be done. They are not luxuries; they are necessities.

Mr. KNUTSON. I grant the gentleman that, but this is only one of many, many taxes that were foisted on the people during the New Deal regime, and we did not have time to correct all the inequities that were inflicted by our predecessors.

Mr. RANKIN. That could be done very easily, though.

Mr. KNUTSON. Therefore we asked for a closed rule which would bar any amendments except those offered by the committee.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would suggest to my very good friend that he take it up with the Senate Finance Committee. This bill will go over to the Senate and he can have it amended there. Of course, we are following the good old Democratic policy of bringing the bill to the floor under a gag rule.

Mr. RANKIN. I just thought the gentleman from Minnesota might be willing to go along with us and eliminate that item here in the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would be glad to, but if we open up this Pandora's Box on the floor of the House we may not know where we will stop.

Mr. RANKIN. But only committee amendments can be offered.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes, I understand that.

Mr. RANKIN. I think a majority of the committee would go with you and support such an amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman must not forget that there are 25 members on the committee and each one might wish to offer a different amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Minnesota made a statement at the close of his remarks which might have left the impression that any member of the Committee on Ways and Means could offer an amendment. Is that correct or can only committee amendments be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will read the rule I think he will find that those amendments are offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANKIN. And not by an individual member?

Mr. KNUTSON. No.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, for the last several months the country has seen fumbling and stumbling over a tax program the like of which we have never previously witnessed. Each day has brought some new statement from the leaders of the majority party to the effect that taxes would be reduced. The Republicans made this promise before election day and time after time reiterated it after election day. And yet, what do we find today—when the majority party has the opportunity to do something in the way of a reduction of taxes? We find not only are they retaining the taxes which were to expire on June 30, 1947, but they now desire to go even further and make those taxes permanent. This bill, H. R. 1030, goes far beyond what the President urged when he asked that the war excise taxes be extended for another year. He did not ask that they be made permanent.

He said, and I quote:

> One of these recommendations is that the Congress take early action to continue throughout the next fiscal year the war excise rates which under the present law will expire on June 30, 1947.

These taxes were imposed with the distinct understanding that they would terminate 6 months after the termination of hostilities. It is useless for the Republicans to say that they are continuing these taxes at the behest of President Truman. They seek to maintain an outward show of respectability by that statement. They intend to keep these taxes as permanent levies.

The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee realize that there are some war excise taxes that might well be carried over for another year, in view of the stupendous effort being made by President Truman to balance the budget. We realize also, however, that there are some war excise taxes that could properly be scaled down. However, the majority party cuts the pattern and we of the minority must, albeit unwillingly, accept the tax bill with the terms and conditions laid down by the Republicans in the Congress, without amendment, or we must vote against any extension of all war excise taxes without exception and thus deprive the Government of much-needed revenue. We would then be blamed by the Republicans for failing to balance the budget and for failing to reduce the national debt.

How can the position of the Republican Party today be reconciled with the position it took when in the minority? In 1945 the House of Representatives set June 30, 1946, as the termination date of war excise taxes. When the bill went to conference the termination date of June 30, 1946, was stricken from the bill and the termination date was placed as of 6 months after the termination of hostilities. That was on October 30, 1945. On January 18, 1946, the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee introduced H. R. 5174, which had for its purpose to terminate wartime excise tax rates as of June 30, 1946.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the date of that bill?

Mr. LYNCH. The date of your bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. LYNCH. The date of the bill is January 18, 1946, just 3 months after you, as a member of the conference committee, voted to strike it out, and brought back a conference report where, instead of June 30, 1946, you said "6 months after final termination of hostilities."

Mr. KNUTSON. That bill was introduced 8 months before the President brought the all-time-high peace budget to Congress.

Mr. LYNCH. I do not care when the President brought the budget. I am talking about when the gentleman from Minnesota introduced a bill, under date of January 6, 1946, to terminate excise taxes on the 30th of June of that year. That was when the Republicans were in the minority. Now when the Republicans are in the majority and despite their constant reiteration that they would reduce taxes, we see them come back with a bill that not only eliminates the termination date, but fixes these excise taxes as permanent levies. In H. R. 5174, introduced by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, when he was ranking minority member in January 1946, there is the provision that the war excise tax on furs should be reduced from 20 percent to 10 percent. On January 3 of this year I introduced H. R. 109, which provides for the reduction of the wartime excise tax from 20 percent to 10 percent on furs costing only up to $1,000, for the reason that, in my opinion, and I think the opinion is well justified, furs up to that amount are in reality necessities. Up in the north country a fur coat on a woman is almost an absolute necessity. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, when he was ranking minority member, introduced the bill to eliminate war excise taxes on furs completely, but now when he is chairman of the committee, when his party is in power and when he has the opportunity of removing the war excise tax on furs, the Republicans come in with a bill that freezes the tax as a permanent levy.

What kind of a tax program is the majority party going to give to the people of this country if when they were not in power they introduced bills which would eliminate war excise taxes and when they are in power, they not only refuse to introduce those bills, but they go even further—they fasten the tax as a permanent levy. The people of the United States must recognize that under this bill, war excise taxes are made permanent levies. I have received dozens of letters from fur manufacturers and retailers in and around New York City who have requested that the war excise tax on furs be immediately removed, for the reason that the consuming public, anticipating that these taxes will be removed by the end of June of this year, are now refusing to buy furs or fur-trimmed garments. I desire to warn these fur manufacturers and retailers and the consuming public that under this bill they are going to have war excise taxes on furs as a permanent diet. The same goes for other items, such as cosmetics, jewelry, luggage, liquor, and the like. The Republicans are fastening a permanent tax upon them by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true in the sense in which the gentleman speaks that all tax rates are permanent?

Mr. LYNCH. It is not true in the sense I speak that all tax rates are permanent. The bill which is now being amended provided a definite time of termination of these excise taxes and that definite time was 6 months after the termination of hostilities. The bill before us today provides no set time of termination, but, as a matter of fact, continues on and on and on, and will in all likelihood continue on and on until the Democrats get back into power in this House.

Mr. KNUTSON. That will be a long, long time.

Mr. LYNCH. Then we will bring the excise taxes back to the 1942 level. I hope that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further briefly?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield for another question.

Mr. CURTIS. Undoubtedly it is true that the income tax on individuals and corporations, and most of our taxes, are fixed and there is no date upon which they expire; but we cannot bind this Congress at a later date this session or next session, we cannot bind future Congresses. It is just folly to suggest that this tax cannot be changed at a later date. It is not permanent.

Mr. LYNCH. I wonder if the gentleman thinks that if under the present tax law nothing were done with respect to the income tax by this present Congress those taxes would continue or cease? There is no question but what those taxes would continue until the House and the Senate pass a bill which either repealed the act or amended it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the gentleman favor the reduction of excise taxes on jewelry and furs effective 6 months in the future? Or does he think that when it is repealed or altered it should be made effective at once?

Mr. LYNCH. I feel very badly that the gentleman from Nebraska, a member of my committee, has not read H. R. 109 which provides that there shall be a graduated reduction. Instead of eliminating the fur tax completely I think what should be done should be to eliminate the tax up to a certain ceiling cost or price; the same with jewelry, and the same with cosmetics.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is very interesting to me, I may say to the gentleman from New York, to witness the efforts of some of our Republican friends to say that legislation which has no termination date is not permanent within the meaning of legislative intent. This is the first time in 18 years I have ever heard that argument advanced; and it is rather amusing to see our friends, the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, trying to draw a line of distinction now when everybody knows that from a legislative angle when a bill passes without termination date it is permanent legislation.

Mr. LYNCH. Now let us see what the result would be if my bill H. R. 109 had been accepted by the committee. It is estimated that with the present excise taxes on furs the yield to the Government for the fiscal year of 1947 will be $99,000,000, so that, in reality, if my bill to remove the war excise tax on furs costing up to $1,000 had been accepted, it would have meant a decrease in revenue to the Government of approximately $37,000,000 and I have no doubt that the $37,000,000 would be readily recouped in the increased business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, the same argument may be offered with respect to such items as jewelry, cosmetics, and luggage, if the war excise tax were removed on these items up to a certain ceiling price. This would have been fair to the consumer and, likewise, would have been fair to the manufacturer, but under the Republican plan one of two things is intended to be done—either that from now on out these taxes are going to be permanent fixtures, or else the Republicans are trying to hide from the consumer the possibility that these taxes might hereafter be removed, so that up to the very last minute the unwary consumer will continue making purchases and paying the tax, so that the business of the manufacturer will not be hurt and the little person—the consumer—will be left holding the bag. The plain and simple fact is that what the Republicans promised before election and, yes, even what they promised since the convening of the Eightieth Congress, they now fail to fulfill.

On October 21, 1946, the following article appeared under a Washington date line in the Christian Science Monitor:

> A statement signed by all Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee sets the GOP fiscal goal in the next Congress as a budget trimmed to between $32,000,000,000 and $33,000,000,000, a $5,000,000,000 reduction in the national debt, a reduction in personal income taxes of 20 percent, and "downward adjustments in Federal excise taxes."

That statement, according to the Christian Science Monitor, was the work of 27 Republican Members of the House, including all Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. That was before election.

That explains why for the first time since I have been in Congress the tax bill has not been introduced by the chairman of the committee, and that explains why for the first time a new member of the committee steps out on the floor and says that the new members of the committee are the shock troops and that the big guns will bring up the rear, but the big guns did not have the nerve to come out on the floor and introduce the bill themselves because of this statement made on October 21, 1946.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. Will not the gentleman from New York agree with me that the Republicans who made that statement the gentleman has just quoted, find themselves in the position of the man who has a mouthful of hot potatoes and does not know whether to swallow them or spit them out?

Mr. LYNCH. I would not say that the Republicans had a mouthful of hot potatoes, but I say they are on a hot spot in any event.

On November 7, 1946, 2 days after the election, the following appeared under a Washington date line in the Chicago Daily Tribune, and I call your attention to the fact that the returns had not yet been in because it is shown on the back of this paper that the returns are still coming in in Illinois. Just look at the headline: "Tax cut first GOP move." Then there is the subheadline "KNUTSON asks early action on 20 percent slash. Urges excise levy reduction too." And so there cannot be any mistake as to who it is that made the statement, they print Mr. KNUTSON'S picture in the paper along with the statement.

Now, what does this statement say? Let me read only a part of it. We want to know what the gentleman from Minnesota said only 2 days after election.

> Moreover, KNUTSON said, his committee will open public hearings in February on another bill to save the taxpayers money. Its purpose will be to cut back luxury excise taxes to 1942 levels. It will reduce, and in some cases eliminate, excises on a long list of items that includes jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and liquors. The reductions are to be effective next July 1.

That was 2 days after the election.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LYNCH. There are the statements of the Republicans both before and after election and the so-called fulfillment of their promise to reduce war excise taxes is found in this bill H. R. 1030, which fastens these levies permanently on the very things on which it was promised there would be a tax reduction. If that is the Republican program with respect to excise taxes, then the public can prepare itself for a similar policy on income taxes, because again promises were made, and already excuses for the nonfulfillment of those promises are being made. No longer are the Republicans boasting about their proposed 20-percent cut across the board, and I might say that on January 6 I introduced H. R. 480, a bill which provided, not for a 20 percent cut across the board for income taxes, but rather an increase of exemptions from $500 to $1,000 for single persons and from $1,000 to $2,000 for husband and wife filing a joint return. I hope that more consideration will be given my bill proposing increased exemptions than was given my bill proposing a reduction of the war excise taxes on furs costing up to $1,000.

The alibi is being prepared by the Republicans for their failure to reduce taxes by placing the blame on labor because of labor's demand for portal-to-portal pay. Labor is to be the scapegoat; let labor remember, and let the consuming public remember that the promises made by the Republicans to reduce the excise taxes, the promises whereby they garnered thousands upon thousands of votes, are not being fulfilled.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a historic occasion. The Republicans are being castigated and chastised for following the recommendation of the President that these taxes be continued, which indicates to me that you are getting ready to heave overboard a political Jonah. I deny that these taxes are being made permanent unless it be true that they will not be repealed until the Democrats again get control of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

THE AMTORG INDUSTRIAL SURVEY BY THE U. S. S. R.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, yesterday's morning Times-Herald carried an amazing story with the headline "Manual for bombing and sabotaging United States published by Russians. Data for huge volume gathered while we forged weapons to defend Soviet," with a byline credited to Walter Trohan.

Mr. Chairman, since that story appeared in the Tuesday morning paper, our House Committee on Un-American Activities has been besieged with calls and visitors inquiring as to the background of that story and as to what information, if any, we have on the subject. Since this is the first meeting of the House since the story broke in the newspapers yesterday, I have taken this time this afternoon to share with the Members of the House the background of the information, which our committee has on this very amazing situation.

I have, as a matter of fact, the book here today about which this article is written, so there is no question about the fact that the book exists. This book is written in Russian, but we have had it under the process of translation for some time by Dr. Yacobsen of the Library of Congress, who is able to translate from Russian into English. Unbeknown to us, as we were making our investigation, and as our translations were being made, this story broke in the newspapers, due to the energy and astuteness of Mr. Trohan, who by the way did not get his information from our committee either directly or indirectly. However, since it is now a matter of public knowledge, we feel we have an obligation to share with you and the country the information we have and to quote to you certain passages direct from this book.

I am taking this time now because we have promised to deliver this book this evening to Navy Intelligence, which has been after it, as they are going to photostat and use it for their purposes. Consequently, after today it will no longer be in the hands of our committee.

The book with which Mr. Trohan's story deals is called—I cannot pronounce its Russian title—in the English translation "American Construction." It was published in 1946 by Amtorg Trading Corp., an official agency of the Russian Government. The article in the Times-Herald refers to this as a "target manual" or a "saboteur's guidebook" to the United States. I do not know whether it is or not because I have never seen the requirements for such a utilitarian compilation. I will let you draw your own conclusions as we proceed with what is in the book.

I may say the book is divided into five parts. The first part deals with the industrial construction and transportation system of the United States. The second part deals with housing and public construction, the third part with sanitation, the fourth part with the mechanization and organization of our major buildings, and the fifth with the output of the building supplies made here in the United States. It was prepared by the engineers of the People's Commissariat of Building Industry, who visited the United States officially in connection with the work of the Soviet Purchasing Commission.

I want to emphasize at this point that there is nothing illegal about this book. There is no criticism of Russia to be attached to its publication on that point. These men were simply taking advantage of a situation we made available to them. In my opinion, it is a case of carrying good neighborliness to its illogical extreme. I am not criticizing the Russians for taking advantage of a situation which, as I shall proceed to show, was officially made available to them and which respectable and responsible Americans helped them to utilize most expertly.

I want to quote now directly from some of the pages and paragraphs of this book. On page 15 of the book is pictured the Norris Dam in Tennessee illustrating the use of cheap power and the transportation of energy in this country. On the adjoining page are shown other dams and major power plants of this country, showing their establishment, showing airplane views of them, and describing them in complete detail.

On page 19 of the book is a picture of the Pratt-Whitney Co. at West Hartford, Conn., and in translation some of the details of the airplane engines produced there and where it is located.

On page 18 of the book are some very interesting engineers' sketches, with all the data included in Russian, of the metallurgical plant at Geneva, Utah, showing the general plan of the factory. The text contains an analysis of the plant and deals with the blast furnaces, and shows its strategic location.

In the next picture, No. 18, we are told by our translator, Dr. Yacobsen, of the Library of Congress, about the Kaiser plant in Fontana, Calif., with the general plant description, the description of the blast furnaces, the connecting railroads, and the general output capacity. So it goes on through a series of other major industries of this country. I can read off just a few of them to you without stopping to show you more of these pictures.

On pages 43 to 45, there is shown the Chrysler plant in Detroit, with a general view of the assembly building, the general plan of the factory, the assembly building interior in all its meticulous detail.

On pages 46 and 47 is shown the Ford factory at River Rouge with a general view of the main building.

On pages 48 and 49 is shown the Hamilton Standard Propellor Co. of Hartford, Conn., with the interior of the building.

On pages 56 to 58 is shown the Dodge factory at Detroit with an airplane view of the assembly building, a sketch of the plant, the second floor and the first floor in detail, with the names of the various units in Russian.

On pages 65 to 67 is shown the Bell aircraft factory.

On page 69 is shown the Ford factory at Willow Run, the assembly building interior, the assembly building and so on down the line.

One of the most interesting sections of the book contains very detailed sketches, all of which are capable of being blown up, of course, to sizes a great deal larger than shown in this book, dealing with the construction of all the metallurgical factories in the United States, the author of which is I. I. Kostin. The article contains an unusually detailed description of the Geneva plant building near Salt Lake City, Utah, and the illustrations on the next page, as well as on the following pages, represent various sections of the plant section by section.

Mr. I. I. Kostin is author of a third article in the volume on railroad transportation and the mechanization of freight-handling techniques in the United States and various concentration points of our transportation industry.

Another interesting section deals with bridges. The article on pages 66 and 79 on steel bridges in the United States is contributed by Beliaiev which contains a detailed description of bridges throughout the United States with the description of each individual bridge containing the following items: Location of the bridge, its technical particulars, the date of the opening, its cost, the name of the builders, and the amount of material used on each bridge.

Here you have all the pictures of all the great bridges in the United States, including the Golden Gate Bridge in California, the George Washington Bridge in New York, and a general view of the San Francisco-Oakland Bridge with its various approaches.

I think one of the unusually interesting lay-outs is this one on the TVA. On the next page there is a map of the whole TVA construction program with its power units, together with all the other industries and agencies in the TVA. We do not have to remind anybody, of course, that the TVA is in the vicinity of Oak Ridge, Tenn. It is a very important part of our defense establishment because of its relation to atom bomb manufacturing.

Since I am not a military strategist, I would like to make a few observations in conjunction with this book which, as I say, is going to be photostated, filed, and analyzed by our Intelligence Service.

Our committee was in process of determining what best use to make of this material, as I say, when the story broke in the Times-Herald. Since now the matter is public knowledge, we feel that the Members of Congress are entitled to know these rather significant facts.

In the first place, it seems to me it demonstrates a very great lack of the practice of a program of realistic reciprocity insofar as our friends, the Russians, are concerned. I have taken the pains to make an analysis through the agencies of our Committee on Un-American Activities, for example, of the number of people they have here from Russia at the present time, officially. I am not talking about Communist activities now. I am not talking about subversive activities. These are official guests with visas from the State Department—inspectors and people coming over to analyze defense establishments in America and for other purposes. They have a grand total of 3,696 visitors officially visaed into the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, of whom 862 were here on so-called temporary business visas. They are the engineers, statisticians, and scientists who made these surveys. I am going to put a break-down into the RECORD of the 3,696. The break-down is as follows:

Nonresident aliens admitted from Russia during fiscal year ending June 30, 1946

Government personnel	823
Temporary business, engineers, scientists, analysts, etc	862
So-called temporary "pleasure visas"—which might mean anything	1,119
In transit	618
Students	28
International organization people, United Nations, etc	58
Nonresident aliens—Russians who have been here, left the country, and again returned with visitors' visas	188
Total Russians officially admitted to the United States last year	3,696

It logically follows, if we are going to permit Russian visitors officially to inspect our plants, to photograph and publish and analyze the defense plants of this country, to map and pin-point our basic economic structures, what kind of reciprocity do we have? How much authority do we have to go around Russia and visit her plants, to collect pictures of them, and so forth? These are logical questions which occur to realistic men. So I have made a check of that. I find we have 250 Americans in Russia.

Of the 250, 210 are with the Government, with the embassies, UNRRA, the Red Cross, the Army, and the Navy, including wives and dependents. That leaves 40 unaccounted for. Of the 40, 18 are members of the press and their wives and children. That leaves 22 unaccounted for. Of those, one is a medical research man. Four of them are fur buyers. Another five or six are with the United Fruit Co. Nine of them have been granted visas as construction engineers as contrasted with perhaps 800 Russians here for the same purpose.

Of the nine, I am advised—and these figures are only approximate because I do not have the exact figures of this date—but of the nine several have returned. So it is a safe conclusion you can count on the fingers of one hand all of the American engineers in Russia today.

It is equally a safe conclusion that you can count on the fingers of one foot all of them who have access to any of the defense establishments in Russia—who have had an opportunity to go behind the Urals and see what is being done over there comparable to what is being done here in the matter of defense establishments. So our reciprocal policy toward Russia—one of fairness, one of dealing across the board—is pretty much a matter of propaganda, promise, and publicity. It is not a matter of reality. It is not being done from the standpoint of an exchange of visas of official visitors between Russia and the United States on a realistic basis of reciprocity.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman was in Russia last year.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct.

Mr. BENDER. How much freedom did the gentleman have as an American citizen? Was he accorded the privilege of going and coming as he chose?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes. I have no complaint to make about the freedom granted, but we were not there examining defense establishments, taking pictures, or making maps. We were there examining the social conditions, the economic and political conditions. We were not circumscribed in our movements. We were courteously treated. We were accorded unprecedented opportunities to get away from the "vodka banquet circuit" and to really see Russia.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Is the gentleman going to comment upon some of the paid advertisements in that book?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes. I am just coming to that now.

The second observation I wish to make is to inquire how far we are expected to carry good neighborliness? This book was paid for by the big businessmen of America as a friendly although not altogether unselfish gesture to Russia. It has 175 full pages of advertising, paid for by corporations which profited through purchases made by Amtorg, lend-lease supplies sent to Russia, and so forth, or who hope to profit from future transactions. One hundred and seventy-five pages at $230 a page.

I think it would be an interesting study for the members of the Ways and Means Committee to determine whether or not these advertising costs were taken from the income-tax returns as a cost of doing business. I will bet a last year's South Dakota pheasant-hunting license against an old straw hat that they were. So what do we have? We actually have this huge book of over 950 pages in all paid for largely by American taxpayers, because these big business concerns are practically all in the 90-percent bracket. So we might call this the American taxpayer's gift to the Russian defense program; a sort of a year-end, extra dividend on the lend-lease balances we are not going to collect, or something like that! Because actually the American taxpayer is the man who pays for most of the costs of this great book provided for the Russians.

The third observation I would like to make is this: It seems to me it proves above everything else the need for tightening up on our security in the United States. We have photographs taken of buildings, bridges, and defense establishments, where they would not permit, during the war, a Boy Scout with a Brownie kodak to take a simple snapshot. Somebody certainly is blundering from the standpoint of our security system.

It is interesting to observe the substantial number of advertisements of Americans who made this book possible, who are manufacturers of machine tools, the one thing the Russians need most if they are going to prepare to become a first-class military power today from the standpoint of modern weapons. These people perhaps expect to sell machine tools to Russia through Amtorg, and consequently are advertising for that purpose. This might indicate Congress should give some attention to requiring export permits for certain types of machine tools designed primarily to produce instruments of war. After all, the United States should have learned something from its sad experience in selling oil and scrap iron to Japan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] has again expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MUNDT. The fourth observation—and I must hurry for my time is short—we all sympathize with Baruch, with Barney Baruch and with Warren Austin, and with Secretary of State Byrnes because of the obstinacy that the Russians have displayed at the United Nations conferences from the standpoint of the atom bomb, and the American position insisting on international inspection as a defense against the manufacture of atomic bombs.

Perhaps one of the big reasons the Russians are not interested in arranging for an interchange of inspection is, as is evidenced by this volume I have here in my hand, that Russia is getting all the information it needs about our defenses over here and they are not interested now in making any concessions that might permit America to learn what they are doing over there. They are getting the information they want without the arrangement for inspections by international survey groups. Maybe if we make it more difficult for them to get further information here it will help Secretary of State Marshall, it will help Warren Austin, get an agreement with Russia from the standpoint of controlling the atomic bomb by having an arrangement for internal inspection, thus making atomic warfare impossible since it will put an end to the manufacture of atomic bombs and the development and storehousing of atomic weapons of war.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. Will the gentleman tell us how many of the more than 3,000 Russians who are in this country have diplomatic immunity in some form or other in that they are attached in one way or another to the Russian Embassy?

Mr. MUNDT. I will put these figures in the RECORD. It is over 800, over four times as many as we have over there with about a hundred times as many visiting engineers here as we have over there.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that none of us permit ourselves to conclude too much from this book, remarkable as it is. In the first place, I want to emphasize again that it has been done legally, so there is nothing to be gained from the standpoint of criticizing the Russians for doing something which we have made officially available to them.

In the second place, I want to point this out and emphasize the fact that when Secretary Marshall goes to Moscow he has some important business to do from the standpoint of talking with the leaders of the Soviet, insisting upon a reciprocal policy based on reality, an across-the-board set-up with Russia, saying that they cannot have over here concessions they will not let us have over there. That is fair, that is firm, that is friendly, that is realistic and reciprocal, and that is what they can understand.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION. Are American people in Russia permitted to take photographs of their important factories?

Mr. MUNDT. Of course not. They are not even permitted to go back behinds the Urals to look at the factories or to visit their underground fabricating areas.

Mr. ROBSION. They are not even permitted to have cameras, are they?

Mr. MUNDT. I suppose they are permitted to have cameras if they do not use them. They certainly are not permitted to take pictures of defense establishments or to prepare manuals of the type I have been discussing here today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] has said. We are on a subject now that rises high above the scramble for party vantage or the noisy clamor of men for place and power; we are on a plane where all Americans should meet—that is the protection of our country now and for all time to come.

I, too, am a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. You would be alarmed to know the information we are gathering.

Gen. George S. Patton, the greatest soldier of this war, came by to thank me for defending him on this floor—he said, "For defending me when I was on the battlefront and could not defend myself." He asked, "What do you think about this international set-up?"

I said, "General, towers of Babel have been collapsing in a confusion of tongues ever since the days of Genesis."

He threw his head back, laughed, and said, "If I do not remember anything else you have said, I want to remember that."

If he were here today he would tell us to look out for our country's safety.

The American people are not in favor of turning our military secrets over to a foreign power that has its agencies fomenting strife and laying plans for revolution in this country.

I am not at all in sympathy with these international fanatics who wave the red flag in the face of Peron of Argentina and at the same time lick the boots of Stalin.

I am not at all in sympathy with these international fanatics who insist on going into Spain and stirring up a Communist revolution, when Spain carried out her promise to England not to permit the Germans to go across Spanish soil during the war.

I am not at all in sympathy with these international fanatics that vote to intervene in South Africa, and stir up trouble for a people who have had trouble enough maintaining their civilization and their way of life.

I want to see America retain the atomic bomb and maintain the strongest air force on earth until we know that the rest of the world really wants peace. Then they can get it.

I am not in favor of letting down our guard and seeing our people slaughtered by the hundreds of thousands in the spreading flames of the atomic bomb of the future.

Let me appeal to you gentlemen again for American solidarity in this House. The Communists in this country make no bones about stirring up revolution. One of their sneaking movements is pushing certain legislation they want us to pass and have our State legislatures pass. One of these is the FEPC, or so-called fair employment practices bill, with which they tried to fool the people of California in the recent election. They went to California and got this measure placed on the ticket for the people to vote on, and they beat it in every single county in the State. Out of 2,358,343 votes cast on the proposition, there were only 675,697 votes for it, and 1,682,648 votes against it.

Did you know that if that measure were on the statute books of this country, as introduced here from day to day, every person in a key position in America might face the prospect of having a spy at his elbow, a spy in every plant in every key business in America?

It is time that they cut out maligning of northern Republicans and southern Democrats, who have stood up for maintaining our defenses and maintaining our American institutions. I appeal to you to support this Committee on Un-American Activities. We have the greatest job before us that has ever been assigned to a committee of Congress. We know what is going on. We appeal to you as Representatives of the American people to lay aside all political prejudices.

I will battle you on the tariff issue when the time comes, and I will battle you on the income tax, and on the power question, if necessary, but let us stand together when it comes to maintaining the safety of our country and the protection of our people, our children and our children's children for all time to come. Let us surrender nothing that will jeopardize America's safety in the future.

Let us put the safety of our country first.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, in the naming of General Marshall as Secretary of State the President chose the strongest man that came out of the war. That appointment was received with almost universal applause and for that there are doubtless many reasons, the most important of which in my opinion, is the belief that prevails that General Marshall has the strength, the ability and the will to contend with Motolov and to stop Stalin.

Answering the charge or the assertion that up to the moment it appears that the late war was fought for Russia and for Russia alone is difficult to do, because the record shows that in the appeasement of Stalin we welshed on our solemn commitments, betrayed the weaker powers that we had promised freedom and self-determination and we permitted ourselves to be used to spread Marxism all over the world. The recovery of the ground that we have lost, if not wickedly given away, is a big job. I am anxious to see our new Secretary of State take hold of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I realize that for the last few minutes we have been entertained with some very interesting speeches. When a Member takes his position in this well and talks about patriotism, the dividing line between the two parties vanishes. I am sure that most of us agree completely with these speeches that we have just heard and that they were very timely. But we have another subject before us this afternoon that is not quite so interesting. It is a very important subject, however. It involves the purse strings of millions of our people. Few, if any, families there are who are not directly interested from a financial standpoint in what we are doing here today.

This afternoon we are talking about $1,130,000,000. That is a terrific lot of money. The question is whether we shall proceed to collect that much money next year from excise taxes or whether we shall forgive our people from paying that much money next year. That is the proposition before us. Regardless of how much smoke might be raised on the Democratic side today with reference to the issues in this case, these matters were all resolved before the Committee on Ways and Means, on which committee there are 10 very distinguished Democrats. These 10 distinguished Democrats, without exception, I think, voted unanimously to support this legislation. Therefore there should be no politics in it. There is no politics in it. It is a question, as I have already said, of whether or not we shall forgive $1,130,000,000 or whether we shall proceed to collect that much, and that is a matter which has been determined by the exigencies of the day and by the circumstances of the times. In other words, we have come to the place in our financial economy that we cannot lightly push aside $1,130,000,000 that we need so badly.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. I believe my colleague wants to keep the record straight regarding what he said that everybody voted unanimously for this bill. That really is not the fact. There was no opposition to it. There was no one objecting to it, but do not say they voted for it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let us clarify the matter then. The gentleman is a distinguished member of that committee. Might I be free to ask him how he wants to vote on this? Was he in favor of it or was he against voting it out?

Mr. FORAND. I am telling the gentleman that I am in favor of extending the tax but I do not like the idea of the indefiniteness of it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If that is the gentleman's position, all right. Of course, we have talked a lot about this definite proposition or the indefinite proposition involved in this legislation, but that has nothing to do with the merits of the case. As I said before, the merits are, Are you in favor of collecting this much in taxes or are you in favor of forgiving it? Now, there are many arguments both ways. There are many people who can argue pretty successfully that we should collect some of these excise taxes and that we should forgive some of them.

Let me talk to you about that for just a moment. These excise taxes with which we deal in this bill are not the only excise taxes. There are many excise taxes, and they run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, that are not covered in this legislation today. For instance, here is a tax on transportation. This legislation does not cut the tax on transportation, and that involves $270,000,000 a year. That was included in legislation that has no definite date for termination. This $270,000,000 will continue to be collected as a tax on transportation. There is no termination about that. That was passed with an indefinite date. You do not need to say that because that was passed 2 or 3 years ago, and supported by the Democrats, we can never repeal it. Of course we are going to repeal it, but today it is on the statute books in exactly the same category as this legislation today will be when we have passed it.

Let me ask you again, What other kinds of excise taxes are there on the books that are not covered by the legislation today, and that will run on interminably unless we as a Congress terminate them? Here is one of them: Business and store machines, $133,000,000 a year. Another is coin-operating machines, $21,000,000 a year. Then there are taxes on electric, gas, and oil appliances, $79,000,000 a year. Then there is a tax on musical instruments, about which the high-school bands all over the country have a complaint. Nobody said today that that tax should be taken off. We all know we would like to take that off so the high-school boys and girls will not have to pay that exorbitant tax on musical instruments. That, together with the tax on phonographs and phonograph records, amounts to $66,000,000 a year. I go on now to the tax on refrigerators and the tax on photographic films. Nearly everybody does some photography now. That runs into $44,000,000 a year. So, do not be confused about these excise taxes that are involved in the legislation today. If you are going to allow yourself to become worked up over them, here are the items I have just read to you, amounting to $598,000,000 a year, and those taxes will run on interminably. It is economically necessary that they run on, else how are we going to pay the debt, and how are we going to do these things we ought to do? I am here inserting in the RECORD a table showing in detail the taxes collected by legislation that has no termination date, and which legislation will, no doubt, be modified when the Ways and Means Committee takes up the tax laws for a complete revision.

The real problem in this legislation is that it would be almost impossible to know where we would stop when we once began to consider what commodities to omit. That is the real reason why we had to bring in a closed rule. We probably ought to take some of these taxes off. We probably should have taken out some of the taxes on cosmetics and we probably should have taken cheap jewelry out. We probably should have taken the tax off furs for the benefit of the people who need cheap furs, but as long as someone advertises a fur coat for $13,000, who is going to get very much excited about taking the tax off furs? Where are you going to draw the line of demarcation there? Where are you going to draw the line of demarcation between cheap jewelry and expensive jewelry? It just cannot be done in a day. It just cannot be done on the floor of this House. I have no right to promise for my party what we will do, but I dare say that I can promise for my party and your party both that before the end of this year we will enact some legislation that will change these excise taxes and change them very materially. But we cannot do it in a hurry. We have to do it scientifically. We have to do it after we hear testimony. We have to consult the conditions of the budget. We cannot now, with the tremendous debt under which we are operating, throw money away just carelessly. We have to collect every cent we can get so that we may at least balance the budget. This business of running behind every year may be all right with a New Deal administration, but the people of the Nation expect more from a Republican administration.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that it is the intention of the committee to make a revision of these excise taxes this year? I think that is what the gentleman said.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I said specifically that I could not commit anybody on our side or the gentleman's side. I am not trying to do that. However, I do say that it is my opinion that before 1947 shall have passed into history we will do something with reference to some of these excise taxes. That is my own opinion. Does the gentleman share it?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I just want to know whether that is the opinion of the majority members of the committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I said it was my own opinion, but may I ask the gentleman this: Does he agree with me?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I have not given it enough thought yet. I cannot say.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have, and I am satisfied we ought to do it.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. If the eminent gentleman who now has the floor or anybody else wants to be political, could he not turn back to the days when the first apostle of the New Deal said he proposed to reduce the running expenses of this Government 25 percent? He then said, and nobody has ever disputed it, or ever will, that taxes are paid in the sweat of every man that labors. Could we not turn back to that? Could you not say to those gentlemen who are the apostles of the doctrine of tax and tax, and spend and spend, and elect and elect, that they got us into this fix and we are doing our best to get out of it?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. I well remember the promises of the high priest of new dealism. I remember how he promised to reduce national expenditures and how he said that nations had been "wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy" and he immediately proceeded to wreck his own country by operating continuously on a deficit from one billion to one hundred billion annually. Not in any year of New Deal administration has the budget been balanced. And if today's performance by my friends on the other side augurs anything as to what we may expect in the future, we will be talking about the merits of these things for a long, long time to come, because it is going to take us 100 years at least to pay off this colossal debt to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Do you not think the country is entitled to have some type of program with respect to taxation? That is what the Democratic Party wants the majority party to do. We want the majority party to give the country some idea of a tax program. There is something wrong with the whole business. Every workingman wants an idea of the tax program.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I remind the gentleman that his party missed a great opportunity to give us a constructive program in the last 16 years?

Up to this point I have been talking about excise taxes that are not included in the legislation that we are considering today. As I have already stated, the tax that will be produced by the legislation being considered today is estimated to be $1,130,000,000. In other words, if we should pass legislation repealing the excise taxes on the articles included in this tax legislation we would lose revenue to the extent of $1,130,000,000 in the year of 1948. This total is made up of the tax on many commodities. For instance the tax derived from sales of admission tickets reached the colossal sum of $111,000,000 per year. Cabarets and roof gardens pay a tax on their service that amounts to nearly $40,000,000. One would not suppose that the tax on dues paid to clubs and initiation fees paid to lodges and different societies would amount to nearly $8,000,000 a year. The tax on jewelry produces $82,000,000. The tax on furs that we hear so much talk about amounts to $35,000,000. Toilet preparations bring in a total of $33,000,000.

It is from distilled spirits and whiskies including high-priced alcoholic liquors that the greatest amount of revenue is raised in this legislation. The Treasury takes in a total on these commodities of nearly $475,000,000. In spite of these heavy tax items the amount of liquor consumed is not lessened to any appreciable extent. Cocktail parties seem to flourish and to be going as strong as ever.

Then the tax on wines runs up to $25,000,000. The tax on malt liquors which is supposed to be the poor man's drink, runs up to $75,000,000.

The boys who play pool pay a tax which totals about $2,000,000. Then the tax on electric-light bulbs, the propriety of which I have often doubted, brings in $16,000,000. Long-distance telephones pay their share and many people think they pay more than their share when they are taxed at the rate of $56,000,000. The people who ride pullman cars and want to travel de luxe pay for this to the tune of about $60,000,000. These people who flash their fancy luggage and handbags with pride pay for this privilege at the rate of about $60,000,000 a year.

I may have omitted some of these commodities that are included in this tax legislation we are considering today but I think I have mentioned most of them. I am therefore inserting in the RECORD a table showing these taxes set out in detail:

Rates effective by Presidential proclamation

The above loss in revenue is figured as the actual loss for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.
Because of some lag in collections, this does not reflect the entire loss on account of the proclamation.
It is also believed that some additional loss will be incurred for the fiscal year 1947, due to purchases being held up prior to July 1, 1947.
The amount of additional loss is roughly estimated at around $170,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I expect to vote for this legislation. If it had been practicable to have gone through this list and taken out those commodities which are very necessary, especially to the great common people, I should have been in favor of doing so, but it is almost impossible to draw the line between costume jewelry such as those articles worn on garments and expensive jewelry. But, as a matter of fact, many articles of costume jewelry are very expensive and are real luxuries. Likewise many cosmetics are practically household necessities and these should be excluded but the high-priced perfumes, most of which are imported into the country, should be taxed.

It is my hope that the Ways and Means Committee will find time before this Congress adjourns in July to again give consideration to the subject that we might eliminate some of the commodities that are necessities and not luxuries. There is nothing about this legislation, when we have passed it, that will in any way limit the action of Congress in the future. The Ways and Means Committee can with all propriety again study this problem with the hope of remedying some inequalities. However, we must not lose sight of the fact that by refraining from placing a definite expiration date on this legislation we are removing the constant fear of a change in tax rates that is of necessity a great worry to those engaged in the sale of these commodities. The people who comprise what we call the general public are smart buyers and they will refrain from buying a commodity now if they think that commodity will be free from the burden of tax at a later date.

I predict that this legislation will pass this House today by almost a unanimous vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentlemen on the minority side if it would be possible to extend the debate for, let us say, half an hour, or 15 minutes on each side, since I have many more requests for time?

Mr. McCORMACK. May I inform the gentleman from Minnesota that that must be done in the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. I believe that anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGELL. Personally I have no objection to it, but we would have to obtain such permission in the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then I recommend a very liberal interpretation with reference to the time.

Mr. FORAND. Is that the way the gentleman wants the rules of the House interpreted?

Mr. KNUTSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. FORAND. Is that the way the gentleman cares to live under the rules of the House?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not get the point of the gentleman's interrogation.

Mr. FORAND. I am not surprised. That is not unusual. But I will repeat it. Does the gentleman infer that we should violate the rules of the House?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; far be it from me to intimate that we should violate the rules of the House.

Mr. FORAND. That is what the gentleman is asking for.

Mr. McCORMACK. What would the liberal interpretation requested by the gentleman apply to?

Mr. KNUTSON. Several constructions can be placed on the word "liberal." I will say to the gentleman it has been badly abused in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the debate with a great deal of interest. There have been some very able remarks and some perhaps that would not fall in that category so far as dealing with an important measure is concerned. After the disclosure made here by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], I must confess that it had quite a sobering effect. It made me think in this hour of peril—and I so consider it so far as our international affairs go, and it can become a very serious question of peril here if we are not well grounded in our approach to the tax problem. The story goes that during the war in the Pacific one of our boys was flying at a very high altitude. He thought he saw a speck that might be an enemy plane down below. He immediately turned the nose of the plane down and opened the throttle wide open. Very soon he was heading toward that speck at a terrific rate of speed—200, 300, 400, 500, 600, 700 miles an hour. The varnish on the wings was peeling off. He tried to straighten out the plane but something was wrong with the control machinery and he started praying. He prayed to be released from that peril he was in. As he continued to pray he saw the tops of the trees in the distance. And suddenly the plane straightened out. This young aviator said, "Thank you, God. I will now take over."

I want to call attention to the fact that this country is in peril, and millions of people go down on their knees and pray for the safety of this country. All through this country there are dangerous subversive elements operating. They do not pray. They are Godless. These subversive elements propose to make this country a Godless country. Now, let us not deceive ourselves. The power to tax is the power to destroy. This element knows there are many points of weakness in this Government. Unsound taxation is one method by which they can destroy. Another is tampering with our courts, and another is creating disrespect for this legislative body.

The President of the United States, the same as we, has taken an oath to protect and defend this country. I believe he intends to live up to his oath. He has come before this Congress with a message that he wants these taxes, which we are discussing, continued.

I think every patriotic man in this House, regardless of how he may feel personally about some item, if eliminated, that would please his district, knows that the honest, patriotic thing to do, however, at this time is to do just what we proposed to do under this bill. A tax bill lends itself perhaps more than any other bill to demagoguery. Of course nobobdy in this House would resort to demagoguery, but the subversive elements working on the outside to create confusion and chaos in this country will make all kinds of promises to the point where they would not tax any citizen. The Ways and Means Committee is quite as capable of writing one or two sound tax bills for the good of the country as were those who were in control when 17 New Deal tax bills were reported by the committee and passed from 1933 to 1946. It comes with poor grace and sportsmanship on the part of the New Deal minority to oppose the recommendation of the President and of the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

I know what my colleagues desire, and that is accurate information relating to the bill before the House. In order to save the time of the House and to contribute reliable information to the Members of the House, I have prepared a series of tables that tells exactly what this bill does; the taxes that it continues and for how long; and those that were not affected by the President's proclamation and those that were.

I ask unanimous consent to insert those tables in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JONKMAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The above loss in revenue is figured as the actual loss for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.
Because of some lag in collections, this does not reflect the entire loss on account of the proclamation.
It is also believed that some additional loss will be incurred for the fiscal year 1947, due to purchases being held up prior to July 1, 1947.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, for approximately 2 hours now we have heard a very interesting discussion regarding the bill H. R. 1030. I have for the past few days been trying to analyze the real reason why our friends on the majority were bringing this bill up for a vote. Despite all of their statements, I am not satisfied that I have obtained from them the basic reason. I have come to the conclusion that although statements were made right here a few moments ago by some of the previous speakers that it is necessary to collect all the revenue that we possibly can—and I agree with them on that statement—that the action of the Republicans today in extending the excise taxes to a date indefinite and, as was so well stated by the minority whip, permanently, the reason behind it all is that they are doing what the surgeon does with a patient when he takes him into the hospital. The surgeon has to build up the patient before he operates on him. I believe my good friends are planning an operation, and they are building up the Treasury by continuing the excise taxes in the hope that they may be able to realize, at least in part, the promises they made to the American people that they would reduce income taxes by 20 percent. I do not believe that there is anything else behind this move; personally I do not think this is the proper time to reduce any tax. I am going to vote for this bill despite the fact that the termination date of these several items has been removed. I should have liked to see these taxes continued in effect for a period of a year, as was suggested in the President's message. I realize, however, that we now are in the minority; we have to take it; but I tell you that we do not intend to take it lying down. We will at least be heard.

It must be rather embarrassing for the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to bring in a bill today increasing taxes if he recalls that on November 24, 1943, when we were considering the 1943 tax bill, he said this from this well:

> The time has come when we have about reached the bottom of the barrel so far as the possibility of securing additional revenues is concerned. There is a limit to the people's ability to pay taxes, even in time of war. During the past 4 years they have had to absorb particularly drastic increases to meet the staggering war costs, and they have not had time to adjust themselves to one increase before another even greater one has been piled on.

The gentleman himself, of course, was a member of that committee. He has always prided himself on making the statement that his committee was a nonpartisan committee, that Members on both sides serving on the Ways and Means Committee acted as a unit; and that has been more or less true, although

I am not so sure that it is going to be the case in the future, because if I can judge from reports that came to us last week through the newspapermen, already star-chamber sessions have become the fact, beginning on the question of reciprocal trade agreements. Last week the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee met behind closed doors and heard evidence, I do not know from whom. The Democrats were not even invited to attend the session to hear this evidence. I do not like it. I trust that that meeting last week did not set a precedent, but I am rather fearful. I sincerely hope our good chairman will think twice before he adopts that kind of tactics again, because if he does I stand here and tell him very frankly that I will simply pull out the record of the old Smoot-Hawley tariff bill and recite the history of how the Republicans at that time kicked the Democrats out, brought in lobbyists, sat them in the place of the Democrats, and permitted log rolling to the point where these lobbyists practically wrote that tariff bill. I hope we will not have a repetition of that practice in this Congress.

The chairman further said on November 24, and he was speaking for the Republicans:

> We have already given notice that so far as we are concerned we will not give consideration to imposing additional taxes upon the people until, first, all waste and extravagance in Government spending has been abolished and then only if it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I say to you that it must be considered necessary for this to be before the House today. I do not believe that the gentleman wants to go back on his word and I do not believe he is bringing this bill to the floor of the House simply to accommodate the President. Under these circumstances I say to you, and I say to the American people, unless and until you bring the necessary pressure you will find that despite what our Republican friends say today that this bill provides for an indefinite rather than a permanent fixing of rates, you are facing a permanent set-up, and do not kid yourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. What is all this talk about "permanent" that the opposition is making here today?

Mr. CURTIS. It is without foundation of fact. There are many wartime taxes, even on necessities, that were enacted without a termination date in the statute. These taxes are not permanent any more than any of the other rates of taxation that prevail are permanent. Congress can change them tomorrow, it can change them 6 months from now or they can be changed by any subsequent Congress.

Mr. Chairman, on one of the last days of 1946, President Truman issued a proclamation, the effect of which would mean a reduction in certain excise taxes from their wartime rate to the old rate that existed prior to the war. The articles affected and the rates involved are as follows:

Description of tax	Old rate	War tax rate
Admissions	1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof.	1 cent for each 5 cents or major fraction thereof.
Permanent use or lease of boxes or seats	11 percent	20 percent.

(3) Over 21 percent and not over 24 percent of alcohol	$1 per gallon	$2 per gallon.
Sparkling wines, liqueurs, and cordials:
(1) Champagne or sparkling wine	10 cents per half-pint or fraction thereof.	15 cents per half-pint or fraction thereof.

Transportation of persons	do	Do.
Seats, berths, etc	do	Do.

In addition to the above items, the following item was likewise affected: Luggage, old rate, 10 percent; war tax rate, 20 percent.

The bill before the House today would continue the wartime rates on all of these articles. I am not very happy about this legislation. I would much rather be here today supporting a bill to lower taxes. Some of the rates involved today are definitely deterrents to business. They are slowing down sales. This means that the demand is lessened for manufactured articles, that less jobs are made available and that there is less demand upon the producers of raw products. The United States is going to be faced with a heavy tax program in the years that lie ahead. Our whole tax structure must be studied and examined to determine whether or not it is a tax that is destroying enterprise and jobs and markets. If that be the case, our country cannot afford to continue on with such a tax.

It is my hope that before the first session of the Eightieth Congress adjourns, that there can be a downward revision of taxes. It is well for the country to realize, however, that there are some decisions that must be made in the Congress before taxes can be reduced. If the proclamation of the President were to go into effect without this legislation, the loss in revenue would be $1,130,000,000 in the next fiscal year.

Almost simultaneous with the act of the President to reduce these taxes, the Congress received the budget message from the President asking for appropriations of $37,000,000,000. This budget request is three times the amount of money spent in any peacetime year prior to World War II. The budget has consistently been out of balance throughout the years. Our national debt is at an all-time high.

Before there can be a reduction in taxes, the budget must be balanced and a systematic debt retirement program must be inaugurated. The Federal debt must be reduced now. If we in this year of a high national income are content in paying the carrying charge of the national debt only, how can we pay off the debt when less prosperous times arrive? The only way to reduce the debt is to reduce the debt. America's honor is at stake. If the generation that created this debt fails to pay a portion of it off, how can our voices be raised against a later generation who might choose to repudiate it in toto.

Mr. Chairman, it is anticipated that the budget recommendations of the President will be cut by the Congress. A patriotic effort will be put forth by those charged with the responsibility of preparing our appropriation bills. Their job is not easy. There is no short cut to economy. It calls for long hours of tedious detail work which demands day-to-day diligent effort. Our Government can never establish a sound fiscal policy if the Members of Congress shirk the unpleasant and arduous task of economizing and eliminating waste in all departments and become content with the role of a demagogue by shouting to high heaven about and voting against an appropriation that is to be spent in some other part of the country, even though that appropriation has merit.

In the United States News for January 24 some interesting observations were made in reference to the cost of government. I wish to call a few of these to your attention:

Before the war, for example, it cost $160,000 to run the White House. Mr. Truman now asks $501,800 for operation and maintenance in the year that begins next July 1. The executive offices cost $196,000 to operate in prewar years. They are down for $1,417,000 in the next fiscal year. * * *

The Budget Bureau itself, which cost $396,000 before the war, will now cost $3,506,000. * * * Congress cost $22,000,000 before the war and is scheduled for $51,809,000 in the next fiscal year. The judiciary cost $9,500,000 before Pearl Harbor, but is to cost $19,000,000 next year. The Department of Commerce struggled along on $20,000,000 in prewar years. It wants $260,814,000 now. Where the Department of Labor managed to operate for $24,000,000 in 1939, it finds that it cannot manage for less than $106,242,000 next year. Diplomats of the Foreign Service after seeing to this country's foreign relations at a cost of $14,000,000 a year before Pearl Harbor want $117,000,000 to do the job. * * * The Navy wants to spend $344,000,000 on new ships in the third year after end of the war, or about half as much as the whole Navy cost before the war. The Interior Department, after getting along on $150,000,000 in prewar years, now asks for $363,000,000. * * * Federal relief is to cost $720,000,000. That's the Federal Government's contribution to States for aid to the aged, to dependent mothers and children, and to the blind. During the last period of comparable prosperity, relief costs were negligible. * * * Public housing cost $19,000,000 in 1940. Next year it is to cost $173,000,000, if Congress goes along with Mr. Truman. * * * Veterans' pensions are to cost $2,492,000,000. The prewar cost of pensions was $417,000,000. Then, businessmen are to get $1,000,000,000 as a subsidy for employing veterans in the on-job training program. Another $1,000,000,000 is allotted for educating veterans in schools and colleges. The sum of $980,000,000 is put down for benefits to jobless veterans. * * * The Army's program is reflected in an $804,000,000 item for supplies such as food, clothing, and medicines. That is more than the entire prewar Army budget. New weapons for a year of peace are to cost $338,000,000. The Signal Corps got along on $6,455,479 in prewar years and now is down for $100,000,000. The Panama Canal gets a budget allowance of $25,526,338. The Canal had $9,000,000 before the war. * * * The total Navy budget amounts to about half the total prewar expenses of the entire Government establishment. * * * War agencies are scheduled to keep operating in the third year of peace. Mr. Truman's budget provides for 1,271,976 civilian employees of war agencies. That includes civilians in the Army and Navy as well as civilians in war agencies that cannot seem to be liquidated. Before the war, only 229,917 persons had similar jobs. * * * Former enemies are turning out to be a peacetime drain on United States taxpayers. The War Department proposes to spend $645,000,000 for the relief of occupied countries. The State Department is down for another $387,000,000 to be spent for foreign relief. And $76,000,000 is budgeted to aid foreign refugees. * * * Atomic research is to cost twice as much next year as this year. The Budget calls for an outlay of $443,244,000 to be spent on the atom.

The task of putting our budget in balance and making a payment on the national debt this year is not going to be easy. It is going to be a difficult one. The President's Budget for $37,000,000,000 was not only a recommendation for a great sum of money, but it was practically a deficit budget. It called for a margin of receipts over expenditures of one-thirteenth of 1 percent. That is pretty close banking business.

It is possible that our appropriations be such that the over-all saving could make our Budget several billion dollars under the President's Budget and we might still go in the red. The fight for preservation of this Government must be carried on several fronts. If the portal-to-portal pay suits now pending and hereafter filed are successful, it is estimated that the Treasury will have to make refunds of upwards of $4,000,000,000. Where are you going to get the money?

In this enormous task of establishing a sound financial basis for our Government, the issue should be made clear to the Congress and to the people. In that regard I have one very definite recommendation. The fiscal year for Government expenditures and the taxable year should be made to coincide. For all individuals and most business concerns the tax year is the calendar year. Rates are raised and lowered and taxes are imposed for the calendar year. Yet the fiscal year runs from July 1 to July 1. It is impossible for the average American under such a system to know how the Government's income compares to its outgo. If you ask a Treasury expert for the answer to that question, he has to transpose his figures and it is doubtful if all the members of the committee working each day with the figures have a common understanding of the figures at all times.

This Congress should, without delay, pass such legislation as will make our year of spending and our year of taxing the same period of time. The transition will not be easy. It will be difficult for the Treasury, it will be burdensome, yes troublesome for many taxpayers. But in the long, hard pull it will still be worth while. If our taxable year should be made to coincide with our spending year, that is from July 1 to July 1, the Ways and Means Committee could more intelligently recommend tax bills to this Congress.

The usual appropriations could be put through Congress by April or May. These appropriations determine how much money will be spent in the year that follows, which begins on July 1. After the spending figures have been established, the Congress could then take appropriate action on taxes. If present rates would provide for a substantial payment on the debt and permit a reduction of taxes, we could reduce taxes. If we by our own acts in appropriating money spend more than is coming in, we should have the courage to impose a tax bill.

I am not one of those who oppose a tax reduction for the sake of continuing a big government. Taxes are too high; they are destroying the goose that lays the golden egg. They must be reduced, but the way to reduce taxes is to reduce spending. I believe that we can balance the budget, make a substantial payment on the debt, and still reduce taxes. Unless we reduce taxes new ventures will not be undertaken, business will not thrive, and jobs will not be provided. Again I say, we must reduce taxes. When the hand of the Treasury of the United States reaches out into the channels of trade for taxes its effect on our economic system is like taking blood from the human body for the purposes of a transfusion. There is a limit as to how far you can go and maintain health. If you stay within limits, the body lives to give blood another day. In my opinion, some of the taxes that we are continuing today are destructive taxes and I would like to see them reduced later on in this session of Congress.

It must be remembered that waste cannot be eliminated in government without the cooperation of the executive departments. The will to reduce expenditures must be in the mind and heart of every Government employee and every department. If a husband or the head of a business finds his budget reduced, he immediately eliminates those expenditures which are the least necessary. When a budget for a Government bureau is cut, too often they pick out that activity that is most needed and most popular and announce to the world that it will have to be eliminated. This means is used to create a public demand for Congress to restore the cut. The future financial welfare of this country rests not only in the hands of the Congress but in the hands of the Executive as well. There must be a will for less Government expenditures.

I would remind you again that the establishment of a sound financial basis for this country of ours is a difficult task. It affects the pocketbook of every American and what is more, it affects the future of our children and our children's children. We have just finished a great war where thousands gave their all for the preservation of this Republic. Is it expecting too much that we the living make the necessary sacrifice to preserve the financial integrity of this Government?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, time is running short. It occurred to me it was somewhat a mistake to permit persons to speak out of order when we have only 3 hours of debate on a measure of this importance. I wonder whether or not the heat of this debate was not somewhat uncomfortable for the majority members of the committee, so that they sought to divert attention from the issue, and therefore suggested that someone speak out of order.

The remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] reminded me of a football game some years ago, when there was a fumble and one of the leading ball carriers of one of the teams got hold of the ball and started to go and go and go, with a war whoop, to the goal post. He heard some murmurs from the sidelines and a roar from the multitude, and he suddenly discovered he was going in the wrong direction. That is just about what happened with respect to these excise taxes. The leader of the opposition, meaning those who have the ball, began to cry before the election and immediately afterward that they were going to wipe out all excise taxes, but the people and those with wiser heads made them decide to change their minds, and now they are carrying the ball in the opposite direction.

Mr. Chairman, this change of direction on the part of the leaders of the majority only came about, may I remind you, after tremendous harm had been done to the business interests of this country, not only to the wholesalers but to the small merchants who had on hand much merchandise, such as jewelers, furriers, and clothing men, who had clothing on hand together with furs on which they had to pay taxes. The buyers went on a strike. It is the small merchant who suffered most. He suffered because of the statements put out by the majority and the leaders of the majority that those taxes were going to be immediately repealed. I understand that some firms have nearly gone into bankruptcy.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. At this point will the gentleman insert in the RECORD his authority and where we can find those statements by the majority that these taxes would be repealed? I call on the gentleman to put that in the RECORD.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I will certainly do that. May I remind the gentleman that the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota which were quoted in the newspapers and in the Chicago Tribune were to the effect that you were immediately going to wipe out or eliminate the war excise taxes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Nothing was said about excise taxes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And the gentleman made no objection to that quotation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Nothing was said about excise taxes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I certainly will get the clipping and insert the clipping in the RECORD.

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, Mr. Chairman, to insert in the RECORD the articles which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] quoted.

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope no one will object.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In which article the gentleman from Minnesota was quoted.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I also call attention to the news items in the press of the country the other day and which also appeared in the Washington Post purporting to be a quotation of a statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. If it is not a true statement, the gentleman from Minnesota ought to deny it for his own sake. It is purported to be a quotation of his statement that the reason that they reported out this extension of the excise taxes and in making them permanent or indefinite—as they say, although there is no difference because they are permanent—as I say, the reason was to make it easy to put through their windfall tax for the big taxpayers.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am very glad that the gentleman has called that to our attention. I want the Members of the House and the people of the country to keep this particular excise-tax experience in mind because we have all been listening to the promises that have been shouted from the housetops, particularly with respect to the income-tax reduction which they propose to make of 20 percent across the board. During my visit back home to my district last week, many, many people—business people and wage earners—asked me about that. They are looking forward to this 20 percent tax reduction across the board. I said to them, "Well, my friends, I am very doubtful whether that can be accomplished." Let me tell you how it will work. I happen to have some figures here. The man who is receiving a net income before personal exemption of $2,500, under the bill, H. R. 1, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], would get a reduction in taxes of $19 or eight-tenths of 1 percent under the present laws. But the person receiving a net income before personal exemption of $5,000 would receive a reduction of $118 or 2.4 percent. A person receiving a net income of $10,000 would get a reduction of $372 or 3.7 percent. I am citing these figures because I want you to follow them as they show that those in the higher brackets definitely and positively, according to unimpeachable figures, get a higher percentage of tax reduction than those in the lower income-tax brackets. A $25,000 income would get a reduction of 6.8 percent. A $50,000 income would get a reduction of 9.6 percent, and a $100,000 income would get a reduction of 12½ percent. A $250,000 income would get a reduction of 15.2 percent.

So, Mr. Chairman, H. R. 1, which the country has been promised, definitely takes care of the income tax, to a greater degree, of those who have the higher incomes. These figures are indisputable. I hope the country, and especially those who are depending upon a 20-percent reduction, will see a change of pace by the leaders who are carrying the ball, see them turn around and go in the reverse direction and give relief to those who are entitled to relief and who should have relief. In that way something could be done to stop this inflation, and this demand for higher wages on the part of those who are having a hard time taking care of their families, on the high prices prevailing now. Do not give a reduction, under the Knutson plan, where the man with a $250,000 income gets a 15, or higher percentage reduction, while the man with a $2,500 income gets less than 1 percent reduction.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is it not a fact also that based on 1944 figures 25,000,000 of the 45,000,000 income taxpayers will save less than 83 cents a month under the Knutson plan?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I think those figures are correct. I do not happen to have checked that particular angle of it.

Now, these matters of taxation are important. I think it is wrong to hold out to the public and the business people of this country the hope of a plan of reduction of taxes of 20 percent across the board. I want everybody to know who will really get tax relief under the Knutson plan. It will be true, if that bill becomes law, it will be relief for the greedy and not relief for the needy.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. OWENS. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if one who has been paying 50 times as much taxes in amount as another during the years would not be entitled to have 50 times as much relief.

Mr. EBERHARTER. He may be entitled to 50 times as much relief but not 50 times the amount of taxes paid. I will give the gentleman some figures, under the Knutson plan.

A man who had an income of between thirty-two and thirty-eight thousand dollars would receive a percentage-point decrease in rates of 12.35 percent, whereas the man with an income of between 2,000 and 4,000 dollars would receive a reduction under the Knutson bill of only 4.18 percent. That is not fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER], has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, a man receiving an income of $2,500 would get $19 relief, whereas, a man receiving an income of $100,000 would get $12,460 relief. A man with an income of $250,000 would get $38,095 relief. Would that be in accordance with the principle of ability to pay? Does this Congress want to do something to help the economy of the country or do you just want to give these people who have plenty of money now more relief? Do you want to keep the taxes of those who are struggling to keep their families on a scale which is absolutely necessary in order to give them proper food, housing, and clothing at just about the same level it is today? It sounds very nice to say 20 percent across the board, but you should study the figures.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD two tables from which I have just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, the greatest danger that can happen to business during these times is the uttering of irresponsible statements by persons who are presumed to be in responsible positions. One of the members on the majority side of the Ways and Means Committee stated it was the intention to revise these excise taxes during this year. When questioned, he said that was his own desire and not the desire of the committee.

It is important to my mind to adopt a program insofar as taxation is concerned under which the businessmen of the country and the wage earners can do some long-range planning. The wage earner should know how much is going to be taken out of his weekly pay. Then he can plan as to whether he is going to have some new furniture, some new rugs, a Frigidaire, or an automobile; but with all these contradictory statements, these impossible promises, I submit it is very discouraging to both business and the workingman.

TAX CUT FIRST GOP MOVE—KNUTSON ASKS EARLY ACTION ON 20-PERCENT SLASH—URGES EXCISE LEVY REDUCTION, TOO

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 6.—Republicans moved today to cut 1947 personal income taxes 20 percent, making good their campaign promises immediately following the GOP election landslide.

Representative KNUTSON (Republican, Minnesota), who will be chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, which initiates tax legislation, announced he will introduce a bill to obtain the reduction on the day the new Congress convenes, January 5. KNUTSON's reelection in yesterday's voting was confirmed today with a final tabulation that gave him 50,634 votes to 39,090 for J. Edward Anderson, Democratic Farmer-Labor nominee.

KNUTSON told the Tribune in a statement telephoned from his home at Wadena, Minn., that the new Republican-controlled Congress will pass the bill immediately and save taxpayers $3,000,000,000 despite President Truman's insistence that taxes can't be lowered.

PLAN ANOTHER BILL

Moreover, KNUTSON said, his committee will open public hearings in February on another bill to save the taxpayers' money. Its purpose will be to cut back luxury excise taxes to 1942 levels. It will reduce, and in some cases eliminate, excises on a long list of items that includes jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and liquors. The reductions are to be effective next July 1.

"It is our plan to balance the budget and reduce Federal expenditures for the next fiscal year to $32,000,000,000 as against nearly forty billion the Democrats figured would be required," KNUTSON said.

"On that basis I estimated we could make a 20 percent cut in income taxes and begin at once reducing the national debt by paying off four or five billion dollars next year."

DISMISSAL OF PAYROLLERS

"Under our program of eliminating all unnecessary expenditures, we will cut off several million needless Government employees and turn down appropriations for bureaus that do not need them vitally. We take the position that no expenditures will be made unless they are absolutely necessary."

KNUTSON is expected to succeed Representative DOUGHTON, 83, Democrat, North Carolina, as chairman of the tax framing House committee. KNUTSON has been the committee's ranking Republican.

DOUGHTON has insisted on a policy of cutting Government expenditures while maintaining tax levels high enough to balance the budget.

KNUTSON observed that the customary way to cut taxes is first to cut appropriations. But New Deal waste and extravagance are so notorious, he said, that Republicans have decided to cut taxes first, and thus halt spending.

HE CITES HISTORY

"History repeats itself," he commented. "After the First World War a Republican controlled Congress balanced the Budget, reduced the national debt 36.5 percent in 10 years and at the same time made for reductions in taxes.

"Our immediate goal will be to cut expenditures, balance the Budget, establish a surplus each year to apply on the national debt and grant as much relief to a tax-burdened Nation as sound fiscal policies under governmental economics will permit.

"A sane level of taxation has a direct relationship to increased Government revenue. This and many other traditionally American approaches to full employment, a high level of business activity and lower prices will again prevail."

But the Republican revenue slicing drive may plunge head-on into a Presidential veto. The Democratic administration is committed to a high tax program, contending that stiff rates are needed to balance the budget and begin payments on the $262,000,000,000 national debt.

A two-thirds vote in both the House and Senate would be necessary to override if President Truman exercises his veto power.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass. of October 21, 1946]

GOP FISCAL POLICY IN HOUSE SET BY TAX STUDY COMMITTEE

WASHINGTON, October 21.—A statement signed by all Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee sets the GOP fiscal goal in the next Congress as a budget trimmed to between $32,000,000,000 and $33,000,000,000, a $5,000,000,000 reduction in the national debt, a reduction in personal income taxes of 20 percent, and downward adjustments in Federal excise taxes.

The statement is the work of 27 House Republican members, including all members of the Ways and Means Committee, and known as the House Republican Postwar Tax Study Committee. It includes Representative HAROLD KNUTSON, Republican, of Minnesota, the next chairman of the Ways and Means Committee if Republicans control the House.

The statement, forecast in the Christian Science Monitor last Friday, criticizes by name Mariner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, John T. Steelman, Reconversion Director, and William Wirtz, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, all of whom have recently argued that tax reduction would be inflationary at present.

TRIO CRITICIZED

The Republican statement criticizes the trio as self-appointed advisers on tax policies in the executive branch of the Government.

It has been learned here that Representative JOHN TABER, Republican, of New York, who will become chairman of the House Appropriations Committee if the GOP captures the Chamber, plans to come to Washington promptly in event of Republican victory. He foresees a Federal budget for the 1948 fiscal year of not more than $30,000,000,000. This contrasts with an expected President Truman January estimate of Federal expenditures of $35,000,000,000.

A 20-percent cut in 1947 personal taxes would amount to around $3,500,000,000 or $3,750,000,000, it is estimated. Wartime excise tax elimination, it is calculated, would cut off another $1,250,000,000.

The new congressional streamlining bill directs particular interest to advance discussions of Federal finances, because a new weapon has been given to Congress to make advance budget estimates take effect.

FISCAL COORDINATION

The new law for the first time coordinates taxes and spending. Total Government income will be calculated to start with and spending made dependent on that. Taxing and appropriation committees of both Houses of Congress are required to coordinate their work, first by reporting on expected Federal income and then by setting expenditures accordingly.

If the House is captured by Republicans the fiscal program may be the first big legislative issue after the election and a test of the ability of the two parties to cooperate under a Democratic President.

The four committees involved are the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, Senate Finance, and House Ways and Means Committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DOMENGEAUX].

Mr. DOMENGEAUX. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the very unfortunate combination of circumstances confronting thousands of trappers and farmer-trappers in Louisiana, and particularly the danger they face to their industry as a result of this bill to restore the 20 percent excise tax on furs after July 1 of this year.

There has been a severe recession in the retail sale of manufactured fur coats. This began in September of last year and has left large stocks in the hands of the manufacturers. The postwar reaction and readjustment can be blamed in part, but the principal reason is the exorbitant wartime tax of 20 percent which attaches to every sale of a muskrat coat. With this increased cost to the buyer, purchase resistance is greater than has ever been experienced in the fur trade, even during the worst years of the depression, and the manufacturers, finding themselves with such large inventories, are not buying raw furs. Consequently, the trapper is now realizing less than 50 percent of the amount he received for his furs in the previous trapping season.

The situation is further aggravated by the fact that the reduction in sales of muskrat coats, because of the heavy tax, has brought about large numbers of bankruptcies among coat manufacturers and their stocks are thus thrown on the market at liquidation prices, reducing drastically the value of skins to the remaining sound firms.

With the trapper's return now averaging about 60 cents for his muskrats, as compared with $1.40 last year, and with the trade situation in such a deplorable state as mentioned above, it is evident that something should and must be done to restore this industry to its rightful position. It is unanimously agreed and publicly stated by the various national organizations of fur dealers, manufacturers, and brokers, and by many large national retail agencies, that the reduction of the tax on furs would be the only step necessary to spur the industry to renew activity and bring added value to the trapper's product.

Weather conditions have contributed to the troubles of the trappers, making it all the more necessary that he be able to secure greater revenue from the skins he sells. An unprecedented period of warm weather has extended from early last fall to the present time, making the season unsatisfactory for trapping purposes. The natural development of muskrats and other furs has been so retarded that the catch has been cut at least in half. Those muskrats being caught are so poor in quality, because of the warm weather, their value has been greatly reduced.

Unless the value of his product can be increased, the trapper will find himself pretty much beyond help. His grocery bills are 50 percent higher than they were last year; traps that cost him $4 a dozen before the war have cost him as much as $20 a dozen this season; boots that were $5 a pair before war days have risen to $12; while lumber and other items required for the building of his camp are about 300 percent higher than the previous year. Against all this, compare the fact that he is receiving even less than prewar figures for his muskrats, and you will realize the plight he is in.

It should be kept in mind that all through the war and even up to August 1946 the national administration, through the Office of Price Administration, took the position that furs made from muskrat skins are cost-of-living items, not luxuries; that the large volume product of the American trapper is the muskrat; and that muskrat coats are purchased by average wage earners. I am not going to make any argument here for the reduction of taxes on Russian sables, mink coats, or fur garments selling for more, for example, than $300. But surely the luxury tax should not be continued on an item that the Government itself says is a cost-of-living article of clothing.

In view of the situation I have outlined, it is only fair and practical that any move to extend the wartime tax on furs be defeated by Congress.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, I know that music is forbidden in this Hall, but somehow or other I seem to hear the faint strains of the Gay Little Men on the Flying Trapeze: "They float through the air with the greatest of ease, those gay little men on the flying trapeze." It takes me back many years to when I was a boy and my father took me to the circus. At that time I saw the world's greatest acrobats, the Flying DeMarcos, who did a triple somersault in reverse off the back of an elephant. To think that I should live to see the day when there was a greater act—an elephant, itself, doing three backflips in a space of 5 seconds.

During the discussion of this bill there has been a great deal of loose talk by Members of the majority in referring to the excise taxes as luxury taxes. I think their use of the word "luxury" has been deliberate in an attempt to mislead, because if any Member of this House studies the bill he will find that the greater part of taxes on individual units are upon necessities and not upon luxuries. He will find that it taxes many of the vital necessities of every day life. The things that are necessary that we purchase if we are to live. The majority has been very careful not to state that 85 percent of the excise taxes covered in this measure will come from the pocketbooks of individuals and families earning less than $4,000 a year. The mother going to the drug store to buy baby oil for her child is compelled to pay under the terms of this measure a tax of 20 percent. The same is true of foot powders. Women's handbags which are just as much a necessity to a woman as a hat is to a man are taxed 20 percent regardless of whether they cost 59 cents or $59. Under the terms of this measure a man can go to the race track and approach the parimutuel window and make a bet of $100 or $1,000, either of which I believe to be an absolute luxury, yet he is taxed only 5 percent. But if he goes to the drug store to purchase a lipstick for his wife or an alarm clock then again he is confronted with the 20 percent tax. Luggage, an item which no one buys for home decoration or for the sake of vanity, but which is purchased only as an absolute necessity, has added to its cost an additional 20 percent under the terms of this measure. That is why when this rule was being discussed I asked you to vote the rule down and bring this bill before the House under an open rule so that we could take it up section by section and item by item and know just what we were doing.

I suppose before the debate closes, as my colleague from Pennsylvania has suggested, some reference will be made by the majority to the tax bill known as H. R. 1, sponsored by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. They will, no doubt, tell you that when they take up that measure they will save the working people of this country many, many dollars. Let me tell you, my friends, that H. R. 1 will be of no benefit to any individual who earns less than $10,000 a year. On the other hand, if there is an honest and sincere revision of the excise tax laws, if there is a striking out of taxes on those things which are necessities, if there is a lowering of the rate on those that are semi-necessities, the man with a family receiving $5,000 or under a year will have a greater saving than he would under the so-called Knutson bill.

The eyes of the Nation are upon you. This is really the first official act of the Eightieth Congress. Do not think for a moment that the people of the country are going to be pleased by the passage of an excise tax bill over which they grumbled but forgave during the war years. The bill was passed during the hysteria of war and at a time when our national income and our people's salaries were at the highest. Now the majority intends to put new facets upon this measure and to extend it not for 6 months, not for a year, but for an indefinite period which in legislative life usually means forever.

On January 6 I introduced into this House H. R. 467, the purpose of which was to bring all excise taxes back to their prewar level. I did this for two reasons: First, because I felt that the existing excise-tax laws were unjust and were placing too great a penalty upon the mass of our people; and, second, because the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Minnesota, had recently said during the months of November and December that his first act upon taking office would be to bring about a revision of the excise-tax law.

The gentleman at that time said that he felt by revising these laws, production and sales would be increased and that the Government tax structure would be strengthened, due to the increased volume. On January 7, one day after the introduction of my bill, the gentleman from Minnesota informed both the Associated and United Press that he was in favor of the legislation and that he would see to it that it was given a hearing. Today, his actions are not in line with his statements of November, December, or January.

It was surprising to me to hear the gentlemen of the majority claiming that they had to take this reversal because of the increased cost of Government. Most of them have been here for many years, and they know that the Government is an expensive thing to run, especially in these hectic postwar times. They further know that the Government cannot be run without taxes. They also knew this during the campaign back in October and November; but with the strong desire that they possessed to be elected and to take control of the Congress, they made promises that their subconscious minds knew could not be kept, and they thought that perhaps they could put off the day of reckoning. Today is the day of judgment. They stand before the Nation in the first days of their administration with a broken promise that will be costly to every man and woman in the Republic.

In conclusion, may I suggest to the Members of the House that this bill be recommitted so that the committee can give it further consideration, so that the committee will have ample time to strike out the unreasonable features and inequities that exist, and so that it may be brought before this House with an open rule where amendments and deletions can be made.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, in 1943 the Congress, at the request of President Roosevelt, passed an act levying certain excise taxes on beverage alcoholic liquors, furs, and on many other so-called luxuries. It was provided in the act that these excise taxes would terminate 6 months after the President or a joint resolution of Congress should declare that hostilities were at an end. The President, on December 31, 1946, issued a Proclamation declaring hostilities at an end and therefore, these levies of excise taxes would terminate June 30, 1947. Many business people and others have urged that this measure be permitted to expire on June 30, 1947, but the President, in his recent annual message to Congress and in his Budget message, urged that these taxes be continued beyond June 30, 1947. The Treasury Department joined in this request. If this Act is repealed it will take away approximately $1,267,000,000 annually in taxes. The Congress is confronted with a condition and not a theory.

The President has informed the Congress that there will be a deficit for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946, and ending June 30, 1947, of approximately $2,000,000,000. If there is a deficit, then this Nation will have had 17 consecutive years of deficits. For 17 consecutive years our expenditures have been greater than the receipts, and today we are confronted with fixed obligations of the Government amounting to $260,000,000,000 and with many billions of undetermined liabilities and with the highest taxes of any period of this Nation's history. We all agree that the Budget must be balanced if we preserve the financial integrity and the economic stability of this Nation. A substantial sum must be paid to reduce our national debt. This action will create confidence in the stability of our Government and there must be a reduction of taxes. We must cut out all unnecessary expenditures, cut out unnecessary bureaus, commissions, and agencies, and take about a million of unnecessary officeholders off the pay roll. There can be no balancing of the Budget, no payment on the national debt, or reduction of taxes unless and until our expenditures are substantially less than our income. It is a real threat to our country to continue to expend more than we take in.

The new Congress inherited these tremendous obligations and the conditions that now confront the country from those who are today attempting to criticize the Republicans in Congress for not immediately reducing these luxury war taxes.

There are other excise taxes being collected from the people on almost everything they consume. There are heavy individual income taxes. The President urges that the whole subject of excise taxes be thoroughly reviewed by the Congress, and I believe the Congress will review all excise taxes, including those covered by the bill before us, and it will include individual income taxes as well as corporation taxes, and then we shall be able to draft and pass a tax bill that will meet the requirements of our Government and which will be fair to the American people. This measure was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. There was a unanimous and favorable report. While some of our Democrat friends on that great committee now talk long and loud about this measure, not one of them cast his vote against reporting this bill favorably. The Rules Committee, without a dissenting vote, favorably reported a resolution to make this bill in order, and I dare say when the vote is taken this evening or tomorrow that this measure is passed by a vote of 10 or 12 to 1.

I certainly take no pleasure in voting to retain these taxes. The President and the Treasury Department say that we must have these taxes at this time. I am voting for this extension, not as a permanent measure but extending it for a time so that the whole excise-tax structure, as well as our other taxes, may be fully reviewed, and we then can act more intelligently as to what tax and what amounts may be reduced or cut out entirely. I made the prediction years ago that so long as the Democrats remained in power they would increase taxes and increase the national debt. Almost every year while they were in power they brought in and passed a new tax bill, either creating new taxes or increasing other taxes. As usual, the Republicans now must clean up the mess that they have inherited from the Democrats. Of course, we cannot tell exactly what taxes we can reduce and what we can cut out until we find out to what extent we can correct the squandering and spending policy of the present administration.

For the first year of peacetime the President informs us that we will take in taxes from the American people amounting to approximately $40,000,000,000. This is not due to any policy or fault of the Republicans. The administration this same fiscal year will spend approximately $42,000,000,000. That will leave a deficit for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946, and ending June 30, 1947, of approximately $2,000,000,000. We are spending many more times this year than was ever expended in any year in peacetime since the founding of this Government and we are collecting many more times in taxes the amount of taxes collected in any peacetime year in the history of this Government. The American people are now reaping the unwise and wasteful policy created since the Democrats took control of the Congress in March 1931, and during which time we had the policy of tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect, but the dance is now over and the American people must pay the fiddler.

I was a Member of Congress beginning March 4, 1919, and we found the same condition after 8 years of the Wilson administration. A Republican Congress did begin reducing taxes and reduced them every year for at least 10 years and paid approximately $10,000,000,000 on our national debt. It is the policy of the present Republican Congress to cut out taxes, reduce taxes and reduce our national debt, encourage private enterprise, and create jobs.

When the roll is called I shall be interested in seeing how many of our Democratic friends who have spoken against this resolution cast their votes in favor of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Chairman, the action we shall take today is really a preliminary report to the Nation on what Congress intends to do to relieve the tax burden on our people. I had hoped that some of the luxury taxes might be abolished at once, particularly since there is a period of uncertainty for both businessmen and consumers. With a date set in the near future for the taking off of certain taxes, it is difficult to see how prudent buyers would make their purchases and pay the tax when by waiting they could avoid the tax. An indefinite extension of luxury taxes at this time will at least have the result of letting everybody concerned know where they stand and what to expect.

This problem, together with the question of a reduction in income taxes, the balancing of the Budget and a start to pay off something on the national debt, is all dependent upon the fundamental problem of cutting down the cost of Government. Unless we show a disposition to attack that fundamental problem with a determination to cut drastically, then there is little hope for any material lessening of the tax burden at this time.

A reduction of the Federal income tax involves careful study and research to see how the reduction may be made to apply most equitably to different income brackets. We should adopt a course calculated to best insure stimulation to business and increasing the income of workers through maximum production.

The situation as to portal-to-portal pay also comes into the picture and must have early attention. I do not see how it is possible to even consider a tax reduction bill while this portal pay is unsettled.

But we inevitably come back again to the problem which underlies all the others—a substantial reduction in the cost of Government. Not only must there be an elimination of waste and extravagance, but also many activities which, though desirable, are not necessary, must be cut out. It will call for real qualities of statesmanship. It will be hard to resist the demands of those who will insist that the particular activity in which they are interested must be let alone. We know what the country is expecting of us. The people want taxes reduced, the budget balanced, and payments started on the national debt. All this can be done without seriously impairing a single essential function of Government.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, although I am voting for the bill to continue certain war excise tax rates in effect, I want to call attention to the inequities which exist in connection with excise taxes and which must be studied and corrected. For example, fur coats selling for as little as $32.50 carry a 20-percent tax, as pointed out by small retail furriers in my district. Certainly a $32.50 fur coat is not a luxury. But oriental rugs selling for as much as $2,450 each carry no excise tax whatever.

I shall do my utmost to see that the whole field of excise taxes is reviewed, and that people in the middle-income level are treated fairly. We must recognize that even if we bring the budget down drastically, as is now proposed, it will still be huge, in view of the billions we need for veterans' rehabilitation, essential Government services to which we are committed, and an Army and Navy adequate to our position in today's troubled world. To pay these billions and yet to do our utmost to ease the strain of heavy income taxes on people in the middle-income levels, like those in my district, we must review all excise taxes promptly. We must be honest with ourselves and have a sense of responsibility to the Nation, hence the necessity for passing this bill now to keep Government income intact until the budget can be cut and the whole tax structure reviewed to make it fair to people of modest means. I shall do my utmost to bring about this result.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to vote against H. R. 1030, a bill to continue in effect the war excise tax rates.

The measure is extended for an indefinite period. I think this is wrong. An expiration date should be fixed. The argument is made that this would place dealers and producers of the articles coming under the excise tax in an uncertain position. I think, however, the failure to provide an expiration date also leaves the trades in an uncertain position. They will not be able to make their commitments ahead any better than if there were an expiration date.

This bill has been brought in here without any hearings—under a gag rule. This means that no amendments can be offered or other changes made in the bill. This is an objectionable feature.

Furthermore, I think there are some gross inconsistencies in the projected tax program. There is just as much reason for reducing or removing some of the taxes that come under the excise-tax provision as there is for reducing the income tax. The excise tax covers many commonly used and necessary articles, such as toilet preparations, substances that go into the formation of medicines, automobile tires, tubes, electric-light bulbs, and many other articles. There is no reason why, in my opinion, sufficient time could not have been given to consideration of these items.

Legislation such as this is somewhat questionable because it singles out special groups. It is doubtful whether this is an equitable taxing procedure.

There is no way of telling how long these excise taxes will remain on the statute books if the bill passes. Furthermore, I can hardly consider the procedure in connection with this measure and some of the provisions in the bill as being in accordance with campaign promises made by my party last fall.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROPHY].

Mr. BROPHY. Mr. Chairman, while we are talking about excise taxes, I believe it is the proper time to call attention of the House to a situation which needs attention.

The district I have the honor to represent, the Fourth Congressional District of Wisconsin, and the adjoining district represented by my colleague the Honorable CHARLES J. KERSTEN, the Fifth Congressional District of Wisconsin, represents one of the largest beer-producing areas in our country.

The beer industry means thousands of jobs in the breweries in Wisconsin and in the Nation.

It is a major industry.

While the beer imports have been small in comparison to our national production, the facts are that these imports do have an effect on the brewery business on the Mexican border, and in cities like Detroit, Buffalo, and other border cities. The imports have for years been double the exports.

There are two important questions that must be answered:

First. If the import duty is $7.75 per barrel with no excise tax added and the domestic excise tax levied by the Bureau of Internal Revenue is continued at $8 per barrel what will be the import situation when normal production is again resumed?

Second. What will be the situation in the brewery business in the United States if the duty is reduced by 50 percent as is now being proposed by the State Department? Will the workers in the breweries in America have more or fewer jobs if the State Department decides to reduce the import duty on beer to $3.87½ per barrel? This is important and should have immediate attention.

The following is from pages 29 and 30 of the Tariff Commission's Digest of the Beer Situation:

Rate reduced to 50 cents per gallon ($11.50 per barrel) under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, effective February 1935, and to 25 cents per gallon ($7.75 per barrel) in trade agreement with Mexico, effective January 1943.

The United States is the world's largest producer of fermented malt liquors. During the calendar years 1937–39 United States production (withdrawals) averaged somewhat less than 55,000,000 barrels (of 31 gallons) annually. During the war, despite many restrictions and regulations, production increased, and in 1945 was 82,000,000 barrels, much the largest quantity ever produced. New York is the largest and Pennsylvania and Wisconsin the second and third producing States; these three States produce nearly 40 percent of the United States total.

During and since the war the imports of beer have been much larger than in the prewar years. Imports in 1944 were 259,000 barrels and in 1945 they were 303,000 barrels. These imports have come chiefly from Mexico and Canada. The imports from Mexico have usually been consumed close to the border; they comprise a significant proportion of the consumption in that area.

Unlike distilled liquors, imported beer is not subject to the internal-revenue tax, and whatever protection is afforded to domestic producers by the duty is to be measured by the difference between the duty and the internal-revenue tax.

The present duty, under the 1943 agreement with Mexico, is one-half that fixed under section 336, and one-fourth of the rate provided by the Tariff Act of 1930. The present rate is somewhat less than the internal-revenue tax, so that the protection to the domestic brewers is negative.

Under unanimous consent, I include as a part of my remarks pages 29 and 30 of the Tariff Commission's Digest of the beer situation:

COMMENT

The United States is the world's largest producer of fermented malt liquors. In this country the industry is on a large scale and is highly mechanized. During the calendar years 1937–39 United States production (withdrawals) averaged somewhat less than 55,000,000 barrels (of 31 gallons) annually. During the war, despite many restrictions and regulations, production increased, and in 1945 was 82,000,000 barrels, much the largest quantity ever produced. Production centers in areas of large population. New York is the largest and Pennsylvania and Wisconsin the second and third producing States; these three States produce nearly 40 percent of the United States total. Other large producing States are Ohio, Missouri, California, Illinois, New Jersey, and Michigan.

For the most part beer production and distribution is a localized industry. Beer is bulky, and the costs of bottles, bottling, and delivery are high relative to the cost of manufacturing (more than 60 percent of the beer marketed is sold in bottles). Many breweries have their own marketing and delivery service; only a few of the large producing concerns have a Nation-wide distribution.

Compared with domestic production, imports of malt liquors have always been very small. In the immediate prewar years they constituted about one-fifth of 1 percent of the consumption. At that time imports consisted largely of specialties, including well-known brands of ale, porter, and stout from Eire and the United Kingdom and well-known brands of beer from Germany, Czechoslovakia, and the Netherlands. All the imported malt beverages from the countries mentioned commanded considerably higher prices in the United States than even the highest grades of domestic beer. There were in the prewar period very small imports of ordinary-type beer from Japan, Mexico, and Canada.

During and since the war the imports of beer have been much larger than in the prewar years. Imports in 1944 were 259,000 barrels and in 1945 they were 303,000 barrels. Even so, they amounted to less than one-half of 1 percent of the total consumption of the country. These imports have come chiefly from Mexico and Canada and have consisted chiefly of ordinary-type beer. The imports from Mexico have usually been consumed close to the border; though small, they comprise a significant proportion of the consumption in that area.

United States exports of beer have always been very small. In the immediate prewar period they were on the average equal to about one-third of the imports, in quantity, but about one-fourth in value. During the war exports increased considerably but were still much smaller than imports. Prewar exports went largely to the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone, with smaller quantities to numerous other destinations.

Unlike distilled liquors, imported beer is not subject to the internal revenue tax, and whatever protection is afforded to domestic producers by the duty is to be measured by the difference between the duty and the internal revenue tax. The following table compares the internal revenue tax and the duty in effect at the end of year since the repeal of prohibition, during which a change occurred in either the tax or the duty.

As of Dec. 31—	Dollars per barrel			Cents per gallon
	Duty	Internal revenue tax	Margin of protection	Duty	Internal revenue tax	Margin of protection
1934	31.00	5.00	26.00	100	16.1	* 83.9
1935	15.50	5.00	10.50	50	16.1	33.9
1940	15.50	6.00	9.50	50	19.4	30.6
1942	15.50	7.00	8.50	50	22.6	27.4
1943	7.75	7.00	.75	25	22.6	2.4
1944	7.75	8.00	−.25	25	25.8	−.8

The present duty, under the 1943 agreement with Mexico, is one-half that fixed under section 336, and one-fourth of the rate provided by the Tariff Act of 1930, which, however, was fixed during the prohibition period and had, therefore, little significance. The present rate is somewhat less than the internal-revenue tax, so that the protection to the domestic brewers is negative. Under present law the internal-revenue tax is to be reduced to $7 per barrel 6 months after the termination of the war is officially proclaimed (not yet proclaimed November 1946); the present duty would exceed that rate of tax by 75 cents per barrel.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the matter of gag rule. I heard that term used a moment ago with reference to the bill before us. Later, I want to explore it a bit, not that I am complaining of bringing this measure in under a gag rule. I understand why it must be done. I am going to look into the history of restrictive rules for revenue measures.

I heard one gentleman say a moment ago that we ought not to vote against this bill because we should not forgive $1,130,000,000 in taxes. I feel compelled to vote for it and I shall vote for this bill today, although I do wish we could have a redefining of luxury taxes. Certainly, I am not in favor of forgiving $1,130,000,000 worth of taxes, considering the financial conditions of our country. I was not in favor of forgiving $7,500,000,000 of taxes 2 years ago under the Ruml plan. Therefore I shall vote for this bill and not forgive these taxes, because we must meet our obligations toward paying the public debt and balancing the Budget. Let me make it clear I will not vote in favor of continuing these excise taxes merely in order to make it possible to have another bill (H. R. 1) brought in here reducing taxes 20 percent across the board. I do not favor such degree of reduction as that now, nor that kind of tax reduction, so I am giving notice beforehand that I shall vote against any such proposal with the same emphasis that I now vote in favor of continuing these necessary taxes.

With permission to extend my remarks I would like to expand a little bit on the various points I have just raised. This measure does come before us under a restricted rule which is commonly called a "gag rule." As I said I do not disapprove of such restriction on revenue bills of this type, but I do think the country ought to know why we use such a rule for how long the House has been using it. When I first came to Congress under a Democratic majority I heard such limited rules referred to as "gag rules" and at first I was horrified to think that my party was resorting to such. It eased my mind somewhat at that time to learn that earlier a Republican majority had followed the same practice and now today I heard it said that the Republican majority in bringing in such a rule were merely following a practice prevailing under the New Deal. Well, who started this practice anyhow?

As I say I think it is a necessary practice whose origin I would really like to learn. We were told that the great Ohio statesman whose birthday we honor today with the red carnation was a leading Member of Congress in his day and generation. If my memory serves me right, he was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee about a half century ago. He may have found it wise at that time to ask for a limited rule in bringing in such bills as the one before us. The point I am trying to make is that some degree of "gag rule" has been found necessary in the consideration of revenue bills no matter what party is in power and I am unable to say which party started the practice.

As I said I shall vote for this bill today although reluctantly because of many inequities in it. I think many things are taxed as luxuries which are not luxuries at all. It is only because we must work toward balancing the budget and taking care of the great national debt that we are obliged to retain these excise taxes for at least the period of prosperity which the country is now enjoying. Talk about forgiving $1,130,000,000 in prospective taxes! Well I would be willing to forgive such taxes on electric light bulbs and other such necessary articles I could name but even if we forgave the whole of these taxes it would be far less unjustified than the thing we were guilty of in 1943–4 when Congress forgave seven and a half billion dollars of due and accrued taxes under the modified Ruml Plan. Forgiving or canceling anticipated revenue is not so bad as forgiving due and accrued taxes.

Much as I regret the necessity of keeping these taxes, at least for a time, I am all the more determined that keeping them shall not furnish an excuse for a later bill such as H. R. 1 which would make a horizontal reduction of 20 percent across the board in individual income taxes. I cannot help who has promised any such 20 percent reduction, I can see no justice in it and I can certainly see no wisdom in it, for it would benefit the rich to a far greater advantage than it would benefit the poor. I doubt the wisdom of any tax reduction during prosperity until we have made arrangements about the budget and about the debt, and when it appears that some reduction can be made through taxation I shall favor such a reduction that will benefit the greatest number of the little people of our Nation. Therefore, I repeat that I shall oppose such a horizontal cut as would continue such inequities as now exists.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute.

Judging by the quality of the remarks we hear on the other side, one would almost think we were on the eve of another election.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot favorably embrace this bill; first, because there is no termination date to these war taxes. The President wisely suggested that these excise taxes be continued for 1 year past their present expiration date, but now these excise taxes will go on forever, like Tennyson's Brook.

I cannot embrace this bill likewise because there is no distinction between necessities and luxuries. Certainly every one of us uses the telegraph, the telephone, the radio, and the cable facilities. The whole Nation uses those facilities. It is highly unwise to continue the tax on such facilities. They are sheer necessities.

By this bill you continue the tax on tires and inner tubes. I defy anyone to say that tubes and tires are not necessities. You tax electrical energy. You continue to tax yourselves every time you go on a railroad, every time you go in an airplane. This Nation is practically on wheels. We are always traveling. Traveling is a necessity, necessary to the national economy, yet you continue the tax on that kind of necessity.

Ask your wife whether she wants you to tax her on her handbags or luggage. Ask her whether she wants you to tax her on toilet soap. Since when is rouge and lipstick not a necessity in this Nation in this day and age? Yes, these necessary articles are taxed—taxed not for 1 year but for all time.

Further, a tax of this sort is very much like a sales tax. It develops sales resistance. Taxes of this sort hit the neediest the hardest. Rich and poor pay alike. It is contrary to the theory that we should tax according to ability to pay. We could stand these taxes in the war emergency, but peace is at hand. That should make a great difference. You will never get out of these taxes $1,130,000,000. Take the fur situation. New York is the greatest fur mart of the world. Furs have tumbled in price. There was recently a very large bankruptcy in New York, the Monty Eitegen Co., and the results and repercussions of that bankruptcy have destroyed all values in furs. Raw furs are down 50 percent.

What is the situation with whisky and liquors? The shelves of all retailers are sagging with liquor because of sales resistance. Now you intensify that sales resistance.

Jewelry has been reduced in price generally from 25 to 50 percent.

While you got over $1,130,000,000 last year on these excise taxes, lay no flattering unction to your souls that you are going to get the same amount or even an amount approaching that the next fiscal year. You just will not get it. Therefore, your well-laid plans of using these excise taxes as a fulcrum to climb on any sort of political bandwagon to reduce the income taxes 20 percent across the board will go glimmering. It just will not happen, because I venture the assertion that you will not raise a half billion dollars with these excise taxes because of deflated prices during the next fiscal year. There should have been a segregation of so-called luxury articles and services. Continue the wartime taxes on cabarets; on billard and pool tables, on pistols and revolvers; on firearms, shells, and cartridges; on spirits; on silver-plated flatware, on jewelry and expensive furs and expensive admissions. Free inexpensive furs and inexpensive admissions of any wartime taxes. Cheap furs are a necessity in the north. Cheap movie seats should bear no wartime tax.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania bandied some figures about with reference to the amount of money which might be saved in certain income-tax brackets which sounded very good to the unthinking. Because of his having made that statement, I feel I should say a few words in answer to his figures.

There have been some suggestions that rather than provide tax relief straight across the board we should graduate the tax reduction so that there will be a larger percentage cut for those in the lower brackets than for those in the medium and higher brackets.

In this connection I ask permission to place in the RECORD at this point certain figures which I have compiled on the cut in spendable income in various tax brackets in the past few years.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Net taxable income	1932		1946		1932 to 1946 decline in net spendable income
	Total Federal taxes	Net spendable income after taxes	Total Federal taxes	Net spendable income after taxes
						Percent
$2,000	None	$2,000	$190	$1,810	$190	9.50
$5,000	$100	4,900	798	4,202	698	14.24
$10,000	480	9,520	2,185	7,815	1,705	17.91
$25,000	2,520	22,480	9,082	15,918	6,562	29.19
$50,000	8,600	41,400	24,795	25,205	16,195	39.12
$100,000	30,100	69,900	63,127	36,873	33,027	47.25

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, a study of these figures shows that during the war there has been such a great reduction in spendable income for those in the medium and higher brackets that still further discrimination now seems unjust.

It must also be remembered that to a large extent any savings in these brackets will be used for purposes which will mean more production and more employment; therefore, such reduction in the long run will result in little loss of revenue.

I am inclined to agree that the future of our country would be best served at this time by a cut which in general goes across the board.

The present tax structure discourages initiative. There is no possible way that anyone starting from scratch can save enough to provide for his old age. His future lies either in becoming a ward of the Federal Government or a recipient of largesse from some great corporation.

But what of the man who wants to be free, to be independent, to set up his own business?

I do not look forward to a Nation of gigantic corporations with every man an employee. Our country has been built up by the small independent businessman. He should be encouraged, not discouraged.

Any tax structure that stifles initiative and makes it impossible for a man of ability to provide for the future security of himself and his family has in it the seeds of totalitarianism.

Of course, we should never forget the welfare of the common man, but neither should we place too great handicaps on the uncommon man, for we must remember that it is chiefly through his initiative and his imagination that the general well-being is advanced.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this bill is about to close. Under the rule under which this bill was brought to the floor, only the committee may offer amendments. It is clear that the committee does not intend to offer any amendments. I regret that such is the case.

The raising of fur-bearing animals has become an important industry in my State. Fur farmers have large investments in breeding stock and in their equipment. The tax which this bill continues will, in my opinion, prove disastrous to producers of furs. I am reliably advised that 50 percent of last year's pelt crop is in storage, waiting for a market, and there has been little or no market for most of this year's production. Fur garments for millions of people are a necessity and not a luxury. One in a million might purchase a fur coat costing many thousands of dollars, and, in such a case, it could well be considered a luxury, but, on the other hand, for the millions of people who purchase fur garments costing a few hundred dollars it is an everyday necessity and by no means a luxury. It seems to me that the committee could exempt from the tax garments costing several hundred dollars and within the reach of millions of people.

After the House passes this bill today, it will go over to the other body, and I am hopeful that its Committee on Finance will grant relief to the fur farmers of the country. Without question, their industry is in a deplorable condition. A reduction in the tax, or an exemption on those garments costing less than a reasonable amount, would afford a measure of relief to the people engaged in that industry.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, while I recognize the necessity for continuing taxes in order to reduce the national debt and to balance the budget, I do not think that there is a necessity for making a tax bill inequitable.

The committee brought this bill before the House with a rule which prevented any Member of Congress from offering amendments. It was a case of "take what we offer you or nothing." Too often this same rule has been adhered to on tax measures.

Many of the necessities of life are still burdened with wartime taxes. If they were luxuries, one could have no objection; but here is a bill that does not discriminate. Moreover, this bill continues these taxes indefinitely. Is there to be no relief from taxes for business or the consumer? Is it to be just as this bill says—indefinite? To my mind that means permanent.

A simple reduction in taxes on the necessities of life would go toward reducing the cost of living, which has been mounting since the elimination of price controls. Since there is such an urgent need for reduction in the cost of living, is it not a fair assumption that we should start with Government taxes on the necessities? This bill will continue taxes which were tolerated during the war. It amounts to nothing more than a sales tax. I could not in conscience support such a measure without an opportunity to amend it in order to correct the inequities which exist in it. All this talk by the majority party about reducing taxes—it would be well for them to practice a little justice in the tax bills they do draw up.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any committee amendments?

Mr. KNUTSON. There are none, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee does now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1030, pursuant to House Resolution 70, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 374, nays 35, not voting 22, as follows:

REMOVAL OF TROOPS FROM CHINA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the administration has removed all of our troops from China—which would be fine if it did not endanger the safety of the United States—but it seems to me that this is an extremely serious step to have taken at this time and means just one thing, that is that the administration is leaving the affairs of China and millions of persons to communistic control. I can see no other answer to that and I feel it should be investigated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rabbi Max Raisin, pastor emeritus, B'Nai Jeshurun, Paterson, N. J., offered the following prayer:

We rise to offer prayer to Almighty God as this august lawmaking body is about to resume its labors. We do so with hearts filled with gratitude for the manifold mercies Thou hast shown to our beloved land and the American people. Thou hast prospered our work materially and spiritually, and in the grim struggle through which we have just passed Thou hast strengthened our arms and hast finally blest us with victory. We pray that we may continue to enjoy the favor of Thy guidance and inspiration that these United States may go on from spiritual strength to spiritual strength and from moral triumph to moral triumph.

May we prove ourselves no less strong in peace than in war. May we organize for peace wisely, with stout hearts and unflinching spirits, and may we, as a nation, so live as to set an example of fair dealing and righteous living, of charity and compassion, to the end that international peace become a permanent condition, and men everywhere will dwell in peace and security, each under his vine and fig tree, with none to make him afraid.

O God, we thank Thee for the new hope kindled in the world that mankind may now look to an era of brotherliness and good will. Let us not, through selfishness or folly, dim the vision for a better and happier world now cherished by countless millions. Teach us to be at peace with ourselves and with one another. Sanctify us through Thy commandments as we perform them day by day, and may we of this blessed land apply ourselves steadfastly to the healing of the wounds and the rebuilding of the shattered lives of our fellow men in less fortunate lands.

Bless the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet. Bless the Senate, this House of Representatives, the judiciary, and all who are connected with the Government. Bless them all with health and strength of body and with wisdom and fortitude of spirit, that they may carry on worthily and fittingly the important tasks of their exalted offices. Through their efforts, may this Government become ever more a government of laws, laws nobly conceived, wisely framed, and affording the largest amount of good to the largest number of people. In Thee we trust, O Father, and may the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER AND PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Indiana give us the program for next week?

Mr. HALLECK. As I have discussed with the minority leader, it is our plan to meet Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week. The Committee on the Judiciary is beginning hearings on the portal-to-portal measure on Monday. It is possible, and I express the hope, that the Committee on the Judiciary will have ready for consideration on Thursday of next week legislation to limit the tenure of office of the Presidency to two terms.

The only other matters that I can see that might come before the House in the way of legislation would be that pertaining to certain committee operations; that is, with respect to providing of funds for committees and possibly something in the nature of subpena power for committees and special committees.

Mr. RAYBURN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until Monday next, the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive messages from the Senate and the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills duly passed by the two Houses which have been examined by the Committee on House Administration and found duly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I believe in a short time we are going to find the answer to the question, raised by the report in the daily statement of the United States Treasury that we are in debt $259,000,000,000 or more, as to where we are going to get the money to pay off this great debt. It seems to me now that the effort that is being put forth in getting the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House together with the members of the appropriate committees of the Senate to determine just the amount of money we should spend before we spend it is the only sound, sensible way to do business. In that way we will eventually get a balanced budget. When we get a balanced budget, then we will start to pay off the enormous debt that has been created during the past 15 years. It is about time we realize it is our duty as Members of Congress, and every Member of Congress should do his best, to cut down any unnecessary expenditure of Government funds.

Daniel Driscoll that appeared in the Boston Pilot.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the press carries the statement that President Truman is considering suggesting to Congress the advisability of legislation which, stripped of technical language, is designed, as I understand it, to call attention to one of the commands chiseled by Moses on the tablets of stone which he gave to the children of Israel.

The Lord's command, as I recall, was a simple one. It was "Thou shalt not steal."

It is not only amazing but disheartening, depressed, and discouraging to learn that the sense of common decency, ordinary honesty, fidelity to public duty of at least one former Cabinet member has sunk so low that attention must be called to the fact that a member of the Cabinet retained in public office by the President took with him when he resigned words, writings, papers prepared in public office and at public expense. With as much propriety might the guest in a hotel take with him the sheets, the pillowcases, the towels, the soap, the silverware and the napkins.

Rumor has it that another Cabinet official, when he by request stepped out, took with him certain papers which it is alleged are the property of Government. In fairness it should be remembered that this rumor has been denied by the former Secretary and that until there is evidence of its truth it should be disregarded.

If those who have gone before us to a better world have knowledge of what is happening today, George Washington, who, it is said, could not tell a lie, must be emerging from his tomb at Mount Vernon to enter his indignant protest; "Honest Abe" must be suffering the tortures of the damned if he realizes how far those in authority in our Federal Government have traveled from the paths of common honesty.

By all means, if ordinary decency will not bring back to the Federal Government things which are rightfully its property, if the conscience of the former Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau permits him to retain the material which he as a public official, in a public capacity and at public expense, had in his custody, let us have a law which will reestablish here in America the principle of honesty in public officials.

MERRIMACK VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing, today, a bill which shall be known as the Merrimack Valley Authority, designed to utilize to the fullest extent, the water power of the Merrimack River for the production of low-cost hydroelectric energy.

We, in New England, have generously supported, by our votes and our tax contributions, the development of natural resources in other sections of our Nation.

We expect, in return, similar support of our plan to put to work one of the principal rivers of our region—one which runs through the States of New Hampshire and Massachusetts—and which, for years, has been shamefully neglected.

Recently, the President of the United States advised us to further the development of our water-power resources in the public interest. Those projects already in operation, offer ample proof that all the people of a river-valley basin are benefited by the efficient production and distribution of hydroelectric power free from monopolistic controls. Industry—and the individual consumer alike—profits, and the whole economy of a region is stimulated.

Originally, the textile industry, which is at the very heart of our industrialization, was built up through the use of water power. A typical New England manufacturing city is characterized by the mills which hug the banks of her rivers.

With the coming of the electrical age, however, industry turned away from the direct use of water power. Coal was imported to generate the new driving force which now turns the machines, and the river was forgotten.

How costly that change has been, the last few years have demonstrated. Every 6 months, our industries, our homes, and stores and schools and hospitals have been forced to curtail their activities because the supply of coal has been artificially interrupted. We have come to realize that our utter dependence on coal has placed us at the mercy of factors beyond our control, and with true American enterprise, we have resolved to do something about this intolerable situation. We are determined to bring to life the sleeping power of our rivers.

The textile industry has already embarked on an extensive course of modernization, but all improvements in machinery and operational methods will mean little unless our basic industry is provided with an abundant supply of low-cost power.

This challenge cannot be met in a piecemeal fashion.

For a river presents a many-sided problem.

In the case of the Merrimack, it is a matter of concern to the hundreds of thousands of people who live and work in the 5,000-square-mile basin, which covers portions of two States.

To properly control the periodic floods, to correct the grave danger presented by river pollution, and to employ the power possibilities of this waterway, we must have a unified, integrated program, involving cooperation among the communities affected, the two States, and the Federal Government.

As an illustrative example, take the problem of pollution. It has reached such proportions that most of the fish life has disappeared. Just below Lawrence it has become so dense that the oxygen content of the water has been reduced to a minimum. At the mouth of the river, where it enters the Atlantic Ocean, all shellfish areas have been condemned.

After studying the problem an investigating commission of the State of Massachusetts has recommended the expenditure of $27,000,000 to purify the river and safeguard the public health. This approach will fail unless New Hampshire, where the river begins, takes similar action.

Meanwhile the Federal Government has an interest in the problems of flood control and power development.

The solution lies, not in separate, unilateral action, but in a plan, legislated in the Congress and approved by the States and communities concerned.

I am happy to report that this is a nonpartisan issue. Republicans and Democrats, as New Englanders who are interested in the economic progress of their regions, are supporting the MVA which I propose in this bill. State and local representatives have already endorsed it.

I trust that the Congress will give to the MVA its prompt and favorable attention.

A PAGE BOY

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the House in this minute, if I can, a sad and true story that involves the House of Representatives. About a month ago a World War soldier, whose wife had died several years ago leaving a little boy who since his mother's death has been living in one room here in Washington with his father, told me that he had just been picked up on the street a couple of weeks before and rushed to the hospital with a bad case of heart trouble. He said to me, "I must go to the hospital again. I have my little boy. I would like it if you could arrange for him to be a page in the House of Representatives." I thought when I saw him that he would never come back from the hospital. He did not come back. A few days ago Mr. ALLEN, the chairman of the patronage committee, called me and said the little boy should have the place. I called the boy's one-room home. The boy answered the telephone himself and when I told him that he could get the position he said, "My father died this morning." After consoling him, I found that the American Legion was taking charge of the funeral arrangements and that the father would be buried in Arlington Cemetery with military honors.

Today I brought the little boy over to the Doorkeeper and had him appointed as a page. So you will see him here in a few days—a boy who has no father or mother. I tell you this story to show how magnanimous and magnificent is the great House of Representatives. It is the branch of the Government that is closest to the people. It is truly of the people, by the people, for the people.

WITHDRAWAL OF OUR TROOPS FROM CHINA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks and include a resolution I am introducing making inquiry of the Department of State as to why they have removed our troops from China.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a resolution of inquiry asking the administration to tell the House why they have withdrawn our troops from China. I have heard various reasons given. I believe the reason for such action is a matter of such great import that it should be made known to the House of Representatives. It seems to the average person as though the administration has decided to leave China to the fate of the Communist rule there, and millions of Chinese would have to bow to Communistic dictatorship. It would be wonderful if we could take our troops out of China and take our troops out of other places, but we certainly must not take a soldier or a marine out until we know that the safety of the United States will not be jeopardized and that our free form of government is made known to the people of those countries. America is the greatest protection in the world today to countries that are suffering under the yoke of a dictatorship or under Communistic rule which amounts to dictatorship.

My resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish the House of Representatives full information in his possession relative to the withdrawal of our troops from China and to give full information in his possession relative to the basis of said decisions and of the withdrawal from the committee of three which was seeking a unified China and cessation of civil war.

JOHN C. PUGH

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have at this time a very sad duty to perform. Our principal clerk, John Pugh, who has been in governmental service 44 years and on whom we depended to carry a great deal of the load of our committee, a thoroughly competent and able citizen, one who is known to everyone of the old Members of the House, one who is loved by every member of the Committee on Appropriations, has decided to retire. He has done this for personal reasons, and not because he wants to leave us. He has agreed to stay on the rolls and render such service as he can for the next 4 months. It is going to be a very difficult proposition, and we are sometimes going to have to ask the indulgence of the House in our attempt to carry on the enormous job we have to do. I make this announcement because I feel I should, and at the same time to pay a tribute to a man who, more than anyone else, could be of tremendous service in the job of balancing the budget and getting the Government of the United States back on its feet, if he were in a position to remain with us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 77 from the Committee on House Administration, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by clause (1) (Q) of rule XI incurred by the Committee on Un-American Activities, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $50,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT TO ACCOMPANY HOUSE RESOLUTION 77

The Committee on House Administration to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 77) providing funds for conducting the studies and investigations authorized by clause (1) (Q) of rule XI incurred by the Committee on Un-American Activities acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $50,000, which funds are necessary for the payment of expenses incurred in the travel of committee members to and from hearings, travel expenses and fees for witnesses, travel and per diem of investigators, purchase of publications and documents for committee files, photostating of documents and files to be furnished Members of Congress and agencies of the Government upon request, and subscriptions to subversive publications.

The sum of $75,000 was appropriated for the Committee on Un-American Activities for the year 1946, and the chairman reports back $49,000 of this amount was turned back as an unexpended balance on January 3, 1947.

The committee having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without amendment and recommends that the resolution do pass.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Un-American Activities is a regularly constituted committee provided for in the Reorganization Act. This resolution, unanimously reported from the House Administration Committee, authorizes the sum of $50,000 for the activities, investigations, and procedure of the House Committee on Un-American Activities during the year 1947.

In previous years the committee has at times, I think, used more than the sum of $50,000. In 1946 the sum of $75,000 was authorized, but I am told by the chairman of that committee that almost $50,000 of that unexpended balance was turned back.

The resolutions and the report explain the measure which is before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday many of us wore a red carnation in memory of the birthday of a great American, a citizen of Ohio, who made a great mark as a Member of this House, as Governor of his State, and as President of the United States, and who finally fell by an assassin's bullet.

Today is the sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of another brilliant American, one of the most thrilling characters that this or any country has ever known. Like Jefferson, he was born into what was known as the landed aristocracy. Thomas Jefferson, in my opinion, became the greatest Democrat who ever lived. I say this, not in the sense of the big "D" or the little "d," but because he believed in people; he believed in their capacity under proper leadership to carry on the work of a great democracy.

As I look the pages of history across, I see the mountain peaks in our history: Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Cleveland, McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson. They appear to me to be the mountain peaks in our history; the men who are still talked about, the men who are still written about. The great Washington at one time when he was in the Presidency cried out when unjust criticism was piled on him that he would rather be in his grave than to be in the Presidency. These men, in their day, were misinterpreted, misjudged, and criticized; and every one of them was hated by some groups and some individuals. Their place in history, however, is safe.

Sixty-five years ago today Franklin D. Roosevelt was born. He was the leader of these people in probably the most dangerous and, I think, the most glorious, period in American history. As a leader of men, he will take his place in history alongside of the great leaders whose names I have already called; and when impartial history is written, when the waves of prejudice and hatred have died from the lips of men and his career and his service to his country and to the world are properly written, he will take his place with these other outstanding men whom I have described as the mountain peaks in American history.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, men and women throughout the civilized world will pause today to pay tribute to the memory of the great world leader of yesterday—Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Ruler and subject, king and peasant, capitalist and laborer will offer silent prayers of thanksgiving for the blessings received under the magnificent leadership of the late President of the United States, who, with faith in God and confidence in his fellow man guided our ship of state through turbulent waters of internal difficulties and of external attack.

His death in line of duty during war, while acting as Commander in Chief of our armed forces, prematurely ended his heroic struggle against inconceivable odds for an ideal which, like Excalibur, was torn from the encasing rock of isolationism and carried high for the honor and glory of the United States of America.

That sword, inherited by our able Chief Executive, Harry S. Truman, will ever be the American symbol of our vigilant and dynamic democracy in its timeless, ceaseless war against the forces of subversive reaction, however named or clothed, wherever found, which threatens the religious, economic, or social stability of the world. Our Nation may be divisible into political parties. America is indivisible in its governmental objective—the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God. In our search for our goal let us never forget the courage, humanity, and intellectual integrity of him to whom the world looked for guidance from the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1939 by the mad horde of Hitler until that day of sad memory when he was called to his eternal reward.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt assumed the mantle of the office of President of the United States when the power of our Nation was tottering under the devastating blows of financial ruin, social insecurity, and defeatism. The horror of the depression of 1933 seems now but a lurid nightmare of legend. Let us never forget its factuality. Greece and Rome, greater than the great of ancient history, fell from the pinnacles of majesty and splendor because they in their power-numbed national intellectuality forgot to remember that man had natural rights which the state did not create but which the state must safeguard and protect against totalitarian ideologies. Governmental obliviousness of the dignity of man leads but to chaos and anarchism.

On March 4, 1933, America was told in unmistakable terms of truth and candor that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself—nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror, which paralyzes needed efforts to convert retreat into advance." America at that minute arose from the lethargic position of a supine nation. Heartened and encouraged by a leader of frankness and vision, the American people carried the fight to the enemies of social order and triumphed beyond the dreams of optimism, based as they were upon the foundation of hope without faith. The deeds of industry again turned red into black. Farms flourished with new health. The savings of the man in the street were permanently protected against fraudulent speculation and dishonest promoters. We entered upon a new era—security for all our citizenry, irrespective of estate, against the hardship of old age, unexpected or seasonal unemployment, new and old types of criminality, and autocracy in government. Man, recognized as man, not slave, entered the period of reconstruction, revivified in the knowledge that the greatness of our Nation would endure.

The world today is not at peace. Iron curtains darken the horizon of international accord. We heard the clarion call of Franklin Roosevelt in 1933. We conquered every crisis under his guidance, supported as he was by a nation which desired domestic tranquillity, unalloyed by imperialistic ambitions—that and no more. Were he with us today his voice would be raised in unison with that of our Chief Executive in execration of bigotry and intolerance, in exaltation of the glory of democracy, in exhortation that in the observance of the natural law lies national solidarity and grandeur.

We would hear him say "I, a foe without peer of atheistic communism, fear not the power of evil governments who seek to divide and conquer. In your heart, unsullied by irreligion, greed or inhumanity, lies the secret of world peace. Be vigorous in industry, loyal to American idealism in ambition, humane in treatment of fellow man, faithful to God."

Robed in these national virtues, America will never falter, but will always remain the United States of America, the world hearthstone.

The spirit of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the spirit of America, will ever remain to remind the world of his contribution to liberty, equality, and justice under God.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, as has just been stated to you by our grand minority leader, today is the sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest statesmen in the history of our Nation, who was known throughout his lifetime and remembered best by us now as a great humanitarian. It is appropriate that we pause to pay respect and tribute to his memory. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was a noble President of the United States during its most critical period and a great and fearless Commander in Chief through its fierce struggle for existence in a world torn with cruelty and war—he was a glorious American devoted to the preservation of his country and for which he finally made the supreme sacrifice. Truly he was a great American beloved by his countrymen and by the peoples of the world.

Throughout his entire public life, starting in 1910, when he was elected a State senator from Duchess County, N. Y., on through his service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor of the great State of New York, and finally in 1932 President of the United States, he served fearlessly and enthusiastically, with devotion to his tasks and to the end that a new and brighter day might dawn upon the world. Even though those hands, those eyes of vision, that voice of determination and encouragement, are stilled, we who remember him can detect the dawn of that new day. May his spirit live on and guide that dawn through the glorious light of day and the quiet twilight of enduring peace and tranquillity in the world.

His untimely death on April 12, 1945, was a tragedy to peace-loving people the world over; but in the words of Mr. Justice Holmes:

> At the grave of a hero we end, not with sorrow at the inevitable loss, but with the contagion of his courage; and with a kind of desperate joy we go back to the fight.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if it were possible to give expression to the thoughts that this moment spring from my heart and surge through my mind, I could, perhaps, pay fitting tribute to the great man we honor today.

Translating thoughts into words is a difficult task for most of us. Somehow the tongue, though the best medium of expression we have, is unable to coin the phrases and construct the sentences that give audible expression to our finer thoughts and meditations.

The handicap under which I labor, however, shall not deter me from attempting to pay tribute, though weak and feeble it may be, to the most humane, the most compassionate, the most freedom minded, the most peace loving, the most courageous leader, in the judgment of many, the party I am identified with ever produced, on this his natal day.

Yes, he was the great leader of my party, but he was more; he was the great leader of democracy, of freedom, of peace, not only here in America but everywhere throughout the world.

His vision was not dimmed by territorial limits, his goodness of heart knew no bounds, his desire for freedom included all men, his efforts for peace encompassed the earth, he belonged to the world, and the world recognized its own.

He preached the gospel of freedom, of liberty, of equality, of my brother's keeper, of doing unto others as you would have them do unto you, of good will, of peace on earth, that was so closely akin to the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, that his voice commanded a world audience and his pronouncements a respect never before accorded to man.

The yellow man of China, the black man of Africa, the brown man of Asia and the islands of the sea, the white man of the countries of Europe, all trusted him, and looked to him for leadership and guidance, and for deliverance from the accumulated tyrannies and oppressions of the ages.

He had his faults, he was human—one of the most human men I ever knew—and because he was so intensely human, because his humanity had been tempered by affliction, he understood and appreciated the great human problems that have harassed and baffled man over the years, and was able to point the way to the solution of many of them. Had he lived—I hesitate to prophesy.

And, so, when his noble, courageous spirit passed on, a pall fell over America, and men and women mourned as if the family circle had been broken by the passing of one of their loved ones.

Yea, more; a pall fell over all Christendom, and men and women of every land, of every color, of every tongue, of every creed, bowed their heads in grief and wept as little children, because they, too, knew that humanity had lost its greatest champion and friend.

My colleagues, man, born of woman, acts his part on humanity's stage for a brief season and then passes off, and all that is mortal of him goes back to the dust from whence it came, but his influence which is a part of his immortality, lives on. And, be not deceived, the influence of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, which today is a mighty force for righteousness, will live on, and, I am persuaded, will widen with the years, penetrate into many of the dismal recesses of the world where millions during the centuries past have been groping in the dark, and there light the torches of democracy, freedom and peace to guide their footsteps in their upward climb to a higher civilization.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet let an opportunity pass to pay my highest respects to the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I may explain to you the intenseness of my thought on the contribution he made to the greater life of the people of this world by saying that I buried my constant and theretofore unyielding opposition to the third-term idea and did what I could to bring about the renomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt for President for the third time. I still live in the belief, and indeed to me the close realization, that I do but lift myself a little higher, if in no other way than in my own consciousness, when I recollect the value, as I appraise it, of the great life of this great man, a man of great ability, a man more humanitarian in his attitude toward all men than most people seem to realize. I believe he has made a contribution to the inner life of men that will last as long as time goes on and men read the history of the lives of others.

Mr. Speaker, I think that Franklin D. Roosevelt answered for me and for everyone the question of what he was and who he was and what he believed in when, having been asked, "Are you a Communist?" his answer was a flat "No." "Are you a Socialist?" His answer was a positive "No." "What is your political philosophy?" "I do not have any." "Then what are you?" "I am a Christian and a democrat."

I rather think that Mr. Roosevelt intended that the word "democrat" should be regarded in the sense of the fellowship, the good-neighbor doctrine and all the things which are encompassed in that word, so grand in its contemplation. Someone in writing and telling about it spelled it with a big "D." I know that Mr. Roosevelt would not apologize for such a spelling, but I am inclined to believe that he said "I am a Christian and a democrat" spelled with a little "d." I revere the memory of this great and good man.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RIZLEY addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

GOLD-STAR LAPEL BUTTONS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, to those who sacrificed husband, son, or father on the altar of freedom a grateful nation can never repay in dollars and cents the debt it owes. We can, however, and should remain through the years, ever mindful of that obligation. To most of those who gave so much a continuing recognition of our indebtedness means more than any monetary considerations. If confirmation of the statement be necessary, ask any Gold Star Mother, no matter what her riches, to name the most precious item in her jewel box.

I have today introduced a bill directing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, by joint action, to design what is to be known as a gold-star lapel button to be given to the widow and each parent of one who gave his life in the service of his country in World War II.

The bill is not limited to those killed by enemy action, since, in my opinion, it should be broad enough to include those, oftentimes equally courageous, who may have succumbed to disease in the fever-infested jungles of Burma or New Guinea.

I commend this bill to the favorable consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, so far as I know, the President has not expressed himself on the portal-to-portal pay problem. This is one of the most important questions confronting the United States. I think the President owes it to the citizens to tell them where he stands on this matter, lest his silence be construed as giving his approval to the suits being brought to collect pay for portal-to-portal time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRESTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] is recognized for 45 minutes.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION LAW

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take all the time that has been assigned to me but in view of the fact that many bills have been filed in both Houses of the Congress relative to the problem of presidential succession; in view of the fact that we now have one State in the Union in which there is terrific confusion as to whom is to act as governor; also since the person now serving as President was elected as Vice President and has recommended a change in the presidential succession law; and in view further of the fact that in 1944 in the presidential campaign we had a threat from the electors in the State of Texas and in other Southern States that they would vote for someone other than the candidate of their party; I thought that this would be a very good time to discuss in an informal way our electoral system and also our presidential succession law and proposals for its change.

To begin with, I think we should go back to the creation of the office of President. The first draft of the Constitution, as you all know, had no reference to a President. Finally it was decided that there must be a Chief Executive, so the Constitution provides that all executive power is vested in a President. It is a very strong designation—stronger than if the Constitution had merely said, "There shall be a President of the United States."

Then the matter came up for consideration in the Constitutional Convention as to the name of the Chief Executive. All kinds of names were suggested. It was suggested that he be called "Governor," that he be called "King," but finally the term "President" was agreed upon.

Subsequent to that there was considerable discussion as to how he should be referred to. It was suggested that he be referred to as "His Excellency," "Governor," "His Highness," and finally just as "President of the United States." That was accepted.

There was a great deal of discussion as to the term for which he should be elected. Some members in the Convention proposed that he be elected to serve during good behavior. Other proposals ranged from 3 years to 21 years. Finally it was agreed that his term should be 4 years.

Perhaps the greatest controversy came about the matter of how he should be elected. It was proposed that he should be elected by popular vote. Other proposals were that he be elected by Congress. Another proposal, once approved and later rejected, was that he be elected by the governors of the States. It was finally determined however, in order to avoid the tumult of a popular election and still let the States have a part in it and also the people have a part in his election, that he should be elected by electors who should be chosen in such manner as the legislatures of the various States should determine. This is our so-called electoral system. It is usually thought that electors must be voted on by the people in the various States. That was not the original intent and as a matter of fact, until in the 1860's, South Carolina electors were selected by the legislature.

Immediately after setting up that system many difficulties arose. In the beginning, under the original provision of the Constitution, the electors voted for two people for President. The one who received the largest number of votes would be President and the one who received the next largest number would be Vice President. In 1800 Jefferson and Burr received the same number of votes, which caused our first bitter contest over our election laws in the Congress. It was finally resolved through the influence of Hamilton, although an enemy of Jefferson, and he is credited with having saved the Nation in that controversy.

This led to the adoption in 1804 of the twelfth amendment, which provided that the electors should vote for separate people for President and Vice President. It also provided that the Vice President must have the same qualifications as the President, to wit, he must be 35 years of age; he must be a natural-born citizen. Of course the original provision provided that he must be a natural-born citizen or a citizen who had resided in the United States for 14 years. That was a provision put into the Constitution for the benefit of Alexander Hamilton, who was not born in the United States. It was the original intention of the Constitution makers that the electors would be a select group who would have great wisdom and who would choose a President without regard to any party affiliations. It was provided, for instance, that they should each meet in their respective States on the same day, the idea being that the electors in one State would not know what the electors in the other States had done, and in that way they would arrive at an independent judgment about who should be President.

It soon developed first through caucuses, then through conventions, and then through political parties, that the electors became automatons to represent the will of the party which had elected them. It should be noted, however, that in the beginning of our Government electors were not bound and did not necessarily vote for the party of their choice. Even the first time Jefferson was elected, a Federalist elector in Pennsylvania voted for Jefferson and three other electors voted against the party of their choice; but from that time on, by the growth of political parties, we have had a peculiar and anomalous situation in our electoral college which should be examined. I say it should be examined and the useless formality which we witness every 4 years should be eliminated. Someday the threat of candidates for electors as happened in the State of Texas during the last election may be carried out and the electors vote for someone against the will of their party, against the will of the people who elected them. When that happens, we are going to have distress, dissatisfaction, if not revolution. Since therefore the electoral college is of no real use—it is a formality that is gone through with, but it is still a formality that carries with it a great deal of danger—let us remedy the situation before it causes chaos. Bills were introduced in the last Congress, and again in this Congress, by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] and myself, which would do away with the electoral college. The term "electoral college," incidentally, is not written into the Constitution; it first found an expression in the laws of our Government in 1845.

Under the proposal set forth by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from California, the States would have a certain number of Federal votes, the same number they now have under the electoral system representing the total number of Senators and Representatives from that particular State. The Federal votes, according to their proposals, would be divided between the candidates according to the number of votes cast in that particular State for the various candidates of the political parties. Assuming a State had 20 Federal votes and one-quarter of them were cast for one candidate and three-quarters for another, that State would then have 5 votes for the one and 15 for the other candidate. The argument in favor of this plan is that it would foster the two-party spirit throughout the United States and also it gets away from what has been considered an inequity, that one State because of a mere majority of a thousand or 2,000 votes may cast its entire votes in the electoral college for a certain candidate for President. I believe there is a great deal of merit in this fractional vote proposal and it is certainly one that ought to be considered by the Congress. The electoral college is eliminated in the bills I have referred to. The electoral system is closely related to problems of the succession and for that reason I am discussing them together. The method of electing the President and of the succession has a direct relationship to the electoral system; and also particularly I discuss them together because the resolutions filed by Senator GREEN and Senator SMITH and me provide for a joint committee to consider the defects in the electoral college system and also the problems relating to the succession to the Presidency.

Turning now to the matter of the succession, there is some interesting history that ought to be reviewed at this time. The original Constitution contained a provision to the effect that in the event of the death, removal, disqualification, or inability of the President or Vice President to serve, Congress may determine who will act as President. They left it to the Congress to pass a succession law. In 1792 the Congress in which sat many Members who had served in the Constitutional Convention passed the succession law of that year. They provided for the succession first to the President pro tempore of the Senate, if he had been elected, and, if not elected, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. It is very peculiar that in that Congress and in the debates, even though they are scantily reported, no question was made as to the constitutionality of having a President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House serve as President. The const'tutional provision I have referred to before says that the Congress may determine what officer may serve. But as time went on various Congresses questioned the constitutionality of that law, saying that there was doubt whether the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House was an officer within the meaning of the Constitution. They supported that argument by an early impeachment which the Senate had before it—that of William Blount, of Tennessee. Mr. Blount had been elected a Member of the United States Senate. The House of Representatives voted articles of impeachment. The Senate decided he was not an officer within the impeachment section of the Constitution, and therefore was not subject to that section for the purposes of impeachment.

Incidentally, that argument was used in the Seventy-ninth Congress against passage of the bill recommended by President Truman when it was presented to the House of Representatives. That is, if the succession came to the Speaker of the House, then the President pro tempore of the Senate, the same argument was made then that was later made against the succession law in 1792. I do think that the argument is valid for the following reasons: In the first place, the original constitutional provision does not say that the officer referred to must be an officer of the executive department of the Government. Certainly the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate are officers, and very high officers, of the legislative branch, and the legislative branch of the Government should have just as much recognition as the executive branch in the matter of succession. Furthermore, even if we admit that the precedent of the William Blount impeachment matter has some basis, it should be borne in mind that Senator Blount, while he was a Member of the Senate, was not an officer of the Senate. He was not President pro tempore of the Senate. But whatever doubt there may have been about the question during the years intervening between 1792 and 1886, when the succession law was amended, was certainly removed by the twentieth amendment, because the twentieth amendment expressly provides that the Congress may determine who should act as President in the event of the death, disqualification, or removal of the President and Vice President. That is, the word "officer" is not used in the twentieth amendment, so, according to the twentieth amendment, the Congress has the right to designate any person, whether he be an officer or a Member, or whomever he may be, to be in line for the succession in the event of the death, disqualification, or removal of both the President and Vice President elected.

I think it would be interesting to consider briefly the succession law of 1886. The original succession law stayed on the books from 1792 to 1886. At that time Cleveland was President and Vice President Hendricks had just died. The President pro tempore of the Senate was a Republican, and in the event of the death of President Cleveland he would have succeeded to the Presidency. That was the situation that led immediately to the passage of the latest succession law.

It provides, of course, that in the event of the death, disability, removal, or inability of the President or Vice President to serve, the Secretary of State, and then on down through the Cabinet, should act as President. It has been argued, and I think with a great deal of force, that it should not be in the power of the Vice President, when serving as President, to name his successor.

Furthermore, it is argued, and I think convincingly, that the Vice President, when serving as President, ought to be enabled to select the Secretary of State, with consideration only to the merits and ability of that person to act as Secretary of State, without having to consider whether he would make a good President in the event that office should fall to him. That, I think, is sound argument.

Also, it seems to me, the Speaker of the House of Representatives comes closer than anyone else in the Government to having a mandate from the people to carry out a particular policy or program. He has been recently elected and elevated to that position by the direct and fresh representatives of the people at the last election. He will certainly be a man of great ability. He will certainly be a man who has the common touch. I think that on the whole that our Speakers, and our present Speaker, have been men quite capable of serving as President in the event that mantle should ever fall to them, whereas the Secretaries of State, be they ever so able, have been selected and appointed not by the representatives of the people or by the Congress, but by one man.

In the last Congress we passed a law providing for the succession of the Speaker and then the President pro tempore, but it failed to pass the other body. I think that we should pass that law again early in this Congress. The gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] and, I believe, other Members have appropriate bills pending.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are many other difficulties that present themselves in connection with the matter of succession. One is the age-old question of who is to determine when the present President is unable to serve? When does his inability begin and when does it end? Who is to determine that? That is an open question so far as our Constitution and our laws are concerned. Does the Vice President make the determination and takes over? This might lead to a very embarrassing situation some time in our history. Suppose the Vice President is serving as President, who decides when the Secretary of State commences to act as President? It is a question that should be settled.

Also, there is the very important question of whether the Secretary of State in the event he should become President should serve the unexpired term or whether a special election should be called by Congress. Under the succession law he is required to call Congress into extra session within 20 days from the time he comes into office; it does not say for what purpose. There is a great deal of doubt constitutionally as to whether Congress would have the right to call a special election. That matter should be looked into. It should be determined what the policy of our Government is going to be in the event we should come to that situation.

Then there is a third matter which I have especially interested myself in during the past few years, that of preventing us from having in a great and a disastrous way the difficulty they are now having in the State of Georgia, that is, that under our laws as they stand today no provision whatsoever is made for an acting President in the event we should have no President when inauguration day, January 20th, comes around. This may seem a remote possibility, but several very real contingencies might take place to cause that result. Under the Constitution as amended, the term of the President expires at noon of January 20. He has no right to serve after that time. No member of his Cabinet has any right to serve. The succession law of 1886 applies only after a President has qualified. It does not apply to or take care of the hiatus before a President has qualified.

What are the situations that might find us without anyone qualified to act as President? And let me say that it would not take a great imagination to visualize the chaos and the difficulties this Nation and the world would have if we should be without a President even for a very short time. There would be no Executive, no officer in the executive department could be appointed, they could not hold over, there could be no Cabinet members, there would be no head of the Army and Navy. It is even doubtful whether Congress could pass any laws, because the Constitution states that a bill when passed must be presented to the President and then, if not approved by the President, may be passed over his veto. I doubt if you could even pass a law by two-thirds majority over his veto, because there would be no President to present it to. So we would have a most chaotic situation.

These are some of the contingencies that might occur. The State of Georgia, of course, has a provision in its constitution that the old Governor shall hold over until his successor qualifies. We are even without that protection. Suppose the President-elect and the Vice-President-elect should die or become disqualified between the election in November and inauguration day. No provision whatsoever is made for that contingency. Suppose also that a filibuster took place in either the House or the Senate, and the embryonic one in the Senate at the beginning of this Congress is indicative of what might take place. The Constitution states that the House and the Senate must meet in joint session, and the law fixes January 6 as that date, to canvass the vote of the electoral college, and also states that the votes shall be opened by the President pro tempore of the Senate. If there were a filibuster in either House they could not meet in joint session, because one House or the other would not be organized. So if that situation persisted from January 6 until January 20 we might well find ourselves without anyone to act as President.

Further, when in the electoral college no candidate for President has a majority of the votes, the election is thrown into the House of Representatives. That has happened two times. In 1824, for instance, Jackson had more electoral and popular votes than anyone else but John Quincy Adams was elected President by the House of Representatives. As a concession to the smaller States it is provided in the Constitution that when the election is thrown into the House, each State has only one vote, no matter how many Members of the House it may have. New York has one vote and Idaho has one vote. The vote is by States. In almost every Congress there would be some States with one Democratic Representative and one Republican Representative, so such a State would not have any vote. Anyway, the election of a President is the first order of business, and that question is voted on until a President is elected. You can not start voting for the President until you organize the House. In the past it has taken weeks, and in one case more than 2 months, to elect a Speaker. So that you might be in a position where you could not even start voting by the 20th of January. Also it is provided that when the House has to elect a President and when the Senate has to elect a Vice President a constitutional quorum of two-thirds of the Members is required. Therefore, it would be very easy to break a quorum. Those are cases where we might not have anyone to act as President. They are very real. They are particularly real in view of the fact that the twentieth amendment to the Constitution established January 20th as the inauguration date instead of March 4.

Section 3 of the twentieth amendment contemplates that Congress could pass a law to take care of this very problem. The House therefore passed a bill which I introduced and sponsored in 1941 which provided when that situation arose the Speaker of the House should act as President if the Speaker had been elected, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate should act if one had not been elected. That bill went over to the Senate, and I presume that because they wanted their man to come first they did not do anything about the legislation. I think the Speaker of the House of Representatives should come first, but more important than the person who is to succeed is the urgency of plugging this loophole.

Mr. Speaker, in the last Congress the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] introduced a very splendid resolution providing for a committee to investigate all aspects of the electoral system and matters relating to the Presidential succession. I do not think he has introduced his resolution as yet in the present Congress, but I am sure he will. Also, as I have stated, there are resolutions now pending for the appointment of such a committee, which resolutions have been filed by Senator GREEN and Senator SMITH. I filed one on this side of the Capitol. I hope by appropriate action of the two bodies of Congress, the members of the Judiciary Committees acting as special committees for that purpose, may go into this whole matter and recommend laws to remove the defects, undetermined questions, and loopholes in our electoral system, and also those relating to the matter of Presidential succession.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS REAL PROPERTY

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made in this House Monday by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] relative to the conditions existing in the sale of surplus war property. I would like to add my stamp of approval to the remarks made by that distinguished gentleman, but I would also like to inform him and this House that the current handling of the disposal of surplus real property is just as distressing as the situation involving the sale of surplus personalty.

At the outset of the recent conflagration, 800 or so families were moved away from 41,000 acres of the best farm land in south Mississippi in order to make way for an Army camp, which was to become Camp Van Dorn. These patriotic people acquiesced to the needs of their Government without any utterances of complaint, and left their places, their homes, and their farms and moved to other parts of the State and to other States to temporarily pursue their means of livelihood.

Now that the clouds of war have passed and the Government's need for this land exists no longer, these good people are expressing their desires to purchase these farms back from the Government, to move back on them, and to resume their normal way of life which they so generously forsook during the war.

In an attempt to secure some relief for these people, I have contacted the various offices in charge of the sales of surplus realty. I contacted the War Department, and was referred to the War Assets Administration. I contacted the War Assets Administration, and was referred to the Farm Credit Administration in New Orleans, La. I contacted the Farm Credit Administration in New Orleans, La., and was informed that these lands had never been turned over to them by the War Assets Administration. I then contacted the War Assets Administration again, and was informed by them that these lands had never been turned over to them by the War Department. After having chased the buck from bureau to bureau, I finally managed to pin it down and found that these lands are still in the custody of the War Department.

Camp Van Dorn was deactivated on September 15, 1945, and declared surplus by the War Department on October 1, 1945, 16 months ago. I am told by the War Department that the War Assets Administration refused to accept accountability and custody for resale of these lands in March 1946, pending decontamination of the lands. I am informed further by the War Department that decontamination of these lands would require, at the most, less than 2 months, and would be performed by a squad consisting of one officer and eight men. Today, 16 months after the Army has declared this property to be surplus, this 2 months' process of decontamination has not been completed.

If these lands are not sold back to these people within the next 2 months, they will lose a full crop year, and with the world crying for food and farm produce, I think it a shame that these lands should be left in the hands of the Government to deteriorate in idleness, when, on the other hand, with very little effort on the part of the Government, they could be placed in the hands of the people to produce foodstuff for a hungry world.

Maintenance of this abandoned Army camp is costing the Government lots of money; the Government's retention of these lands is costing the State of Mississippi untold thousands of dollars every year in taxes, is preventing thousands of people from resuming their normal vocational and agricultural pursuits, is preventing veterans from buying farms, is preventing sales of taxable timber to various and sundry sawmills and lumber dealers who are crying for these raw materials, is preventing the leasing of these lands to oil companies for mineral exploration at a time when oil and the products thereof are in great demand, is preventing the productive use of lands capable of production, and generally adding to the dissatisfaction and malcontent of thousands upon thousands of people in south Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse or justification for the existence of this kind of a situation, and I understand from having talked to my colleagues that this is not an isolated case, but that conditions paralleling this prevail generally throughout the South and other sections of the country where temporary Army camps were located. I agree wholeheartedly with the distinguished gentleman from New York in his contention that this Congress would well be justified in trying to unravel the snarl in which we find the disposal of our surplus property.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include excerpts and statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of us have been greatly disturbed of late by the relatively large number of accidents in civil aviation. It is entirely appropriate that various committees of Congress should be, as they are, investigating the question of safety in the air and related questions. Undoubtedly the recent series of tragic air crashes, some involving prominent persons, has served to refocus public attention upon the vital problem of air safety and also diminish the confidence of the public in civil aviation.

This situation can have very serious effects if it remains uncorrected because it threatens the financial stability as well as the development and progress of a great transportation industry which has amazingly obliterated distances over the whole globe and in our own hemisphere and country. That Congress must make a direct frontal attack upon these problems as quickly as possible is unquestionable. If we refuse or fail to take action to promote safety in the air, to compel the inauguration of demonstrated safety devices and equipment, to perfect and develop existing airports, to conquer the hazards of weather, fire, collision, and the imponderable personal equations that enter into successful and safe flying by the public, our entire civil aviation is likely to be stalemated and we are almost certain to lose our leadership in the air to other nations.

Like every Member of the Congress and like all persons interested in aviation, I have been gravely concerned by recent events. It is not understandable to me why our public agencies charged with regulating aviation and controlling air traffic should not have moved long ago to improve conditions that are known to be responsible for many of the serious accidents in the air. Frankly, I am amazed at the indecision, the vaccilation, the lack of over-all policy, and administrative delays that have characterized official governmental activities seeking to deal with these matters.

Congress has vested the CAA with practically full control over the aviation industry. In addition, several commissions, advisory and otherwise, exist to promote and maintain air safety; but it seems to me that there has been a surprising apathy and lack of effectiveness on the part of these agencies to tackle present problems with vigor and dispatch.

I take, for example, by way of illustration, the proposal to adopt the so-called ground-control approach, or GCA system of radar which greatly facilitates the landing of aircraft. During the war this system was used with great success by the armed services. Thousands of safe landings were made under adverse pressure conditions attending the return of mass flights from air raids involving hundreds of planes. By use of this system these aircraft were channeled by this miraculous radar equipment from the skyways into the narrow gateways of landing strips and military airfields. The safety record made by use of this system, which has been available from the files of the Army and Navy, is truly remarkable.

Early this year I urged the CAA to adopt the GCA landing systems and equipment in airports throughout the United States. Previous efforts have been made by others to the same end. Up to the present time I have not had a response to my communication, presumably because of pending investigation of that agency by certain committees of the Congress. About the same time the Army Air Force was kind enough and public-spirited enough to make a substantial number of GCA sets available for installation at civil airports, and I am personally very proud to have taken some part in these arrangements. It is an unfortunate fact, however, that installation has been authorized at but comparatively few airports. Apparently CAA has been willing to adopt safety devices, but, either through timorousness concerning the efficacy of GCA, technical operational objections, or its own budgetary situation, it has not yet cleared the way for the rapid adoption and installation of these tested, proven, and almost miraculous aids to safe landing of aircraft.

In my section, State and district, the problems of air safety are being carefully considered and discussed by the press and public in spite of the fact that we have been relatively free from serious accidents in our area, but largely because we are so intensely interested in the development of the Logan Airport at Boston, which is already one of our great aviation gateways to New England, Canada, the Maritime Provinces, and Europe, and through which we hope a steadily increasing and vital air traffic will flow.

In that connection I am pleased to include as part of my remarks several highly informative and impressive articles by Mr. Robert Sibley, aviation editor of the Boston Traveler. The Massachusetts press in general, particularly the Boston Post, the Worcester Telegram, and other outstanding papers, have evidenced the greatest of interest and have disseminated timely information concerning these problems. They have all urged action by our Government to adopt up-to-date safety devices at airports and in planes.

I could not help but be impressed by the expediting manner in which the Army Air Forces have responded to my appeals for the installation of GCA at Boston. Within 3 days of the time that I brought my request to the attention of General Ankenbrandt, AAF air communications officer, I was able to inform Massachusetts officials that AAF had released a GCA radar set costing $112,000 to the Logan Airport. Unhappily CAA has not been able for some reason or other to join in these efforts for air safety as promptly and as expeditiously as the Army, and I am still trying to get effective and prompt official action and cooperation from that agency. In the light of current delays I think that we can all take notice of a fact often manifest that the wheels of bureaucracy move slowly and painfully even in the face of a great public crisis like the one now confronting our air-transport systems and threatening the future of American aviation.

But the Congress cannot permit itself the luxury of indifference, apathy and inaction in this vital matter. Upon us devolves the duty and obligation to save aviation from further deterioration and retardation, to recoup public confidence which has waned to the point where it is seriously affecting our whole civil aviation program.

I have no desire to belabor the present Administrator of Aeronautics who has rendered cooperation in some of these matters even in the face of current public agitation and particularly in the face of investigation of his agency by Congress. I am fully aware of the magnitude of current problems, his desire to solve them intelligently and his expressed readiness to promote air safety wherever possible. But this matter is urgent and critical. We can afford no further delay in tackling and settling it in the interest of the traveling public and for the benefit of American aviation as a whole.

There are a host of present Federal agencies having to do with air safety and they must be activated at once. The armed services, the Commerce Department, the Treasury Department, the Air Coordinating Committee, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the State Department and the Executive Office of the President through the Bureau of the Budget have set-ups for dealing with various phases of safety in the air. It is clear to me that neither CAA nor any other single Government agency should have the power to regulate this great enterprise and also to investigate its own regulations and actions exclusively. There must be some check independently of the regulatory body to insure that safety provisions and measures will be promptly studied, inaugurated and enforced. Because I am very reluctant to multiply further, or even add to, existing overexpanded bureaucracies which duplicate and overlap each other's functions, I am asking President Truman, who is so profoundly and genuinely interested in aviation and in safeguarding the lives and safety of those who travel on our airways, to activate his Air Coordinating Committee and to direct it to take early specific action to utilize GCA and all other safety devices and equipment that will minimize the possibility of further accidents in American aviation.

I think we should proceed on the theory that there should be no favored safety devices sponsored by any governmental agency but that all such devices, equipment and systems embodying the most recent and advanced scientific developments shall be utilized to the fullest extent in order to promote safety in the air, restore public confidence and permit the expansion and development of the great and vital flying arm of our transportation system. If financial assistance from Congress is required to insure these results, I have every confidence that it will be forthcoming.

Under unanimous consent, I include as part of my remarks certain newspaper excerpts and statements on the subject of air safety.

Pertinent letter to Chairman Landis, of CAB, from Robert Sibley dated December 26, 1946:

DECEMBER 26, 1946.

DEAR MR. LANDIS: A fact with which, of course, you are familiar is that the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 created a five-man Civil Aeronautics Authority, later renamed the Civil Aeronautics Board, with broad responsibilities for the encouragement and development of United States civil aviation and needed facilities.

I respectfully propose at this time that the Civil Aeronautics Board at once make its own investigation as to why there has been an unexplained, damaging delay against the public policy in the adoption for practical use of ground-controlled approach radar, known in the industry as GCA, the equipment for guiding aircraft to landings in adverse weather, and I cite the following as testimony tending to show that the GCA equipment is now, and has been for much more than a year, practical and usable:

From the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, November 13, 1945: "Ground radar offers an effective weapon in conquering weather, the foe of all air-borne activities. Teamed with early warning systems, radar beacons and other radar sets for the general surveillance of air traffic, GCA can provide widespread ground control of aerial navigation. Such a combination of equipment makes possible the first true all-weather airway."

From the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, December 3, 1945: "With this set (GCA) a controller at an airfield or a landing strip can coach a plane's pilot to a perfect landing, even if flying completely blind due to foul weather."

From Yankee Pilot, February 1946: "MIT says it (GCA) works, and that it has made all-weather aviation possible. That's fine. When does all this go into operation?"

Lt. Gen. James H. Doolittle, February 1946 (in an address at MIT): "Every major airport should have a radar set in order to keep a constant check on all planes in the landing pattern. Planes flying the transcontinental routes should be followed by radar at all times and, in bad weather, be advised if they are off course and in danger."

C. B. Allen, in the Herald Tribune, April 21, 1946 (reporting on a GCA demonstration in Florida): "Press representatives inquired, also, why no representatives of the Army, the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Air Transport Association, and the Air Line Pilots Association were present for the demonstration, since all these organizations are vitally interested in the problems of bad-weather flying. In essence, the reply was that these groups had not seemed to be very much interested."

Dr. Edward P. Warner, May 1946: "It is more than 15 years since radio aids to instrument landings were first demonstrated, and since the first completely blind landings were made by way of test. The intervening period has been filled with the contentions of advocates of rival types of equipment. The promise of the new marvel just about to emerge from the laboratory has been always with us. Throughout that period there has not been a single installation of instrument-landing equipment in North America for the routine use by civil transport aircraft in regular service. Europe did better than that by adopting the Lorenz system. Whatever its imperfections, it was put to use. The United States pursued the quest of an ideal system. The situation emphasizes the importance of avoiding a continued wait upon the completion of pending development programs before making decisions."

Army Air Forces, July 11, 1946: "Preference: After having tested 16 pilots, it was decided to ask the remaining pilots which system they preferred after they had completed their runs. This gave them a chance to watch several other pilots' reactions as well as their own. The CAA air carrier pilots were not asked because it would have put them in an embarrassing position in view of verbal orders issued regarding CAA policy. Other CAA personnel picked at random and not on orders that could be traced were asked, and are included. All together 75 pilots were questioned and 70 preferred GCA, 5 SCS–51. It was noticed that a large percentage of the pilots who reached the one-half mile point on the SCS–51 and about 100 feet altitude would suddenly reverse their sensing of the glide-path needle and dive into the ground. At this point the needle is getting rather sensitive and once a full-scale deflection is reached the pilot becomes alarmed and makes a radical change in the attitude to correct it and invariably makes it down."

Associated Press, October 17, 1946: "Every important naval air station in the United States and overseas will be equipped by next June with a radar-controlled landing system that has proven itself accident-free."

War Department (jointly with the Navy and National Aeronautic Association), December 12, 1946: "Use of GCA enables any type of airplane equipped with radio transmitter and receiver and flown by a pilot with blind-flying experience to approach a fog-locked airport and land."

War Department, December 15, 1946: "The Army Air Forces statement that 20,000 successful landings were accomplished by AAF-operated GCA units as of January 1946, is dramatic proof of the practicality and development of this idea. The original model is still being used in England. The 1946 GCA model no longer requires five radar operators, but needs only one trained controller to handle the landings of aircraft."

War Department, December 20, 1946: "The Mark III and IV, the 1946 model (GCA) requires only one controller on a shift."

It now appears that the Civil Aeronautics Administration insists on experimenting belatedly with GCA at a time when, as demonstrated in the foregoing, there is a preponderance of evidence to show that GCA is well beyond the experimental stage; that it is in a state where it can be and should be utilized on a routine basis; that this has been true for a long period of time. The fact that recent plane accidents at Washington, Cleveland, Wyoming, the Burbank area, and elsewhere might have been prevented if GCA had been available and in operation is in itself sufficient to warrant immediate action on this matter by the Civil Aeronautics Board. I respectfully suggest that the CAB take up this matter at once with a view to installing and having operated GCA radar equipment as rapidly as possible on at least 130 airports in the continental United States.

Yours respectfully,

ROBERT B. SIBLEY,
Area Governor,
Aviation Writers' Association.

ADMIRAL CRITICIZES CAA FOR INDIFFERENCE TO GCA

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

The Civil Aeronautics Administration could have had 130 ground controlled approach radar sets in operation at 130 United States airports some time ago if it had taken action instead of withholding approval of this blind-landing equipment, according to Rear Adm. J. W. Reeves, Jr., commander of the Naval Air Transport Service.

In an address before air-line executives at Los Angeles, Admiral Reeves voiced sharp criticism of the CAA for failure to get GCA into service to safeguard commercial operations during the coming winter, and to speed up landings and avoid delays and cancellations of flights.

The Reeves charge was the second recent development in the controversy over delays in getting instrument-landing equipment into service. Earlier, the Collier trophy, a top honor in aviation, was awarded to Dr. Luis W. Alvarez, formerly of MIT, for development of GCA as the year's "greatest achievement in aviation in America, the value of which has been demonstrated by actual use during the preceding year."

Reeves said the Navy had 20 GCA sets in operation and 30 more in storage, and that the Army has 30 in use and 100 others in storage.

He said the CAA could have borrowed them, had it been so disposed.

Reeves reported that when he offered the Navy's spare GCA equipment to Theodore P. Wright, CAA Administrator, Reeves was informed that "personnel costs would be too great," after which the CAA took no action in regard to the Navy offer.

The admiral estimated that the 20 Navy sets could be operated for $450,000 this winter, which would be a modest figure in comparison to some amounts the air lines have been losing in cancellations and passenger irritations, the latter a long-range consideration.

Reeves said the Veterans' Administration could have produced the skilled personnel needed to operate the GCA equipment, and advised the air-line officials:

"It's about time that some of you pry the CAA off the dime and see if something can't be done about your problems, so that we don't travel 300 miles per hour going some place and not get there because the airport is closed in."

The Navy developed a background of vast experience with both GCA and a glide-path system (SCS–51) favored by the CAA, during the war and since. As a result, a Navy order now in effect says: "GCA equipment is hereby designated as standard for the naval service."

Navy records disclose that between May 1944, and September 1, 1946, some 50,000 landings were made by use of GCA at Navy training bases, and 15,000 at operational bases, with 469 of the latter made under actual instrument conditions with GCA crews on the ground giving the pilot the information he needed.

Both the Army and the Navy are expanding their GCA radar programs and increasing the number of installations. So far, the CAA continues to remain in the "experimental" stage on the equipment.

HUB TEST OF GCA 6 YEARS AGO RECALLED BY AIR EXPERTS

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

Even in the early stages of its development, back in the fall of 1942, Dr. Luis W. Alvarez' GCA (ground controlled approach) radar worked in surprisingly successful fashion, and one of the most striking demonstrations was staged at the Boston Airport, and this without benefit of long runways.

Taking part in this Boston test of the equipment were Dr. Alvarez (awarded the Collier trophy this week for development of GCA) and Col. Stuart P. Wright, AAF liaison officer from the Office of Technical Services.

The day they selected for the test turned out to be a poor one, weather-wise, but a good one for a convincing demonstration. The airport was closed in. Colonel Wright took off in a twin-engined Cessna and climbed to 2,000 feet. Then Alvarez began giving instructions to the colonel as to position, heading and rate of descent, tracking the plane by radar and using radio phone for communication.

Alvarez talked Wright down until the plane was within 2 feet of the ground, at which point Dr. Alvarez remarked: "You are now 2 feet high; you will touch down in 3 seconds." Wright counted three, and his wheels were on the field.

"BRING ME IN AGAIN"

Wright pushed the throttles forward, took off again, and called Alvarez: "That was good, Luis, but that was only luck. Bring me in again."

It did not seem to be luck. Wright and Alvarez went through the procedure for a total of 10 landings with the same success and precision each time. A few days later, Maj. Gen. Harold M. McClelland, AAF director of Technical Services, came to Boston, witnessed further tests, and flew one of them himself.

Since that time, there have been various changes and improvements, among them one made by the CAA in the antenna, to avoid precipitation difficulties.

Another change: The AAF now reports that the new models of GCA no longer require five radar operators, but need only one trained controller to handle the landing of aircraft.

The AAF reports that 20,000 successful landings were accomplished by AAF operated GCA units as of January 1946, which is "dramatic proof of the practicality" of the equipment.

GCA SYSTEM SAVED PLANE AT GANDER

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

GANDER, NEWFOUNDLAND, January 10.—This is the story of the plane crash which might have happened, but didn't.

GROPING FOR FIELD

Pan-American World Airways has its own GCA system (ground controlled approach radar) at the Gander Airport, crossroads of the North Atlantic airways, and the GCA boys, under emergency bad weather conditions, brought in for a safe landing a foreign air liner which, up to that time, had been groping blindly and unsuccessfully for the field.

This striking demonstration of the effectiveness of GCA, the radar equipment which the Civil Aeronautics Administration has been reluctant to adopt, occurred recently, a few days after Pan American had set up the unit and started test landings to familiarize PAA pilots with its use and capabilities.

A Pan American plane had just landed without difficulty, and the foreign transport following behind, most of its gas gone after an ocean crossing, was getting ready to make its landing.

NEAR ZERO ZERO

Then the weather socked in, with hard-driving snow. Officially the Gander weather went down to a 300-foot ceiling and a quarter of a mile visibility. Actually the GCA crew says it was much nearer to zero zero.

The foreign pilot asked for GCA assistance—asked the GCA ground crew to bring him down.

The GCA controller explained that, under the rules and his company orders, he was not permitted to help—that thus far the equipment was only for tests.

So the pilot started the customary instrument let-down over the range, completed his procedure turn, and started down for the point where he expected to find the runway. (This, incidentally, was the method being followed late last year by the Belgian Sabena pilot who crashed near Gander in bad weather.)

WATCH THROUGH SCOPE

The GCA operators, restricted from taking any part in what was going on, anxiously watched the let-down in their scopes.

They watched the plane start from the range station to the field, and they watched it drift away until there was an error of some 2,000 feet in heading for the runway.

Then the pilot pulled up, leveled off, and again asked for GCA assistance.

Ready, willing, and anxious to help, but bound by the rules, the GCA controller explained his situation to the tower. Then he added: "Of course, we could not refuse to help if this were an emergency."

DECLARES EMERGENCY

Aloft the pilot, who was able to hear this transmission, picked up his microphone and announced, "I declare an emergency."

Immediately the Pan American crew in the GCA trailer beside the runway went into action. They gave the pilot a new heading to fly. They told him when to turn. They told him when to start his descent. They told him when his wheels were about to touch the runway.

And at this moment, out of the blinding snow, at the touchdown end of the runway loomed the plane, lined up squarely with several thousand feet of waiting pavement, safe with its load of passengers.

"Was that pilot a happy man" recalled James E. O'Brien, of 125 West Central Street, Natick, Mass., traffic director of the GCA crew, and veteran of service as a member of the famous first GCA team on Iwo Jima. "He came over to see us afterward and to tell us how grateful he was."

SMITH MAKES DECISION

The advent of the radar-landing system at Gander is the result of a decision by James H. Smith, PAA vice president in charge of the Atlantic division, and himself a former pilot with the Navy. Familiar with the success the Army and Navy have had with the equipment, Smith instructed Philemon R. Dickinson, in charge of all-weather projects for the air line, to get a set from the Army and to round up a crew. Dickinson rounded up some of the best, getting them from several different parts of the country.

And since they went into action with the equipment set up on December 9, they have guided nearly 100 safe and precise landings. They are logged as test landings. All except that one in which they brought in the European plane.

"That was the real thing," the GCA boys point out.

BOSTON AIRPORT TO GET GCA UNIT—WAR DEPARTMENT AUTHORIZES LOAN OF SET TO AID IN BAD-WEATHER LANDINGS

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

The War Department has authorized the loan of radar-landing equipment for the Boston Airport, to be installed to aid in bad-weather landings and traffic control as soon as details can be worked out, it was announced today by Congressman PHILIP J. PHILBIN.

The arrangement by which it becomes possible for Boston to have ground-controlled approach (GCA radar) supplied by the Army Air Forces was a result of lengthy negotiations at Washington by the Clinton Congressman, who added that he had induced the War Department to release 15 or 20 other sets to other cities.

PHILBIN said he was getting in touch immediately with Commissioner Joseph F. Cairnes, of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works, which operates the State-owned airport, in order to get some of the details worked out.

The Representative told the Boston Traveler that he had been in touch with Gilfillan Bros., of Los Angeles, manufacturers of the equipment, and that the company had agreed to send engineers to Boston, after the set arrives, in order to complete modifications which will make it possible for a two-man crew to operate the radar-landing equipment, a type used successfully for years by the Army and Navy, and which is now standard Navy equipment.

COST ABOUT $1,000

"It will cost about $1,000 to make the modifications or alterations," said PHILBIN, "and two trained operators will cost about $75 to $80 a week in salaries.

"This is a small price to pay for safeguarding the lives of the hundreds of air passengers coming into a busy airport daily," the Congressman added.

He said the west-coast manufacturer had given assurance that trained radar operators, with long experience in handling such equipment for the Army Air Forces, could be made available.

PHILBIN said it was his understanding that the GCA unit would have to be under the supervision of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, which has charge of all aids to air navigation.

NO FUNDS AVAILABLE

But the CAA has no funds available for operation and maintenance of the set planned for Boston, although it is participating in the installation and operation of similar units at Washington, New York, and Chicago.

"It looks as though the State Department of Public Works might be the logical one to handle the expense," PHILBIN said.

Recently State officials, and the aviation committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, took preliminary steps to obtain GCA equipment for Boston. Governor Tobin, as one of his last official acts, went on record as favoring the acquisition.

A catch in the Boston GCA deal, however, is that the presence of the equipment will not immediately change the present system of bad-weather approaches and landings, since the strict CAA minimums and approach procedures will still be in effect.

WILL AID IN EMERGENCIES

It will serve to aid pilots in emergencies, nevertheless, to keep them off obstructions, and prevent such accidents as those at Cleveland, Los Angeles, Washington, Shannon, Eire, and elsewhere.

The CAA has already said it expects to lower the minimums, in time, making landings possible with the ceiling down to 200 feet instead of the present 500.

MAGAZINES DENOUNCE LACK OF RADAR FOR AIRPORTS

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

This department has been telling the story of the lack of radar for airports for more than a year, and practically nonstop since November. Now some other voices, which we don't think can be ignored, also are making themselves heard.

Available today is the new issue of Bob Wood's national weekly, Aviation News, raising a number of pertinent pointed questions; among them:

"Why are air liners in distress permitted to wander over the country within range of up-to-date GCA operating units until fuel exhaustion brings on a crash?"

Pointing to "the air lines' and the CAA's timidity in subjecting passengers to GCA," Wood observes:

"We hope the Air Transport Association will explain to the public why air liners are not using GCA equipment within range when there appears every likelihood that a crash landing will be only a matter of time," and "how much longer will commercial transports be denied the safety advantages enjoyed by every Army and Navy aircraft?"

Commenting on the crash landings of two DC-3 transports in the New York area on the night of January 5, Wood points to the fact that there were three GCA units in the vicinity—at Patuxent, Md., Andrews Field, Md., and Floyd Bennett Field.

"Investigation discloses," Wood reports, "that CAA's airways traffic control at no time alerted these stations, which did not know of the planes' difficulties, nor is there any evidence that pilots were informed of the emergency facilities available to them. Instead both passenger-laden transports crashed."

This may be translated to state that in these cases GCA landings might have been made, averting two more crashes.

Noting that 1,300 LaGuardia flights were canceled in one recent 3-day period, Aviation News say the situation "highlighted the ineffectiveness of the current emergency landing techniques and continued failure on the part of airways traffic control to use GCA facilities now available, even in the most serious emergencies."

Time magazine has something to say on the Jones Beach crash landing outside New York, after the plane "tried to make Westover" (where they have GCA). Says Time: "GCA might have saved that one."

Time also remarks: "If used at all large airports, GCA might cut air-line fatalities in half."

Under a heading, "CAA lethargy in air-landing-aids program hit by NATS chief," the authoritative Aviation News quotes Admiral J. W. Reeves, NATS commander, as saying it's time for CAA action on this matter "so that we don't continue to travel 300 miles per hour going some place and then not get there because the airport is closed in."

ARMY "TALKS" THREE PLANES TO SAFETY—CAA HELPLESS IN GUIDING CRAFT IN SOUPY WEATHER AT MITCHEL FIELD

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

There is some irony somewhere in the Mitchel Field report which described how Army GCA operators talked their airplanes down to safe landings under a 200-foot ceiling and almost no visibility, Thursday night.

It is ironical that it took the Army to save these three airplanes and the 46 on board. It was the Army—not the Civil Aeronautics Administration. The CAA is the agency which is supposed to have supervision over airways traffic and airways safety.

What was the CAA's airways traffic control division for the New York area doing for these planes at about that time?

Had all three been abandoned to whatever fate was about to catch up with them?

It has been pointed out time and time again that the Civil Aeronautics Administration ought to be ready with Ground Controlled Approach radar, and is not, but is still talking of "experimenting" with equipment which has been proved practical by several years' operation, and is now standard equipment for the Navy. It certainly was proved practical at Mitchel Field Thursday night.

Apparently as far as present civilian facilities for aircraft are concerned, the three planes which were milling around in the soup over New York could have joined the list of recent aircraft disasters.

They didn't because the Army, at least, was equipped and on the job.

CAA'S PET LANDING SYSTEM DEVELOPS NEW TROUBLES

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

Belatedly the Civil Aeronautics Administration has discovered that the instrument-landing system it has been favoring not only has all the bugs which pilots encountered earlier, but also has developed a new one.

The instrument-landing system is the glide path and localizer equipment which the CAA had selected as best, while giving the brush-off to ground-controlled-approach radar with the excuse that "radar isn't ready."

FM AFFECTS INSTRUMENT LANDING SYSTEM

The newly discovered trouble with the CAA's instrument-landing-system equipment is this:

It has been found that frequency-modulation signals in the vicinity of an instrument-landing-system installation raise hob with the glide path or localizer. Since FM radio stations and airports, both serving cities, can always be expected to be somewhere near each other, the problem is a serious one.

This situation, which might easily land the CAA's landing program in the junk heap and force an immediate interim use of ground-controlled-approach radar, was discussed behind closed doors at the Civil Aeronautics Administration within the past few days.

One CAA hope seems to be that some added device may cure the troubles instrument-landing system is absorbing from FM radio transmitters. There is no assurance, at the moment, that this can be accomplished.

And meanwhile there is further information indicating that both the Federal Communications Commission and FM station owners are keenly interested in the question of whether, or how much, a CAA instrument-landing-system unit will interfere with FM commercial transmission.

PILOTS COMPLAIN

Even if the FM troubles had not developed, the CAA's instrument-landing-system equipment already was in trouble. Pilots have been complaining it tells them lies at a time when precision is of paramount importance—on final approach.

There have been complaints that instrument-landing system puts out a split signal, is thrown out of line by metal aircraft on the ground and by nearby highway traffic; that it is affected by adjacent terrain, including elevations and water.

The CAA has offered instrument-landing system in preference to ground controlled approach, but may now be close to the point of making some radical change in policy.

One thing which might help to clear the air would be the asking of enough of the right questions by congressional investigators.

One might well be: "Isn't it true that the CAA's instrument-landing system has been found unreliable?"

ILS SYSTEM IS DIFFICULT TO FLY, SIBLEY DECLARES

(By Bob Sibley, Traveler aviation editor)

WILMINGTON, DEL., January 24.—Demonstrations here of the CAA-type instrument landing system and also the ground-controlled approach radar (GCA) at TWA's New Castle training base included demonstrations that:

1. When you install ILS on one runway, establishing that strip as the field's instrument runway, you let yourself in for some cross wind difficulties.

2. That ILS is difficult to fly.

3. That while ILS can line up a plane with only one runway, GCA can be adjusted to permit use of any runway in line whatever wind conditions require.

We took off in a C-54 with a couple of crack TWA pilots up front, to make a GCA approach. The idea was to use the north-south runway, approaching from the south, because it was the instrument runway. The wind was just about a 90-degree cross wind, from the west, 30 to 50 miles per hour with strong gusts.

The GCA test run put us over the head end of the runway, and we went around again to make an ILS approach. It was off, quite a bit, neither of the needles being centered during the last half mile of the approach during which the terrific cross winds batted the four-engine plane this way and that, and everybody agreed it didn't prove anything much because of the wind condition.

That is, excepting that when you install ILS on one runway you sometimes don't have it on the runway you need for landing.

We went over to the Link trainer department.

T. H. Gottshall, a Link instructor, climbed under the hood and was talked down to a perfect simulated GCA landing by Robert L. Woody, a senior Link instructor.

Then another qualified instrument man started a simulated approach with the ILS cross pointers in the Link. On the final approach he was bracketed only occassionally, weaved from one side to the other, and ended up (a) too high, (b) too far to the left, and (c) missed the runway.

Nobody blamed him. The ILS system is difficult to fly, as the AAF has pointedly stated in an official report. The best that can be said for it is that it should be able to help a pilot break out for a landing visually if the ceiling is no lower than 200 feet. On the basis of the Wilmington demonstration and others, it does not appear to be trustworthy for a ceiling lower than 200.

CAA SEEKS 20 GCA UNITS FOR BUSY AIR TERMINALS

WASHINGTON, January 24.—Convinced at last of the urgent need of getting ground-controlled-approach radar into operation at busy air terminals, including Boston, the Civil Aeronautics Administration is preparing to ask Congress for an emergency supplemental appropriation so that 20 GCA units can be made available immediately.

This was disclosed today by Congressman PHILIP J. PHILBIN, of Clinton, Mass., who has been hammering at the CAA for days to get action on GCA installations.

In making the announcement, PHILBIN remarked:

"I think the Boston Traveler's efforts to call attention to the need for GCA has finally borne fruit."

PHILBIN said the CAA decision for an emergency supplemental budget came today in the wake of a long conference attended by Public Works Commissioner Joseph F. Cairnes, of Massachusetts, AAF officials, CAA representatives, air-line spokesmen, and PHILBIN.

EMERGENCY EXISTS

An emergency appropriation became necessary, PHILBIN said, since President Truman had issued instructions earlier because of the economy wave that there were to be no supplemental appropriations unless the situation was an emergency.

"The CAA obviously has come around to the point of deciding that an emergency exists and that this radar landing aid is needed urgently and that there should be no delay," he said.

The Massachusetts Congressman also explained that the CAA has decided Federal funds should take care of both the modification of the surplus Army sets and their operation and maintenance, thus relieving the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which owns and operates the Boston airport, from added expense for this navigation aid.

"Boston is to get one of the newer sets, requiring only a two-man crew," PHILBIN said. "From all that I can learn, the CAA would not have taken action on GCA until next year had it not been for timely urging by the Boston Traveler."

He said he did not know what cities besides Boston, New York, Washington, and Chicago would get GCA units, but thought Los Angeles and Cleveland, which have had serious air-line crashes during landing attempts, would be included.

AIRPORT IN BOSTON TO GET RADAR—ONE OF 20 AIR FORCES' SETS DEFINITELY PROMISED

WASHINGTON, January 24 (AP).—Representative PHILBIN, of Massachusetts, announced today that the Government plans to modernize, install, and operate one of its surplus ground control approach (radar) systems at Boston Airport without cost to the State.

LOAN FROM AIR FORCES

The Congressman disclosed recently that the Army had agreed to loan to the Civil Aeronautics Administration, or directly to public operators, 20 of the air-safety devices u ed during the war and now stored at Dayton, Ohio.

The Army has been conducting experiments with three of the sets at airports in Chicago, New York, and Washington. They cost about $112,000. Modification, modernization, and installation costs about $92,000 for each system. Thus Boston Airport would get a system otherwise unobtainable at a value of about $204,000, plus operating costs.

NEED APPROPRIATION

The loan of the system to Boston and to several other airports would be possible under a proposal disclosed to PHILBIN's office today by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. The Administration purposes, PHILBIN's aides said, to ask Congress immediately for a supplemental appropriation for the current fiscal year to modernize and install 10 of its 20 systems.

"Boston Airport," PHILBIN's secretary told a reporter, "definitely will get one of these modernized systems."

NEEDED FOR SAFETY

PHILBIN's aide said although President Truman has stated there will be no supplemental appropriation measures offered except in an emergency, the Aeronautics Administration believes that recent airplane crashes and the necessity for immediate safety measures creates such an emergency.

Ground control approach systems (known now as GCA sets) are able to pick up a plane within a radius of 12 miles, no matter what the weather, warn it of mountains, high buildings, or other obstructions, and visually guide it to a safe landing.

PHILBIN's secretary said the Representative will make every effort to expedite delivery and installation of the Boston system.

TOWARD AIR SAFETY

The public should not lose faith in progress toward safe flying. Reports of one accident should not wipe out the monumental record of safety piled up with the use of radar. The crash at Oakland is not yet fully explained, but apparently the pilot, landing with a zero ceiling, failed to follow directions all the way and put down his plane just short of the runway.

The Naval Air Transport Service announced that previous to this crash it had made 76,000 ground-control approach (radar) landings without accident. Indeed, NATS, with a record of 1,400,000,000 passenger-miles without an injury to passengers, has become a synonym for safety. Both the Navy and the Army have been flying when the commercial lines were fogbound, and radar has been their chief secret. With GCA a plane can be "talked in" when the ceiling is zero. Equal results are claimed for the instrument landing (radio beam) system.

Tardily, the Civil Aeronautics Administration has ordered GCA equipment installed at airports in New York, Chicago, and Washington. One reason for delay has been cost. Another has been a controversy over rival methods. Of course, radar is no safety panacea, as the Oakland crash proves. But the record justifies a sharp public demand for more use of available equipment. The cost question can be worked out. Indeed, the air lines might find they could save the cost in uncanceled flights and public confidence.

ADVOCATES OF TWO CONTROL SYSTEMS FOSTER LIVELY DEBATE AS TO THEIR MERITS

(By Austin Stevens)

GANDER, NEWFOUNDLAND.—Aviation is currently divided by the controversy over which of two instrument-landing systems is better. The Civil Aeronautics Administration favors ILS—instrument landing system—which employs a localizer, a beamed-glide path and radio-marker beacons. With these aids the pilot handles the landing all by himself. Army and Navy aviation favors GCA—ground-controlled approach—in which, with radar, ground crews direct the pilot's maneuvering until the plane is at the head of the runway in position to land.

At the trans-Atlantic air junction at Gander, Pan American Airways is operating, with a picked crew, an Army Air Forces GCA unit, the AAF paying $1 a year for maintenance and for operational reports. GCA crews are "talking down" onto the runways in tests not only Pan American planes but those of American Overseas Airlines and British Overseas Airways Corp., which are sharing the expense.

The moving images of incoming planes are reflected on radar scopes inside a trailer parked by the runways, and the plane's flight is directed from the ground. Since these are tests only, GCA supplements the required range-station approach, but GCA has in effect in recent weeks brought down safely almost 100 planes to within a few feet of the runway.

During a demonstration of GCA here, an incident occurred which is worth repeating for the bearing it has upon the ILS and GCA controversy.

PLANE NEARS THE TOWER

Just after midnight a four-engined plane operated by a foreign line neared the field during a heavy snowstorm. The pilot requested GCA approach from the control tower, but was advised that GCA was available only to those lines which had contracted for it.

Meanwhile, while bringing in a Pan American Clipper, the GCA crew "saw" on their radar scope the foreign plane while still some distance out. The plane called again and was again notified that GCA was a test only, so the pilot started down to the obscured field on a range station instrument approach. Even when he was down to 400 feet over the field the pilot could not locate the runway through the squally snow and he pulled up sharply. On this approach he was wide of the runway by 2,000 feet.

While he was going out for a second pass at the field the weather worsened, visibility dropping to one-quarter of a mile and the ceiling lowering to 300 feet. Thereupon the pilot declared an emergency and GCA went into action. The controller lined up the plane, appearing as a "pip" of light on the radar scopes.

"You have 15 miles before you begin your descent," the controller called over the two-way radio. "Reduce air speed at your own discretion." From there on GCA took over the entire operation, advising the pilot when to descend, when to lock his wheels down, when to check flaps. As the plane veered left or right of the course set by GCA the pilot was corrected. When the plane went above or below the glide path the deviation was relayed to the pilot in feet, so he could correct his path.

At a quarter mile the pilot was told that the center line of the runway was this time dead ahead. "You're on the glide path, fly left, you're on, 25 feet high, now you're right, you're over the end of the runway, take over and land."

GCA AT MILITARY BASES

The Army, Navy, and Marine Corps had done this thousands of times during the war and were still doing it at military fields. GCA is standard equipment at all Navy fields, where it is replacing ILS. Thirty-five Army bases now are being equipped.

Such incidents, though impressive to watch, by no means resolve the GCA-ILS debate. Many pilots like ILS because it keeps the approach in the hands of the plane crew; they argue that GCA is only as good as the ground crew, and some observers think that CAA's relative hesitancy about GCA stems from this fact. Responsibility—and, if anything goes wrong, blame—would rest with the GCA crew, maintained by CAA. The CAA, which is spending $5,000,000 for ILS installations, has explained that a "practical difficulty" of GCA is the high cost of the new-type units and their operation.

Many pilots say they would like to have even the old-style GCA along with ILS, using one to check the other system while landing in bad weather. Air travelers surely would not object to an added safety measure.

As a GCA operator at Gander, a veteran of GCA operation at Iwo Jima, put it, "a lot of those B-29's never heard of this stuff, but they didn't ask questions when we offered to get them out of the weather and onto the top of that rock."

AVIATION AGENCIES SCORED AT HEARING—HOUSE INQUIRY ON CRASHES PUTS LANDIS THROUGH QUIZ, SAYS SAFETY IDEAS ARE LACKING

(By Samuel A. Tower)

WASHINGTON, January 22.—Members of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee censured Government aeronautical agencies today for what was termed their failure to recommend to Congress measures necessary to promote safety in the air.

James M. Landis, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, as the first witness before the committee as it began an investigation into causes of air accidents and the remedies needed, bore the brunt of the criticism, although it was directed at all the agencies handling aviation affairs.

In opening the hearing Representatives CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, Republican, of New Jersey, committee chairman, stated that recent declines in air travel were not attributable to a seasonal slump but to a growing "loss of confidence" by the public.

QUESTIONS FIRED AT LANDIS

Following a general review of the problem of air safety by Mr. Landis in a 6,000-word statement, the committee peppered him with questions designed to bring out specific recommendations to foster air safety.

"What specific recommendations would you make for the promotion of air safety?" Mr. WOLVERTON asked the CAB chairman.

Mr. Landis replied that technological development, creation of a special aviation congressional committee, and the hearings of the Commerce Committee were primary steps in that direction.

Mr. WOLVERTON expressed dissatisfaction with this reply as "pats on the back" for the air lines and Congress, but "we need more than those for the committee to take action on the problem."

"What we want to know," he said, "is what additional legislation and what additional appropriations are necessary."

Sharing the views of the committee chairman, Representative CARL HINSHAW, Republican, of California, said specific recommendations had not been made by the agencies because "Government agencies are loath to take responsibility for anything until they are sure it is perfect."

"This committee, if properly informed," he added, "would be one of the best friends aviation has, but we must be properly informed."

CAB CHIEF CITES NEW DEVICES

Mr. Landis, in his prepared statement, pointed out that the use of modern devices, electronic equipment, and other safety mechanisms was worthy of a definite exploration, adding that such navigation aids were being installed. The installation of such aids, retarded by wartime secrecy and materials shortages, would tangibly promote air safety, he felt.

The CAB chairman emphasized congressional responsibility through control of the national purse strings by asking Congress "to consider the extent to which the Federal Government can appropriately finance the building of a more adequate airway system."

He acknowledged, however, that the CAB had never made specific recommendations or appropriation recommendations to Congress.

Mr. Landis listed also safety steps taken, or under study, by the CAB, including easier flight-duty periods for air-line crews, revised regulations setting up safety standards for nonscheduled carriers, and modification of the rules governing take-offs and landings.

Armed with statistics showing steady reduction in air fatalities per passenger-mile, Mr. Landis declared the air safety situation "shows improvement, marked in some places, not too marked in others."

FUTURE AIR SAFETY DEPENDENT ON RADAR

(By Francis T. Fox, Telegram aviation reporter)

The future of air transportation is undeniably tied up with the modern miracle of radar. Isolated and unfortunate accidents like the one which occurred Monday at Oakland, Calif., involving a Navy hospital plane and resulting in one fatality, should not hinder the use of the ground-control approach system. This seeing-eye device for aircraft is as necessary to weather-bound planes as the dog is to a blind man.

The fact that Navy planes had made more than 65,000 safe blind landings using GCA prior to this accident cannot be overlooked.

Last week, when 3 days of fog, sleet, snow, and icing rain closed in the eastern United States, more than 3,000 flights were canceled. Air traffic from Newfoundland to California was fouled up, and scheduled flights all across the country were stalled. What this meant in loss of revenue to the air lines and inconvenience to passengers cannot be determined. But aviation suffered.

These 3 days of landlocked confusion produced some good for the air industry. They spotlighted the ineffectiveness of current emergency landing techniques and laid open to censure the policy of the Civilian Aeronautics Administration, which forbids use of GCA facilities now available even in serious emergencies.

One day last fall when busy Washington National Airport was closed for several hours while a disabled B-25 obstructed the runway in use, all air traffic in the vicinity was diverted to the naval air station at Patuxent, Md. During this period the Navy radar unit at the field brought in to safe landing 27 planes. These ships were guided in with the ceiling less than 200 feet and visibility wavering between zero and 400 yards.

On January 2 the GCA unit at Andrews Field, Md., an Army facility, successfully brought in a four-engine transport with a ceiling of 200 feet and visibility at zero at a time when other airports in the area were closed to similar weather.

During this landing the fog was so thick that control-tower personnel were unable to see the plane until after it landed. This landing operation was witnesses by CAA personnel and is reported to have made a profound impression.

One other outstanding achievement of GCA at Andrews Field occurred within the month. A Fairchild Packet (C-82), carrying 24 military passengers, was guided in to a successful night landing with less than one-half mile visibility after it had nearly exhausted its gas trying to find an open airport.

These instances indicate the excellent work radar is doing for military aviation and argue heavily for its speedy use in civilian flying.

PRESENT FEDERAL AGENCIES HAVING AN ACTIVE INTEREST IN AIR SAFETY AS ENUMERATED IN FOLLOWING STUDY PREPARED BY THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY AT REQUEST OF CONGRESSMAN PHILBIN

War Department: Air safety, accident prevention, has concerned the air arm of the United States Army since 1917, and accident reporting has always been a requirement. The earliest studies of accident statistics in the United States were made in 1921 by the Chief of the Medical Division of the Air Service. In 1947, the Army Air Forces, Office of Flying Safety (under the Office of the Air Inspector) is responsible for compiling all AAF accident statistics and making recommendations for increased military air safety.

Navy Department: Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air (flight safety)—same as AAF's Office of Flying Safety but for naval aircraft.

Commerce Department:

Civil Aeronautics Administration—see United States Government Manual, 1947, page 333.

Civil Aeronautics Board—see United States Government Manual, 1947, page 411.

Weather Bureau—see United States Government Manual, 1947, page 330; further, as pertaining to air safety, it is reasoned that by developing weather forecasting methods and systems for codifying weather information the Bureau also promotes air safety.

Treasury Department: United States Coast Guard (Search and Rescue Service Agency): Originally established as the Air-Sea Rescue Agency at the request of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Agency studies developments and designs of air-sea rescue equipment and methods of air-sea rescue activities.

Air Coordinating Committee (see Executive Order 981, dated September 19, 1946): There are three main divisions of the ACC—Technical, Economic, and Industrial—with subcommittees under each division. Each subcommittee under the Technical Division is concerned with some aspect of air safety. These subcommittees are: (a) Aids to Air Navigation and Landing, (b) Aviation Meteorology, (c) Airspace, (d) Air Safety, (e) Aeronautical Charts.

Executive Office of the President (Bureau of the Budget): Recently the ACC requested the Bureau of the Budget "to take leadership in developing, with the participation of interested aviation agencies, a comprehensive plan for * * * aviation statistics." On January 21, 1947, a conference of Federal aviation statistics was held. The committee on air navigation will devote itself to statistics which relate directly to air safety, namely, accident statistics, airworthiness, airmen certification, airports, meteorological services, communication services, airways, air-traffic control, and maintenance and fueling services.

State Department: Office of Transportation and Communications, Aviation Division; liaison with CAA, CAB, Navy, AAF—Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, United States Representative to the Interim Council. In the field of air safety PICAO is presently engaged in the following activities: Air navigation, aerodromes, air routes-ground airs, air traffic control, meteorological studies relative to air safety, search and rescue studies, aircraft accident investigation, airworthiness.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 31, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, creator of all things, giver of every good and perfect gift, hear us this day as we seek Thy blessing upon our deliberations.

We acknowledge before Thee our shortcomings, our selfishness, our smugness, and our pride. Forgive us wherein we have come short of Thy will for us and for our Nation. Create within us clean hearts, and renew right spirits, that we may do better and be better. Forgive us our forgetfulness of the world's sore need and our contentment with things as they are.

Hear us when we pray for all those in places of influence and authority, that they may do right. Guide those who lead us; and touch Thy servants with Thy Holy Spirit, that their faith may be revived, their hope renewed, and their vision made clear and challenging. Give to them the conviction that with Thy help all things are possible—even the most difficult things that baffle us now. God forbid that any of us here should add to the problems of the hour, but rather resolve, by Thy help, to become part of the answer. So help us, God, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 29, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate on the coming Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

PERSONAL STATEMENT—CORRECTION

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, on January 20 last I made a statement to the Senate and had read from the desk a letter from the Cavalier County Republican, a newspaper published at Langdon, N. Dak. In the letter from Mr. Forkner, of the Cavalier County Republican, it was stated that the Farmers Union Herald, of St. Paul, Minn., was responsible for the advertisement which resulted in the purchase of certain dresses among which was one which had been contributed to a Federal clothing drive by a lady in North Dakota. I have a letter from Mr. R. S. Gilfillan, editor of the Farmers Union Publishing Co., which publishes the Farmers Union Herald, stating that the statement as to the advertisement appearing in that newspaper was erroneous. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter inserted in the RECORD, and I offer my apologies to this publishing concern.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARMERS UNION PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Paul, Minn., January 28, 1947.

United States Senator MILTON YOUNG,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR YOUNG: We naturally have been following the story of the "relief dress" which found its way into commercial channels with interest. We admire the thoroughness with which you have presented the facts to the Senate and as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. And of course, we hope that the matter can be followed through to the end and the culprits, if any, punished.

The whole affair is repugnant and it is for that reason that we were disappointed in finding the Farmers Union Herald on record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as having been the agency through which the lady in North Dakota had made the purchase. Quoting the RECORD in which a letter from the Cavalier Republican to you states:

"It seems that this lady at Hazelton answered an ad that she saw in the Farmers Union Herald from a Chicago house advertising dresses for 100 at $18—in other words, 18 cents apiece."

Our records indicate the Chicago house mentioned has never advertised in the Herald. Therefore, the North Dakota lady (whom we hope does read the Herald) could never have seen the ad in this publication.

We call this to your attention as, undoubtedly, an unintentional inaccuracy.

Cordially yours,

R. S. GILFILLAN,
Editor.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been informed that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are unable to continue their services on the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. President, I wish to state in connection with the appointment of the minority members of the committee that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] had advised me that, because of other duties incumbent upon them, they did not desire to ask for renewed service on the committee.

I wish to congratulate both of them, and the other members of the committee, for the services which they rendered, and to express the feeling that the Senate as a whole appreciates the devotion which they gave to the work of this committee. I have no doubt that the new members will bring to the performance of their duties an equal devotion to the public welfare.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to state, in explanation of the fact that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], who has rendered able and outstanding service on this committee, was not reappointed, that he advised us that in view of his other important commitments during this session, and other legislative matters in which he is interested, particularly agriculture and one or two other subjects, he did not feel that he could give to this committee any further service; and it is at his request that he is not reappointed.

RESOLUTIONS REGARDING IMPORTATION OF CATTLE FROM MEXICO

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a letter, together with three resolutions which were adopted by the Nebraska Stock Growers Association and the American Live Stock Association. I call special attention to mention in the letter of the importation from Mexico of more than 100,000 cattle during the period October 17 to December 6 last, at which time there was prevalent in Mexico a contagious disease which is commonly referred to as the foot-and-mouth disease. I desire also to call the attention of the Senators present to the fact that a certain number of those cattle got as far north as my own State. I think that my esteemed colleague [Mr. WHERRY], who submitted Senate Resolution 72, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, will be interested in that statement and in the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter and resolutions presented by the Senator from Nebraska will be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

THE NEBRASKA STOCK
GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
Alliance, Nebr., January 21, 1947.

HUGH A. BUTLER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BUTLER: At a meeting of the officers, executive council, advisory board, special committees, and members of the Nebraska Stock Growers Association a short time ago, a number of resolutions were adopted.

You will please find enclosed a resolution regarding our stand on labor policies. I thought you would like to have this called to your attention.

You will also please find enclosed resolutions which were adopted at the Fiftieth Annual Convention of the American National Live Stock Association held at Phoenix, Ariz., January 8–10. I believe these resolutions are important and should be given serious consideration.

It may be of interest to you to know that over 100,000 cattle from Mexico entered this country between October 17 and December 6, 1946, during the period that the border was open. Some of these cattle have found their way into 29 States of this country. Cattlemen everywhere are fearful of foot-and-mouth-disease infection in this country and are determined that nothing be left undone, not only to keep it out of the United States, but to eradicate it in Mexico as soon as it is humanly possible.

You may be interested in knowing that out of a shipment of Brahma bulls imported into Mexico from South America, 18 or 20 head of those Brahma bulls eventually got to Nebraska.

At the present time each State is attempting to locate, inspect, and watch the cattle imported from Mexico for symptoms of foot-and-mouth disease.

We believe that the border quarantine must be rigidly enforced. In spite of quarantine measures, however, the disease may still be spread by birds and wild animals which no fence can keep out.

Another resolution adopted by the American National Live Stock Association was regarding reciprocal trade agreements and tariff reductions. We are opposed to the making of new agreements and any tariff reductions that might in any way affect the livestock industry.

The officers of the Nebraska Stock Growers Association will greatly appreciate any effort of yours to assist in carrying out the intent of the enclosed resolutions.

Yours very truly,
W. A. JOHNSON,
Secretary-Treasurer.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"The following resolution adopted by those in attendance at the fiftieth annual convention of the American National Live Stock Association held in Phoenix, Ariz., January 8–10, 1947:

"'HOOF-AND-MOUTH DISEASE OUTBREAK IN MEXICO

"'Whereas the recent outbreak of hoof-and-mouth disease in Mexico constitutes the most dangerous threat ever experienced in its history, to the livestock industry of this Nation—our economy, our credit, the normal movements of livestock in the natural processes of production and marketing and the threat to the supplies necessary to properly feed our domestic population; and

"'Whereas the American National Live Stock Association and the various State livestock association members of the American National Live Stock Association have repeatedly brought to the attention of the authorities in Washington the dangers incident to the unrestricted movement of livestock from infested areas to countries bordering on the United States: Now, therefore be it

"'Resolved, That this association in convention assembled at Phoenix, Ariz., January 10, 1947, respectively urge that the proper department of Government lend every assistance possible toward effectuating the protection afforded through the following program:

"'1. The Bureau of Animal Industry should be given adequate funds to insure that no handicap be placed on their work in preventing a spread of this dreaded disease to this country.

"'2. The United States-Mexican border should be patrolled as if it were a prison camp. The present force engaged in that work is merely a skeleton of the former patrol. That force should be multiplied.

"'3. The Government of the United States, acting through the Department of Agriculture and the State Department should prevail upon the Mexican Government to slaughter and bury the suspect bulls from the proximity of the border. This step is highly important and action such as this would breed some confidence in the good faith of the affected Governments.

"'4. The work of eradication of the disease in Mexico should have full cooperation and assistance of the American Government. Regardless of the number of trained men that may be required to render this assistance, they should be supplied promptly and in adequate force.

"'5. Construction of a permanent border fence extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean should be started and rushed to completion.

"'6. By far the most important step from the standpoint of future outbreaks such as now are in evidence is the consummation of a real sanitary treaty with Mexico and Canada. The existing treaty was negotiated several years ago and both of the named countries are parties to it. But the existing treaty has proven to be wholly inadequate. A new treaty with strong and sharp teeth in it should be effected. That will call for quick skillful negotiation with the named countries.'"

To the Committee on Finance:

"RECIPROCAL TRADE

"Whereas the program of writing new trade agreements with sharp reductions in tariff rates, advocated by the State Department, is a distinct threat to the restoration of stable conditions in agriculture, industry, and labor; and

"Whereas many foreign countries are now making bilateral agreements which are directly in opposition to the United States program of multilateral agreements, and will make such program ineffective so far as opportunity for exports from this country are concerned; and

"Whereas it is now impossible to foretell the conditions that will exist in 2 or 3 years when new agreements made now will become fully effective: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we strongly oppose the making of these new agreements and tariff reductions because it is opposed to the national interest and unfair and unequitable to American agriculture, industry, and labor."

To the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"The following resolution adopted unanimously by officers, executive council, advisory board and special committees of the Nebraska Stock Growers Association at a called meeting December 19–20, 1946, by President C. J. Abbott:

"'Resolved, That we commend President Harry S. Truman and members of his Cabinet for their efforts in curbing the dictatorial powers of John L. Lewis at a time when the strike of soft-coal miners threatened the very foundations of our republican form of government; when industry had been brought to its knees by the arrogance of one man who defied the powers of our Federal courts; when schools, public buildings, hospitals, and other necessary institutions were forced to close for lack of fuel;

"'That we call upon our Nebraska delegations in Congress to introduce or support legislation to stop unlawful and jurisdictional labor disputes and purge organized labor of its communistic leadership while there is yet time;

"'That we urge upon Congress the necessity of purging Federal offices and bureaus of all subversive elements and that positions of trust be delegated only to true Americans and then only after a careful study of their qualifications and patriotism to our form of government has shown them to be capable of assuming this great trust;

"'That we urge upon organized labor the need for greater production and the accompanying lowering of prices as the only means of maintaining our present high standards of living; that ever-increasing demands for higher wages and shorter hours can only result in higher and higher prices that will bring on inflation and create an industrial chaos that will wreck the economy of the United States of America.'"

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES, 1946 (PT. 2 OF REPT. NO. 1)

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, from the Special Committee To Investigate Campaign Expenditures, 1946, pursuant to Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-ninth Congress, I submit a final report relating to senatorial campaign contributions and expenditures in the 1946 election.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

REPORT ON USE AND ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC LANDS RELATING TO GRAZING SERVICE (S. REPT. NO. 10)

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, for the past approximately 6 years it has been my privilege to be the chairman of a subcommittee of the old Committee on Public Lands and Surveys investigating the administration of the open public domain. During that time our subcommittee has filed with this body four reports. The time for that committee to operate ceases today, under the resolution submitted during the last session of Congress by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. We have prepared our fifth and final report from that committee bearing on the subject of the resolution under which we have operated.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the report, which I shall shortly request to have printed. It will be found to be most revealing of indiscriminate violations of law in connection with the proper allocation of public funds, and it will be seen that the law is overlooked by the administration of the open public domain, as regards the Grazing Service, in a way that is anything but commendable on the part of a Federal bureau or a Federal service.

Mr. President, I now submit the report, and ask that it be printed. It is the final report of the subcommittee.

There being no objection, the report was received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: Mr. President, I dislike to ask for immediate action on a resolution, but it appears that as to the report which was submitted today by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] the time expires today and the Senator is anxious to make some minor changes in the report before it is printed. Therefore I submit and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution extending until February 15 the time for submitting the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska submits a resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 76) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 241, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to May 24, 1940, and continued by subsequent resolutions, relating to an investigation of the administration and use of public lands, is hereby continued until February 15, 1947, inclusive, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to prepare and submit a final report to the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator, What is this report?

Mr. BUTLER. It was a report which was presented in part this morning by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], covering, as the resolution says, an investigation with reference to grazing service on the public lands of the West.

Mr. HILL. Do I correctly understand that the purpose of this resolution is not to continue the committee for any further activity on its part other than simply to have its complete report in by the 15th of February?

Mr. BUTLER. It is to extend the time for making the report. A partial report was filed this morning, but there will be a few additions to it.

Mr. HILL. Has most of the report been filed?

Mr. BUTLER. There will be no additional expenditures by the committee in the way of traveling or holding investigations.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, there will be no further hearings or investigations; it is merely a matter of completing the writing of the report?

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. I understand that the resolution has the support of the minority members of the committee as well as the support of the members of the majority.

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I cannot help voicing my disapproval of asking unanimous consent for the consideration of legislation when only a handful of Senators are in the Chamber. I assume that it is a matter of some importance, and I assume that many Senators would be interested if they knew about it. Therefore, I suggest that the Senator withhold his request until Monday.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to withhold it until Monday, or until a later session, if the Chair will rule that we have the right to have the time extended after it automatically expires on this date, January 31.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will state it.

Mr. HILL. If the committee automatically dies at midnight on January 31, how could it be reinstated in order to enable it to file a report at a later date?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that a resolution can subsequently revive a committee for an extension of time for reporting purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, let me ask whether under that ruling the resolution may be presented on Monday or on some following day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the resolution may be presented and lie over under the rule, and be taken up at the next session of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. That is perfectly agreeable to me, Mr. President, and I submit the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and will lie over under the rule.

STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS BY PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS COMMITTEE, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have a similar resolution from a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands, which was appointed some months ago and was presided over by former Senator Murdock, of Utah. The subcommittee held its hearings. Almost immediately the stenographer who took the notes of the hearings was sent to the hospital, and he is still there. I should like to have a continuing resolution adopted in order to extend the time for that gentleman to transcribe his notes, and in order to enable the subcommittee to submit its report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from Nebraska satisfied to have that resolution go over under the rule?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then that will be done.

The resolution (S. Res. 77) submitted by Mr. BUTLER was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys under Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to July 30, 1946, relating to studies and investigations of matters referred to such committee, is hereby extended to March 31, 1947, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to make a report to the Congress.

AMENDMENT OF PURE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, by request, I introduce a bill amendatory of the Pure Food and Drugs Act and ask that it be appropriately referred. In connection with the bill I ask unanimous consent that there may be published in the RECORD at this point a copy of a letter written by the Federal Security Agency to the President of the Senate explanatory and in justification of the bill I have just introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Maine will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the letter will be published in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 445) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, by providing for the certification of batches of drugs composed wholly or partly of any kind of streptomycin, or any derivative thereof, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WHITE (by request), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The letter presented by Mr. WHITE is as follows:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, January 22, 1947.

The honorable the PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: A situation is arising which in our judgment requires prompt legislative action to protect persons stricken with diseases which will be treated with streptomycin.

This new drug is in some respects similar to penicillin. Its dramatic effects in the treatment of serious and often fatal diseases are overshadowed only by penicillin. Its commercial production, which began only a little more than a year ago, has now reached a substantial volume and is expected to increase materially.

As you know, the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act contains provisions in section 507 and related sections requiring that penicillin and all products containing it be pretested by the Government and certified before interstate distribution. The cost of establishing and maintaining this procedure is borne by the manufacturing industry through the payment of appropriate fees.

The reasons underlying the requirement for certification of penicillin are that it is highly efficacious for many serious infectious diseases suffered by great numbers of our population, that unusual difficulties are inherent in its manufacture of a quality suitable for therapeutic use, that the methods for testing finished lots to determine its safety and efficacy are not yet entirely satisfactory, and that therefore an unusual likelihood exists that lots will appear on the market which are not of the appropriate strength, quality, and purity. To insure that the product is what it should be requires not only the greatest care on the part of the manufacturer but check-testing by a disinterested and competent authority.

Streptomycin is highly effective in a number of serious infections for which neither penicillin nor any other drug now available is efficacious. Among these are meningitis, endocarditis, urinary tract infections, and blood poisoning, when these conditions are due to certain types of organisms. It is a specific in the treatment of tularemia, or rabbit fever. It bears great promise for the therapy of certain types of peritonitis, pneumonia, liver abscesses, and gall gladder infections. While the clinical investigations on tuberculosis have not yet reached an advanced state, the results so far obtained give promise that it may display considerable efficacy in the control of this scourge. It is the first drug that has ever shown definite promise of practical clinical value in the treatment of this disease.

Streptomycin, like penicillin, is a biological product and its manufacture and testing are subject to the same kind of unexplained vagaries that characterize the production of penicillin. In some respects at least, the need for predistribution checking is even greater for streptomycin. Its toxicity, particularly in relation to effective dosage, is much higher than that of penicillin. Underdosage results in the rapid development of highly resistant strains of pathogenic organisms. Its dosage must therefore be much more carefully regulated than that of penicillin, and it is even more important that label declarations of potency be accurate.

The certification procedure we are now recommending for streptomycin has precedent in the terms of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, not only in the penicillin provisions but in the provisions of section 506, requiring certification of insulin, the drug which enables diabetics to live a nearly normal span of life. All three of these drugs—streptomycin, penicillin, and insulin—present problems of a common pattern in the importance of their need for effective control in the interest of public health. They are all highly efficacious for one or more serious diseases; they all present unusual difficulties in the process of manufacture and the methods of testing finished lots, and for this reason are prone to depart from standards of identity, quality, and purity appropriate to insure safety and efficacy of use.

The general provisions of the law applicable to other drugs are quite ineffective in meeting the needs of public protection presented by these articles. There is no authority in these general provisions for testing by the Government before distribution even where the manufacturer desires such testing as an insurance against mistakes. Examinations can be made only after the products are shipped or offered for shipment in interstate commerce. With the sanctions of seizure, criminal prosecution, and injunction contained in the act, and the facilities available for enforcement, only a fraction of the output of any drug can ordinarily be given attention and proceeded against effectively when it fails to meet appropriate standards. Seizure of widely dispersed products is possible in only a relatively small proportion of cases. Criminal prosecution and injunction proceedings do not benefit the patients who have received ineffective or toxic drugs contained in the shipments upon which such actions are instituted.

The extreme rarity with which uncertified insulin or penicillin is introduced into interstate commerce demonstrates that the certification procedure substantially insures that drugs subject to it are what they ought to be when their interstate movement begins. The provision of the act in section 301 (b), which prohibits the adulteration or misbranding of an article while in interstate commerce, tends to safeguard the product during that time. Likewise, the provision of the act in section 301 (k), prohibiting the doing of any act with respect to an article while it is being held for sale after interstate shipment if such act results in the misbranding of the article, tends to extend protection until it is ultimately sold for use. (It will be noted that uncertified insulin and penicillin are defined in section 502 (k) and (l) as misbranded.)

It is probable that as improved techniques in manufacture and better methods of testing are developed, the need for pretesting and certification of streptomycin may no longer exist. That probability with respect to penicillin was recognized in section 507 (c), which directs the Administrator to promulgate regulations exempting the drug from the certification requirements when that procedure is not necessary to insure safety and efficacy of use. This provision would apply equally to streptomycin if the recommended amendment is adopted.

The proposed bill would also amend section 301 (j) of the act, prohibiting governmental agents from revealing information concerning any method or process which is a trade secret entitled to protection, and which is acquired under the authority of the sections providing for the certification of insulin, penicillin, and streptomycin. This was inadvertently omitted when sections 506 and 507 were originally enacted.

This proposed legislation has been discussed with representatives of members of the industry who produce streptomycin or who may be concerned with its production. On the basis of these discussions we are satisfied that there exists no opposition to the proposal.

At the present time samples from each batch of streptomycin produced are being tested by the Food and Drug Administration before they are released for distribution. This service is being carried on through cooperative arrangements with the War and Navy Departments, who have been purchasing most of the output, and under an order by the Civilian Production Administration, operating through the authority of temporary legislation. Since the Civilian Production Administration order is expected to expire in March, it is highly desirable that prompt consideration be given to the bill so that if it meets the approval of Congress there will be no hiatus between the present control and that which would be set up by the terms of the bill.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress for its consideration.

Sincerely yours,

WATSON B. MILLER,
Administrator.

AMENDMENTS OF NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the request of the Attorney General, I introduce two bills to amend the Nationality Act of 1940.

I wish my colleagues to understand that, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I am simply providing a vehicle for the Attorney General to get before Congress certain bills which he is desirous of having enacted into law.

I wish it understood that it is not my intention to introduce all bills which he deems desirable, nor do I wish to be considered as sponsoring any of the bills which I may choose to introduce at his request. I merely desire to cooperate as far as possible with the Attorney General in matters affecting the judiciary.

The bills introduced by Mr. WILEY were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

S. 460. A bill to amend section 327 (h) of the Nationality Act of 1940; and

S. 461. A bill to correct an error in section 342 (b) (8) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], I introduce a bill and ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received, and the Senator will be heard.

The bill (S. 472) to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. TAFT (for himself, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. SMITH, Mr. COOPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, and Mr. TOBEY), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes.

This bill is substantially the same as the bill which was introduced at the last session by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and myself, and which was recommended to the Senate by the Committee on Education and Labor at that time.

The basic purpose of the bill is to assist the States to provide a minimum education in the poorest districts in the State. The bill proceeds on the theory of merely assisting the State. It is based on the theory that there shall be no interference in any way by the Federal Government with the educational system of the State, either in the curriculum or in the administration, or in any other respect, so that the 48 States may remain completely free to conduct their affairs as they wish to conduct them in this field. It proposes, however, to give them the money necessary to provide a basic minimum education for every child in the United States. The money will go only to States which make an effort in excess of the national effort compared to their own income; and States which, after they make that effort, are unable to provide an education costing at least $40 per child for every child in the State. The only requirement is that when they receive the money every school district in the State, whether it serves white pupils or black pupils, must undertake to see that that school district has $40 per child to spend during the year, from State and Federal sources. That is a low standard; it represents, of course, only the minimum basis in the poorest districts, and we hope that later it may be built up. States spending $40 within the poorest districts will probably average closer to $80 for all the children in the State. It is impossible completely to equalize educational opportunities within each State. The basic purpose is to afford to every American child an opportunity to obtain an education which at least will open up to his view the opportunities that lie before him and will enable him, if he has the ability and the capacity, to go forward in whatever activity he may choose to engage.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Ohio for the introduction of this bill on behalf of himself and the other Senators whose names he has indicated to the Senate, including my own. For a number of years the Committee on Education and Labor, the predecessor of the present Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, had under consideration for some time the question of Federal aid for education. Through the years that committee held extended hearings on the question of Federal aid. I think there is no phase of the question concerning Federal aid to education which that committee did not thoroughly explore and on which it did not hear testimony from many witnesses.

The bill which the distinguished Senator from Ohio has introduced was considered for a long period of time at the last session of Congress by a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Tunnell, the then Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and myself as chairman of the subcommittee.

Six of the seven members of that subcommittee supported the bill. It was supported by a very substantial majority of the Committee on Education and Labor, and was reported by the full committee. It was only because it was too late in the session that the bill was not considered by the Senate itself.

I very much hope that the bill may receive early action by the committee and be taken up by the Senate and passed. It is an important bill; it is an urgent bill. There is today in the United States a very grave crisis in education which can be adequately met only by the passage of this bill.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION RELATING TO APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution which would specify that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding aliens.

For 25 years I have been attempting to have Congress submit such an amendment to the States. If it is submitted, I venture the prediction that it will receive the necessary approval of three-fourths of the States almost as speedily as the legislatures of that many States meet.

The stop-alien-representation-in-Congress amendment simply provides that representation shall be based upon the whole number of citizens, instead of upon the whole number of persons in each State.

Under the present provision of the Constitution, representation in the House is based upon the whole number of persons in each State, as shown by the latest decennial census preceding the year in which reapportionment is made.

The effect of the present provision is that a State which has 325,000 aliens counted, or a major fraction thereof, is entitled to an extra Representative in Congress, over and beyond the number it would have if only citizens were counted in making the apportionment. Such a State also is entitled to have an extra elector in the electoral college.

The apportionment of Representatives on the basis of the residence of aliens, of course, operates to decrease proportionately the number of Representatives who are apportioned to States with native-born and naturalized populations. This manifestly is unfair to American citizens.

It is more important in the National Legislature than in the States that representation be based upon the number of citizens, instead of upon aliens plus citizens. This is true for the simple reason that the alien populations, when counted in apportioning Representatives in Congress, also give such States a corresponding number of extra electors in electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary held public hearings on this proposal on September 25, 1945. On February 15, 1946, the committee made a report to the Senate which was unanimously in favor of the proposal.

The joint resolution as now introduced embodies amendments suggested by the committee in its report to the Senate.

Mr. President, I earnestly hope for early passage of this joint resolution, and subsequent ratification of the amendment.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States to exclude aliens in counting the whole number of persons in each State for apportionment of Representatives among the several States, introduced by Mr. CAPPER, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD—EDITORIAL FROM BALTIMORE SUN

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on January 23, 1947, the Baltimore Sun printed a fine editorial about the late Congressman Andrew J. Volstead, who was one of the authors of the Capper-Volstead Act. I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANOTHER VOLSTEAD ACT WHICH IS HIGHLY RESPECTABLE

When former Representative Andrew J. Volstead died the other day, most people thought at once of the Volstead Act—that is, the prohibition statute. That statute didn't work out so well and the whole experiment, perhaps noble in motive but assuredly deplorable in result, was finally abandoned.

But there was another Volstead Act rather less well known but rather more valid and, as it happens, with vivid and explicit meanings for us today in perhaps our most urgent problem. It is the Capper-Volstead Act of 1922, which exempted farm cooperatives from the antitrust laws—except—

Except that "if the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes or restrains trade in interstate or foreign commerce to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, he shall serve upon such association a complaint stating his charge in that respect [and] * * * requiring the association to show cause why an order should not be made directing it to cease and desist from monopolization or restraint of trade."

In other words, though Mr. Volstead and his colleagues in the Congress of 1922 wanted to give farmers a little leeway under the antitrust laws, they did not immunize farmers altogether. They left the heavy club of Government in the hands of Government to protect the whole people against abuse of the special privileges granted. Farmers could organize for collective bargaining, sure; but the very men who gave them that power were careful to frame remedies for any abuse of that power.

That is just the precaution which the post-1933 friends of labor in Congress and the courts have neglected to provide. The result has been a series of paralyzing strikes which worsened labor's standing with the public infinitely more than would have happened if those who framed our current labor policy had had Messrs. Volstead and CAPPER's simple faith that even among friends law and order pay. In casting about now for cures of intolerable union abuses, the new Congress may well pay special attention to the suggestions available in the Capper-Volstead Act.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA AT SENATOR OVERTON APPRECIATION DINNER

[Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at the Senator Overton appreciation dinner at the Roosevelt Hotel, New Orleans, November 14, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CLOSED SHOP—DEBATE BETWEEN SENATOR WILEY AND MR. FRANK P. FENTON

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—STATEMENT BY JESSE C. SUTER

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article in support of national representation for the District of Columbia, written by Jesse C. Suter, and published in the Washington Evening Star of January 26, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 27) to provide for suspending the enforcement of certain obligations against the operators of gold and silver mines who are forced to cease operations because of the war was announced as first in order.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, the last time this bill was called on the calendar I said that I did not wish to object to it, but I requested certain information, which information has not yet been received. Therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REPORT TO CONGRESS BY THE PHILADELPHIA NATIONAL SHRINES PARK COMMISSION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 33) to amend the act of August 9, 1946 (Public Law 711, 79th Cong.), for the purpose of allowing the Philadelphia National Shrines Park Commission additional time in which to prepare and to submit its report to the Congress was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 4 of the act of August 9, 1946 (Public Law 711, 79th Cong.), is amended by deleting therefrom the date "January 3, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof the date "January 3, 1948."

SMALL BUSINESS AND TRANSPORTATION MONOPOLIES

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I like to play fair with my colleagues, and to put them on notice. So, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, and that they may have freedom of mind, I advise them and put them on notice that I shall speak for not to exceed 30 minutes, and if any of them desire to leave and to return after I have concluded, it will be perfectly agreeable to me.

I should also like to say that I am about to speak on a subject which I am sure is very near and dear to the hearts of the members of the majority party, on this side of the aisle. The subject is "Small Business."

Mr. President, on this last day of January it may be useful to recall some of the words and votes in this Chamber during the first month of the Eightieth Congress. While they are still fresh in our memory they may be contrasted with other and contrary words and votes now hovering over the Senate. These other words and votes, perhaps to be spoken on the floor of the Senate in the second month of the Eightieth Congress, are now being borne to us on the wings of the bill pending in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to undermine the Sherman antitrust law and all antimonopoly laws. I refer to Senate bill 110, the Bulwinkle bill, so-called.

The sharp contrast between the principal performance of the Senate in this month of January—the creation of the two special investigating committees—and the attempt which will be made in the Senate in the second month of this year to break down the antimonopoly statutes, is striking. A discussion of the inconsistency between the two is important. I deem it necessary to bring the matter before the Senate even before the bill is reported to the floor. The contrast with our legislative actions of the present month should be discussed while the votes are still green in our memory.

In this month of January the thesis urged by the leaders of the majority was that special committees are required to redress wrongs done to the American people during the war. This was the theory advanced for continuing the Special Committee for War Investigations, and was made the basis for the Senate's continuation of that committee on January 22. Two days later the Special Committee on Small Business was created, on the stated premise that this was necessary to redress the wrong done to small business during the war.

Those who spoke for the creation of these special committees are soon going to have an opportunity to support their intention of redressing war events and helping small business. The forthcoming vote on the bill (S. 110) now pending in committee, to magnify big business monopoly at the expense of small business, will provide a fortunate and early occasion for a decisive negative vote on their part.

In the debate for the creation of the special committee on small business the majority leaders drove home, time and again, their assurance of the need for the special committee in order to break down the big business monopoly developed during the war years.

The author of Senate Resolution 20, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], indicated that his special committee had to correct "monopoly and centralization questions." He invoked the name and the language of the President of the United States to emphasize the need for this special committee on small business. I repeat the words of the President which the junior Senator from Nebraska quoted and used as the central justification for creating a Special Committee on Small Business:

> The antitrust laws should be implemented and, simultaneously, small business and new enterprise should be encouraged by research and credit programs.

Many of us listened carefully to the earnest address pleading the cause of small business against the big corporations—the address by the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] in support of the resolution for a Special Committee on Small Business. I quote from his remarks:

> Why should there be a special committee for that purpose? I would state this as my reason: That during the war it was the big corporations that the Government supported. The Government gave the big corporations any number of millions of dollars to increase their plants. The Government constructed their buildings; it supplied their machinery; everything was channeled through the big corporations of the country to speed war production. Who got hurt? It was the little corporation, the small business, bound up in edicts, and directives, and regulations, and restrictions, and restraints, and rationings. Through the channeling of available material, small business was tangled and strangled.

In his splendid and moving address, the junior Senator from Illinois made the protection of the small businessman a Republican Party issue. He said:

> I say that now is the time for the Republican Party to represent the small business of the Nation. It ill befits the party which has condemned the Republican Party all these years for representing what they call property rights instead of human rights, big business instead of small business, now in effect, say, "No; we do not want to let you Republicans go forward with this work and represent little business * * *."
> In the last 15 years, under the Democratic regime, industry has become more concentrated and powerful than at any other time in the history of America. I, for one, Mr.

President, want to assume my full responsibility as a member of the steering committee and as a member of the committee which drafted the Reorganization Act. I hope the special committee shall be permitted to live and to function.

So deep was the appeal to the emotions in these addresses, designed to demonstrate the antimonopoly purposes of the supporters of this special committee and the monopoly leanings of its opponents, that the junior Senator from Nebraska said that the special committee he proposed "is the most important committee in the United States Senate."

In specifying the kind of thing that his special committee would do in order to remove the strangle hold of monopoly from the neck of the small businessman, the junior Senator from Nebraska spoke particularly of railroad freight rates and transportation matters.

That is the stated program of the Republican majority in the Senate. I accept it.

Now the leaders in the Senate of the party to which I have the honor to belong, and their followers in the Senate, mainly on the Republican side but also to some small extent on the Democratic side, are soon to have an opportunity to show the country that they will seize this, the first, opportunity to give full effect, by their rejection of the monopoly bill (S. 110) to the reasons for their vote in January on the subject of special committees.

The bill now in committee, and shortly to be reported to the Senate, gives to the transportation industry immunity from the Sherman antitrust law and immunity from the Clayton Act. The bill legislates out of existence all antitrust laws on our statute books, so far as they deal with any and every transaction involving monopolies, trusts, and restraints on trade, on the following subjects: Rates, fares, charges, charges as between carriers, classifications, divisions, allowances, time schedules, routes, interchange of facilities, settlement of claims, promotion of safety, and operation or service.

No matter how uninformed a person may be on the technical subject matter in the foregoing list of 13 categories which would be exempted by the bill from the antitrust statutes, he will nevertheless see that the proposed exemptions are indeed broad. They are, in fact, far greater than he might realize. Some effects are plain and obvious. No person in this country, and no article of consumption, will be unaffected by the proposal to exempt rate fixing and fare fixing from the antitrust laws.

The breadth of the exemptions may be illustrated by referring to the 13th in the list I have just given. I say now, exactly what the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and I said in our minority views last year.

The fair-seeming phrase "promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service" is so broad as to legalize every monopoly action in the transportation industries. It can be construed to include the financing, construction, and utilization of equipment, safety devices, facilities, stations, and terminals. It would include action to prevent the building of spur tracks or other facilities needed by small shippers, and to forestall new types of services necessary to promote the needs of small business in an advancing economy.

Approval of combinations of such wide scope would legalize private cartels in transportation.

The proposed exemptions from the antitrust laws would promote monopoly of all forms of transportation, not only railroads. It would eliminate competition among trucks, busses, water carriers, freight forwarders, and pipe-line companies, as well as railroads.

This bill (S. 110) proposes to break down the antitrust statutes. It would legalize not only the monopoly strangle hold of railroads on shippers and on trucking and water carriers, but it would intensify the strangle hold of the big railroads on small railroads. Even without legalizing such a monopoly through undermining the antitrust statutes, the big railroads already hold the small railroads in an iron grip.

On this subject we have the most authoritative evidence for which the Senate could ask. We have testimony by railroad presidents themselves. Their testimony was taken before a standing committee of the Senate, the Interstate Commerce Committee. Their testimony was analyzed and reported to the Senate by two Senators whom all Members of this body have for years been zealous to honor. I refer to the then senior Senator from Montana, Mr. Wheeler, who was for years a member of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee and for additional years the distinguished chairman of that committee. I refer also to the then junior Senator from Missouri, now the President of the United States, who collaborated closely with the former Senator from Montana, and acquired vast knowledge of the subject matter of transportation. The two Senators were coauthors of the National Transportation Act of 1940.

In their report to the Senate these Senators, in behalf of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, summarized as follows the testimony which had been given to their committee by presidents of midwestern railroads, about the railroad association:

> Machinery for self-regulation has proved of little avail in the vital fields of freight-rate divisions, private-car rates, and Pullman Co. contracts. Railroad executives testified before this subcommittee that not only has nothing been achieved but that it is futile to expect any results from this railroad association, because it is dominated by a few powerful roads which are only working for their own interests and not the interests of the railroads as a whole.

Mr. President, I should like to present examples from their report based upon the testimony of railroad presidents and based upon the files of the railroad association, the Association of American Railroads. These examples fall within the proposed bumper crop of immunities which powerful railroads would reap from the railroad monopoly bill. First, I discuss the division of joint rates between two or more carriers participating in a joint or through haul of freight. The two distinguished Senators reported to the Senate that:

> Mr. Fred W. Sargent and Mr. Patrick H. Joyce, presidents, respectively, of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co. and the Chicago Great Western, two roads classed as midwestern trunk lines, testified that they considered the division of rates * * * unfair to the midwestern trunk lines as opposed to the western transcontinental lines.

Why are they unfair? Because of the strangle hold that the powerful railroads have over the smaller railroads in the Middle West and South and Southwest.

Senators Wheeler and Truman pointed out:

> At the time of the subcommittee's hearings, March 1938, there were only two railroads in the midwestern trunk-line territory which were not bankrupt. A very considerable part of the traffic of roads in that territory is transcontinental freight received from connecting carriers, and Mr. Sargent stated that he believed the division situation was one factor contributing to the bankrupt condition of the western roads, while Mr. Joyce thought that a fair rate division would have kept the roads out of receivership at least for a while and possibly could have prevented bankruptcy altogether.

But surely, one would suppose, the small roads can bargain for fair terms. Senators Wheeler and Truman asked that question, and this is what they learned:

> If freight rates are so important and if rate divisions are largely arrived at by negotiated agreements among the railroads themselves, why have not the individual roads challenged the agreements? The answer, according to Mr. Sargent, is that it is a delicate thing to do, because the originating carrier may then take the traffic away from the protesting road.

In other words, small railroads, singly, are even now unable to bargain with powerful roads. Nor can they even get collective bargaining with other middle-sized railroads in their own territory. I read further from the report of the two Senators:

> If an individual road jeopardizes its position by complaining, the question then arises as to whether the western trunk lines can act as a unit in protesting divisions which are equally unfair to them all. But apparently there were also difficulties in that line of action.
> The two western trunk-line roads which were not bankrupt were the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The former is controlled by the Union Pacific and the latter by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific, all three companies being western transcontinental lines. * * *
> The Illinois Central and the Burlington, being owned financially by the western transcontinental lines, were working in their interests rather than the interests of the midwestern trunk-lines group to which they belonged geographically.

So, first, we find the small railroad is unable to protect itself when it deals alone with the big road—for fear of losing business. Theoretically, it could even today, without any statute, weld into one collective bargaining unit all the smaller roads in its territory. But when it tries to do that it finds, among those roads, a fifth column—companies controlled by the big railroads directly.

One might say there is a national railroad association to which the smaller roads can appeal—the powerful and respected Association of American Railroads, which has machinery for the adjustment of disputes between railroads.

Let us see what happens when the small roads come before the bar of that association. I quote a painful story told by Senators Wheeler and Truman:

Presidents of two of the member roads in the AAR testified on their experience in securing assistance through the machinery of the AAR on rate divisions.

Mr. Sargent, president of the Chicago North Western, said that he had never considered using the Association of American Railroads' arbitration machinery because he believed it would be useless. Most of the directors of the association are connected with the eastern and far western roads. Asking them to readjust the rates at their own expense for the benefit of the middle western roads would be impossible in Mr. Sargent's opinion.

Mr. Sargent, president of the Chicago North Western, believed that not only the directors of the association were opposed to changing the divisions but that the method of voting in the association made it clearly impossible to obtain any satisfaction.

In short, when the president of the small railroad arrives at the national headquarters of the association, he finds the monopoly of the big railroads even more securely entrenched.

I now take up another of the examples of monopoly control presented to the Senate by Senators Wheeler and Truman. There is the important matter of private car lines—special refrigerators and tank cars, whose equipment must be leased by smaller railroads from a few powerful railroad corporations which own these car lines. These big railroads had such a monopoly from the very beginning that they never needed to get a bill in Congress to raise their rentals. I quote from the report of the two Senators:

Many railroad executives have felt that they were being exploited by the private car companies, paying excessive charges while the owners of the cars reap handsome profits. This view was expressed by one railroad president in the following testimony:

"We are paying 2 cents a mile for these cars, loaded and empty, which I believe is too much. There are 387,000 of these cars in the United States, and last year the railroads paid them $90,000,000, an average of $316 per car. Many of the cars are old and antiquated and almost rusted out. That is almost a 15-percent return. The companies that own these cars are making nice, handsome profits, while the railroads are suffering for just enough money to pay their own employees and buy materials and supplies."

These inflated rents conceal waste and inefficiency for which the smaller roads must pay. As one of their railroad presidents said:

There is another terrific waste in this matter, and that is in times of depression these cars are routed all around Robin Hood's barn in order to earn mileage. * * * We ought to have a rule which would provide that we would not pay mileage on these refrigerator cars except for the shortest mileage, and then if they wanted to route them all around the country they would not get this mileage for the long route. They would be paid for the shortest mileage between two given points.

The two Senators told the Senate:

The profits accruing to the private-car companies may be estimated by examining the huge dividends paid by the Pacific Fruit Express, the largest company, operating over one-third of the total private-car mileage in the country. Between 1930 and 1936 the Pacific Fruit Express paid almost $120,000,000 in dividends and the dividend rate reported by the company ranged from 30 percent to 103 percent. These profits, according to the president of the Chicago North Western, were made at the expense of the railroads.

The profit made by this private car line at the expense of the smaller railroads was for the benefit of its owners, two of the most powerful railroads in the country—the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. As a matter of fact, a large proportion of the income of those two railroads is in the form of profits of the car line they own, profits which are contributed to those two railroads by the smaller railroads that find themselves at the mercy of these powerful monopolistic concerns. In the period investigated by Senators Wheeler and Truman—1930 to 1936—the Pacific Fruit Express Co., the private car line they own, paid to the Southern Pacific dividends totaling $70,000,000 and to the Union Pacific, $45,000,000. These dividends, taken out of the depleted treasuries of the monopoly-gouged smaller railroads, constituted from 13 to 65 percent of the total annual income of the two monopolistic roads. In other words, in some years more than half the income of a big monopolistic railroad came out of the pockets of small railroads—and, I might add, out of the pockets of farmers and small businessmen who used these small roads.

With respect to these private-car rates, also, small roads were unable to get any relief from the monopoly-dominated Association of American Railroads.

The small roads tried the time-honored Government device of having an investigation made—but by their own railroad association. They asked the association to make a study of private-car rates. But such a study would show the extortionate profits exacted from the small railroads by the powerful big ones. The study was spiked by the presidents of the big roads.

A dramatic picture of how the large railroad corporations treat the small railroads, even when the large ones are subject to the antitrust laws, was given to the Senate by Senators Wheeler and Truman, as follows:

The Association of American Railroads repeatedly expressed as its aim self-regulatory methods which would prove that the industry could continue under private ownership on a workable basis. But insofar as the question of private cars was concerned it is doubtful whether the railroads had done more than escape from the Scylla of government regulations to the Charybdis of domination by the Union Pacific and its allies.

So complete is the present monopoly power of a few large railroads over the smaller railroads in the Middle West, the South, and other portions of the United States, that the former can treat the presidents of small railroads as if they did not even exist, despite their attendance at meetings of the presidents of all the railroads in their association. Senators Wheeler and Truman quoted at some length the testimony of one of the smaller railroad presidents, as follows:

I would like to add that this thing has been taken up verbally before the directors of the Association of American Railroads by our Mr. Parsons on two occasions, and, as Mr. Sargent has stated, the people who were on the board were directly concerned about the thing, and they were looking out of the window when we were trying to discuss it with them, and they adjourned the meeting in our faces when we wanted to take it up. * * * I was not feeling very happy, so I did not pay much attention to who was closing the door in my face, and just got out * * * they gave us a chance to talk, but they did not listen. I was talking to myself most of the time.

How did the Senate learn these inside stories? Some of the smaller railroads were in bankruptcy. Their presidents who in all previous years might speak within the association without being heard, and in public had to follow the line of the monopoly corporations, found themselves to be railroad operators for Federal judges. A few of them, taking their subsequent careers in their hands, burst all bounds for once, and revealed innermost secrets of the association to the Senate committee. Whether that can happen again in later times, one cannot say. Normally, officers of small roads must keep silent except to voice the dominant monopoly line.

The pending bill to break down the monopoly statutes gives railroads a monopoly power in their dealings with shippers and consumers, and increases the present monopolistic power of big railroads over small railroads. The bill would also exempt from all the antitrust statutes, first, the bankers who are all-powerful in railroad affairs; second, the manufacturers of equipment, many of whom have close personal ties with railroad bankers and railroad directors, at the expense of the railroads themselves; and third, powerful industrial corporations which are in some instances more powerful than the great railroad corporations.

The proposed exemption from the antitrust laws would set up a "private government" more powerful than any Government agency dealing with transportation.

I repeat what I said last year about the threat to our American system, including small business. Senate bill 110, the railroad monopoly bill, would cartelize the transportation industry. Transportation costs are a major element in determining the prices of goods in other industries. The power to control the cost of transportation is a power which may be used to dictate whether other businesses, particularly small business, shall enjoy competitive success or be stifled to death. Analysis of the bill shows that it would permit the legalization of private controls over the Nation's economy not only by transportation combinations but, under the broad terms of the bill, by industrial and financial combines working in alliance with combinations in the transportation industry. This proposed legislation sets a pattern for supplanting the American system of competitive enterprise and for the cartelization of the Nation's entire economy.

The farmers and small businessmen and consumers do not have to theorize about the damage the rail monopoly bills would do to them. They, and particularly the farmers and businessmen and consumers in Nebraska and adjoining Midwestern States, already know. In their very midst, in the Federal court in the home State of the junior Senator from Nebraska, the author of the resolution to protect small business, the Federal Government is now trying to stop railroad monopoly. The pending rail monopoly bill would throw that lawsuit and the protection of the small man into the wastebasket.

If enacted into law, the rail monopoly bill would cut the antitrust laws from the heart of our economy—the transportation industry. Such legislation would be an opening wedge in entirely destroying the antitrust laws, designed to guard and preserve the American system of free enterprise. A dangerous precedent would be set, encouraging other powerful groups to seek legislation immunizing them from established laws and from the power of the courts to enforce them.

We are told that S. 110 will place power in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Free enterprise and prohibition of monopolies are matters of high policy, and have been ingrained in our national economic life for many decades. Either Congress says that we stick to that policy or exceptions can be made to it. Do we want any commission to have the power to make inroads on that high policy? That would be an invitation, an incitation, to break down the antitrust policy of our Nation. What would we foresee as the effect of a bill which says "Do not kill your innocent neighbor, unless a commission approves it"? Suppose we were to enact a law forbidding theft, unless a commission approved it. Shall we say that the Ten Commandments are fine, unless a commission grants immunity to powerful persons to violate those Commandments? Are not our antimonopoly laws part of the sacred commandments of our Nation in the economic field?

This is not the first attempt to break down the monopoly statutes for the benefit of special groups. Such an attempt was made only recently, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, to assist insurance companies, and particularly property-insurance companies, which have made arrangements, in restraint of trade, extorting excessive insurance premiums from the American consumer and the American businessman, including the small businessman. That effort to break down the monopoly statutes was defeated largely through the single-handed efforts of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

In the Seventy-ninth Congress, also, there was an attempt to help the railroad corporations to break down the monopoly statutes. That attempt failed. It is now being renewed.

The Republican leadership in the Senate has urged in this Congress that we Republicans are the party opposed to monopoly, and that the Democrats, who were in the majority until the end of the Seventy-ninth Congress, were promoting monopoly and big business. The attempt to break down antitrust statutes failed in the Seventy-ninth Congress. I trust that such attempts will not be permitted to succeed in the Eightieth Congress under the majority control of my party.

Let me make it clear at this point that I have great respect indeed for the stanch integrity and great sincerity of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. He has a wide knowledge of technical railroad matters, not surpassed or even equaled, in my opinion, by that of any other Member of this body. I regret to find myself opposed to him on this subject, but my long-standing opposition to monopoly and my devotion to the antitrust statutes, which are a bulwark of all the people, leaves me no other course.

Let me refer to the present status of Senate bill 110. Unless the railroads change their strategy, Congress will soon have an opportunity to vote on this bill for the entrenchment of monopoly and big corporations.

The word has spread around the Capitol that the big railroads and their association are confident that they can get this bill for the creation and entrenchment of monopolies through the Senate with the greatest of ease.

I trust that this expectation will be defeated by all Senators. I look especially to my colleagues on the Republican side and those on the Democratic side who voted for the resolution to create a special committee for small business. This is their great opportunity to mobilize and speed to the defense of the small businessman. It is a far greater opportunity than any chance they can ever get to help the small businessman, through the functioning of their committee. Investigating committees can only make studies and inquiries. They cannot legislate. Nothing that an investigating committee can do will be more than a drop in the bucket compared with the major flood that will be unloosed against the small businessman by dynamiting all the antitrust statutes that have been in force for half a century or more.

Let not the propaganda dishearten those who want to protect the small businessman and the farmers and the great multitude of consumers in this country. We have a real opportunity to defeat this threat to the public and to our economy of free enterprise. This is shown by the recent votes in this body. I refer to them, not to revive debate on special committees, but to point to our chance for victory now.

In the votes on the creation of the special committees, if we count absent Senators for whom pairs were refused, the resolutions were carried by a margin of only one and two votes, respectively.

Let us assume, however, that the supporters of the rail monopoly bill can muster—as I trust they cannot—a majority in the Senate and the House. They can still be defeated by a veto. A veto can still save small business in America, farmers in America, the workingmen of America, and consumers in America.

I appeal to the President of the United States to make it clear that he will veto the attempt to wreck the antitrust statutes in case the bill for this purpose reaches him. Though he had no opportunity to veto the legislative action on the recent resolutions, he can prevent the undermining of the antitrust statutes if the bill should be squeezed through Congress.

The reports which he submitted to the Senate with reference to the railroad industry have shown that in past years he has been on the side of the people against monopoly. I say to those of my colleagues in this Chamber who are on the same side that we should go forward in this struggle with every confidence that if this bill passes the two branches of Congress it will meet a veto in the White House. Then if we shall have shown sufficient strength in the voting in each Chamber, it will become clear that a veto of this bill cannot be overridden in Congress.

I shall close with one special plea to my Republican colleagues. Our leaders have said on the floor of the Senate in words that I have already quoted that our party is the party of the small businessman, and not the party of big corporations and of monopoly. Let us avail ourselves of the wonderful opportunity which will come to us in all probability in February of this year to demonstrate that no bill to break down the antitrust statutes can pass through Congress while the Republicans hold a majority.

FINAL REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE PETROLEUM RESOURCES (S. REPT NO. 9)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I file with the Senate the final report of the Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources. I shall not now take the time of the Senate to discuss the report at length except to say that, in addition to the committee text, the document contains the concurring views of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], who devoted full time to the study conducted by the committee. I make this statement at this time because notice has been given to the press that the report would be filed immediately after the convening of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in filing the report, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there was originally appropriated for the use of the committee, from the contingent funds of the Senate, the sum of $25,000. Of that sum there was expended during the chairmanship of the late Senator Maloney, of Connecticut, $12,372.66, leaving a balance, as of February 9, 1945, of $12,627.34.

From February 15, 1945, to April 30, 1946, under the present chairmanship, there was expended the sum of $10,218.12, leaving a balance of $2,409.22. In June 1946, an additional appropriation was made in the sum of $7,500 so that at that time there was available $9,909.22. Since that time the sum of $5,316.98 has been expended, leaving on hand at this moment of the total appropriation of $32,500 a balance of $4,592.24. Unpaid obligations have been incurred in a sum not to exceed $1,000, so that the final unexpended balance to revert to the Senate will be approximately $3,500.

I desire also, Mr. President, to ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the record of distribution of the printed hearings of this committee. The members of the committee are entitled to take considerable satisfaction from the fact that the Superintendent of Documents has sold to the public 7,801 copies of the various issues.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter which the chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources received from the chief counsel of the committee, Mr. Henry S. Fraser, resigning from that position. Mr. Fraser was appointed to the staff of the committee when the committee was first organized. He has done a very excellent professional piece of work for the committee, and I feel that the filing of the final report should not be made without notice on the floor of the Senate of the excellent service he has rendered in the conduct of the hearings and the preparation of the report.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING
PETROLEUM RESOURCES,
January 24, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Chairman, Special Committee Investigating Petroleum Resources,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: Now that the committee's report, containing the recommendations for a national petroleum policy both for the immediate and the more distant future, has been completed and will be submitted by you to the Senate within the next few days, I believe that the time has come for me to resign as the committee's counsel, which I hereby do, effective upon presentation of the report to the Senate.

My association with the members of the committee, and the nature of the important tasks undertaken by the group, have been a source of keen pleasure to me from the outset. It has been an inspiration to work with all of you and to witness the conscientious and patriotic labor bestowed by yourself and your colleagues upon the formulation of a sound petroleum policy for the United States.

I trust that the recommendations of the committee will find general acceptance not only in the Senate but in the country at large. If the recommendations are followed, I venture to predict that, whatever may be the ultimate fate of this Nation, history will not record its demise because of lack of oil.

I also hope that the committee will be continued as a special committee by the Senate, in order that the vital oil questions, both existing and future, and affecting the welfare of the Nation in peace and in war, will receive the immediate, uninterrupted, and expert attention that they merit at the hands of the Senate.

Faithfully yours,

HENRY S. FRASER,
Chief Counsel.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of the tenor of the remarks which were made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with respect to the importance of antitrust procedure, I venture to recommend to him and to all the Members of the Senate a reading of this report, because it shows rather graphically, it seems to me, the effect upon world economy of the expansion of business in the hands of great units. I say this without any thought of criticism, but only to call the attention of the Senate to the facts which are set forth in this document.

I believe that the time has come when the Congress and the people of the United States must decide definitely whether they desire to maintain a competitive economy or whether they are willing to drift into authoritarianism. The authoritarian end is inevitable if the drift is not stopped. If the people of the United States actually desire to maintain a free economy, they must realize that our economy is no longer one of individuals operating with their own resources and their own labor, but is a collective economy dominated by giant corporations with sometimes hundreds of thousands of stockholders and hundreds of thousands of employees who constitute indeed collective industrial enterprises.

That fact which confronts us, regardless of how we may think about it, is one of the most important, if not the most important for the consideration of leaders in business and in government throughout the world. Collectivism in business leads inevitably to collectivism in government.

EXEMPTIONS FROM ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words in regard to the subject discussed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] a while ago.

During the previous Congress I voted against the Bulwinkle bill in the committee, which then was the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and which is now the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, not because it involved simply railroads but because I deplored the tendency in the Congress to undertake to forestall decisions of the Supreme Court by legislation taking out of the category of corporations coming under the antitrust laws any group of corporations. An effort of that kind was made in regard to insurance companies. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] contributed in a very constructive and statesmanlike way, as did also the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], to prevent what was attempted in the first instance to be done in that regard. In my judgment there is no more reason why railroads should be exempt from the antitrust laws than that airplanes or bus lines or any other form of transportation that is charged with a public service should be exempt from those laws. By analogy, we might say that the automobile industry, which certainly is a very major factor today in our transportation system, and is charged with a public duty, ought also to be exempt from the antitrust laws, and that the steel companies, which supply products to transportation companies and manufacturing concerns, by reason of the fact that they are charged with a public interest, ought also to be exempt from the antitrust laws.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Let me inquire whether the industries the Senator has named—the automobile industry and the steel industry—are regulated by a public service commission which prescribes their rates and governs them with an iron hand.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the automobile industry and the steel industry are not regulated, in a sense, by a public commission set up by Congress for their regulation. They are regulated by the antitrust laws. Their conduct is regulated. Certainly the air-line transportation companies are regulated by a public commission. The bus lines and the steamboat companies are regulated by a commission created by the Congress of the United States. So I see no reason why the railroads, simply because they are railroads, should be exempted from the application of the antitrust laws.

I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has made a definite contribution to the solution of this problem by the very able address he has delivered. Probably I am induced to say that because his address conforms to my own views, expressed in the last Congress on that subject. I shall vote against the bill again if it is brought forward, but I hope it will not be brought forward, because I do not believe there can be any justification for removing any one type of corporations, no matter what they may be, from the application of the antitrust laws merely because their rates and practices may happen to be regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission which was created by the Congress of the United States.

WISCONSIN CENTENNIAL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the whole State of Wisconsin is joyously looking forward to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the Badger State to the Union, which will be celebrated on May 29, 1948. In line with the plans for the commemoration of the centennial, I have just heard from the Acting Postmaster General that he sees no reason why my suggestion for a special Wisconsin centennial stamp should not be adopted. On a similar matter the Librarian of Congress has now advised me of his full and eager cooperation with my suggestion for the holding of a 3- to 4-month exhibition in the Library in commemoration of the centennial. Furthermore, my bill, Senate bill 126, instructing the Director of the Mint to prepare 500,000 50-cent coins in commemoration of the centennial, has been referred to a subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and I am hoping for early action on it there.

Appropriately enough, I have just received a very interesting and stimulating poem entitled "Wisconsin" by a poet-priest, Father Henry Stehling. The poem was sent in by a brother cleric, and it reflects the beauties and splendors of my State, which Father Stehling, a native of Wisconsin, knows so well. His 33 years as a priest have been spent primarily in the country amidst the natural splendors of the Badger State. Let me add that a volume of poetry by Father Stehling is soon to be published, and his verses have already received wide renown. I ask unanimous consent that the text of Father Stehling's poem be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WISCONSIN

Its playgrounds, parks, its shrines and homes,
On highways, byways where one roams,
In valley, plain, upon the hills,
Wisconsin always, always thrills.

On fertile hillside, valley deep,
Contented cattle graze with sheep;
Here fancy poultry, hogs one sees,
And splendid fur farms, dogs, and bees.

Its dairy herds in steady stream
Send butter, cheese, and milk and cream
To all the world, the finest grade
That nature, man has ever made.

With agriculture, industry,
In up-to-date diversity,
Produces its commodities
For mankind's joy, necessities.

Religious, tolerant, and kind,
In politics, an open mind,
Progressive in its social rules,
With high ideals in all its schools.

In forests, lakes, the sportsmen wise
Wisconsin find a paradise.
Abundant game in woods is found,
Its streams and lakes with fish abound.

In work, endeavor, sports or play,
In music, mention what you may,
Wisconsin stands out ev'ry way,
The Eden of the U. S. A.

FORMULA FOR COAL PEACE—STATEMENT BY HON. JAMES M. COX

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, during the coal strike before Christmas the attention of the Nation was largely directed toward a suggestion by a distinguished citizen of the United States, and of the State of Florida, a former Governor of Ohio, Hon. James M. Cox, for handling problems of this character in the future. Governor Cox suggested that Congress should enact legislation enabling the coal industry of the Nation to be organized and operated under an authority in spirit comparable to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The Senate will do well to study and consider these words of a distinguished American citizen of broad experience in government.

Every Member of this body knows Governor Cox for his record as Governor of Ohio, as the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1920, and for his continued far-sighted, active national citizenship for more than half a century. He has drawn upon his memoirs recently to complete a historical autobiography, and the vast store of knowledge and experience in that volume is valuable in this Nation's current history.

Governor Cox's views on the proper system for handling one of the Nation's vital industries are based upon his broad experience in public affairs, and his concern for labor and industry, particularly as they relate to the general welfare, and we may be sure his recommendations are sincere and unselfish.

Mr. President, I should like not only to have published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article containing the statement of Governor Cox, but I suggest to the committee or committees considering labor and industrial legislation that his suggestion, and the basic proposal it advances, be considered along with the various bills and proposals which may come before them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORMULA FOR COAL PEACE—GOVERNOR COX SUGGESTS TVA SET-UP FOR MINING

DAYTON, OHIO, November 28.—Former Gov. James M. Cox, of Ohio, Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1920, said today that Congress should enact legislation enabling the Nation's coal industry to be "organized and operated under an authority in spirit comparable to" the Tennessee Valley Authority.

"We have allowed control of this prime necessity—coal—to be placed so carelessly that at the behest of one man the industry is in collapse," Cox said. "This situation must be taken in hand firmly as a whole."

Stating that miners "have been left to live in squalor, not knowing how to live themselves or how the rest of the country lives," Cox said, "the miners believe, with some justification, that John L. Lewis has been their only friend.

"With the power over coal now in the hands of one man, there rises a dynasty in coal maintained with the pomp of a kingly throne.

"In my judgment there is one clear answer. The mining industry and the people employed in it must be humanized. To that end the industry must be organized and operated under an authority in spirit comparable to that which is lifting the Tennessee Valley to new heights of happiness, efficiency, and prosperity.

"The conservation of coal, and much more, the conservation of the manhood linked to coal, calls for this approach. Lacking such a measure, the end of this strike will but be the beginning of more such strikes to come.

"This may be called socialistic. I know of no measure for human welfare that has not been denounced at its beginning by some vested interests as socialistic.

"Congress should pass at once an act providing for such an authority and laying out rules to govern it. Congress should further set up at once a committee of inquiry so that the whole country may see the state of things in the mining camps and realize how neglectful we have been."

SURPLUS PROPERTY SUBCOMMITTEE REPORTS UNEXPENDED BALANCE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. Kurt Borchardt, the counsel of the Surplus Property Subcommittee, setting forth the financial status of the committee. This subcommittee of the old Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress had, for example, jurisdiction of surplus property. It brought out the legislation on stock piling and the legislation on contract settlements, it cooperated in bringing out the reconversion act, and it covered a large field of activity.

In the report which I have filed, report No. 1021, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, there is a full and detailed statement of the expenditures up to that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS, SUBCOMMITTEE ON SURPLUS PROPERTY,
January 29, 1947.

The Honorable JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: Senate resolution 236, agreed to March 1946, made available $48,300 for the 12-month period beginning April 1, 1946.

Together with the balance then on hand the total available amounted to $59,730.77.

As of January 31, 1947, the Surplus Property Subcommittee will have on hand an unexpended balance of $31,051.49.

The total amount expended between April 1, 1946, and January 31, 1947, amounts to $28,679.28, of which more than $26,000 were expended for salaries while the balance went for reporting, telephone and telegraph, travel, and miscellaneous office expenses.

Sincerely yours,

KURT BORCHARDT,
Counsel, Surplus Property Subcommittee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the letter of Mr. Borchardt to which I now refer shows that as of this date, January 31, 1947, the date upon which the authority of the committee to make any expenditures expires, there is on hand a balance of $31,051.49, which, of course, reverts to the treasury of the Senate.

Let me add, Mr. President, that Mr. Borchardt has served the committee with conspicuous ability and objectivity.

I wish also to lay on the desk of the Presiding Officer a problem which, as chairman of this expiring committee, I am unable to decide.

The Committee on Armed Services has taken jurisdiction of a resolution which was offered by myself with respect to the disposal of the Big Inch pipe lines. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] a few days ago submitted a resolution asking for an appropriation of $100,000 for the Committee on Executive Expenditures, as I understood, to enable that committee to handle problems relating to surplus property.

The committee of which I was chairman has files and papers which will be of value, but until a decision is made by the Presiding Officer or by the Senate as to which committee will have jurisdiction of surplus property, and of the other matters covered by the files, I am at a loss to know to whom to turn the files over, and I should like to have the advice of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is typical of several questions of reference which are capable of two or even sometimes three different answers, and each case has to be studied by itself. The Chair is not prepared to answer the Senator this afternoon, but will be at the next session of the Senate.

VETERANS' RIGHTS IN THE DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS PROPERTY

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, month after month veterans in the State of South Dakota have been trying to get access to some surplus property, largely without success. Many of these veterans have tried to purchase articles of various kinds, from trucks to caterpillar tractors, road machines, and so forth, but they do not get anywhere with their applications. The War Assets Administration apparently is indifferent to the applications of the farmer veterans of South Dakota.

In this connection a matter has just been called to my attention which I think should be given consideration by the Special War Investigating Committee. The War Assets Administration advises me this morning that the George A. Fuller Co., located at Salt Lake City, Utah, received a fee of $300,000 for looking after surplus property, and that a company known as the Walsh Construction Co., of New York, received a fee of $25,000 for doing similar work.

Mr. President, from my experience with the farmer veterans of my State who are seeking to obtain some little part of the war surplus property in various places, I think such exorbitant fees collected by these companies, whoever they are or whatever they are, are certainly out of line, and I suggest that the War Investigating Committee give consideration to an investigation of the collection of such fees as those I have mentioned.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, I should like to say that, as I recall, it was suggested that the disposal of surplus war assets should be in the hands of the Committee on Armed Services. The chairman of that committee is not present at the moment, and I do not make the statement authoritatively, but if I am correct in what I think he said, he was perfectly willing to have that matter referred to his committee.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I thank the Senator.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of both the House and of the Senate, plan to conduct a joint investigation of the disposal of surplus property. This investigation will not only include disposal by the War Assets Administration but the disposal of surplus property by any other agency of the Government, regardless of where it may be.

We are simply awaiting an appropriation by this body before proceeding with the investigation, which is to be under the direction of the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON]. I think no time should be lost in starting the investigation.

What the distinguished Senator from South Dakota has pointed out is merely one thing that is going on.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I realize that.

Mr. AIKEN. I feel that if steps are not taken pretty soon, almost within the next few days, to look into the disposal of surplus war assets, we may face a demoralization of price structure of certain commodities throughout the country. For instance, in one city the War Assets Administration may put up a certain quantity of goods of a certain quality, at a fixed price, and a customer will buy at that price. In another city, they will offer the same quality of goods, perhaps in equal amount or in varying amounts, to the highest bidder. The highest bid may be less than half the amount which the customer in the other city paid as a fixed price. In some instances, hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost to the Government by this slipshod method of disposal, because purchasers who paid the higher prices have come back and asked for a refund of the difference.

I understand this has now reached such a point that thousands of claims for refunds are being made by persons who have bought surplus property at one price, only to find that their competitors have been able to buy at half the price. The situation demands the immediate attention of Congress. There is no time to be lost.

Our committee is set up, ready to do the work, just as soon as we obtain an appropriation from the Senate.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I thank the Senator. Certainly, there is no justification for paying a fee of $300,000 to anyone for peddling surplus property.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I merely wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont that, while the committee is investigating the matter to which he has referred, I should like to call its attention to the fact that the Army has not released thousands of jeeps, automobiles, and trucks, which are piled up at Ogden, Utah, and that some steps should be taken to assure their release by the Army. General Hughes himself has said that thousands upon thousands of trucks, jeeps, and automobiles are rusting there, going to waste. I hope the Senator's committee will also investigate that matter.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that when I first appointed the subcommittee it was to investigate the affairs of the War Assets Administration. I was advised that this authority might not be broad enough to permit investigation into property still held by the War Department or other departments of Government. For that reason, I am broadening the authority of the subcommittee to authorize them to investigate the disposal of surplus property wherever they may find it, because I do not believe that the War Department, the Navy Department, or any other department of the Government, should be exempted from such investigation.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield further, I should like to say that I hope that in the course of the investigation the Senator from Vermont will also find some way to enable small States, such as Montana, North Dakota, and others, to obtain some of this surplus property within their borders, in order that their citizens may not have to travel many hundred miles to locate jeeps, or trucks, or tractors. I think some such provision should be made, and I think the Senator's committee is the proper one to handle the problem.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, just so soon as the money is appropriated, I am sure the subcommittee, under the able leadership of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], will go into all phases affecting the disposal of surplus property, including the matter just mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota. Many others have spoken to me about that particular matter, indicating that it is impossible for the little fellow to get surplus property. In some instances the distance he is required to travel is too great. He may be required to go first to one city and then to another, and by the time he returns to his home he will have spent for traveling expenses all the money he intended to use in the purchase of surplus property.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Having in mind the comments of the Senator from Vermont, I will say that a farmer in my State, who applied to the War Assets Administration in South Dakota for a scraper, was finally told, after months and months of delay, that he could get one down in Georgia. Imagine sending a farmer from South Dakota to Georgia to buy a scraper.

Mr. AIKEN. And it is entirely possible that when he got to Georgia he would be sent to Galveston or somewhere else, before he found a scraper.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am not sure I understood the Senator correctly in regard to the broadening of the scope of his subcommittee. As I understood the Senator, he said that the original scope was to include the disposal of surplus property by the War Assets Administration.

Mr. AIKEN. It covered the War Assets Administration only.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I further understand that the Senator now proposes to broaden the scope of the investigation so as to cover surplus property wherever it may exist.

Mr. AIKEN. Wherever it may be found.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, we have had some experience with instances of this kind: An item does not become surplus until declared to be such by either the War or Navy Department; in which case it is turned over to the War Assets Administration. Does the Senator propose that his subcommittee shall have authority to go into supplies that are held by the Army and the Navy, perhaps for strategic purposes, prior to the time they are declared surplus by the War and Navy Departments?

Mr. AIKEN. If the War or Navy Department is holding back hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of supplies which are in a deteriorating condition, which perhaps ought to be declared surplus, I believe that my committee has full authority, under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, to ascertain the facts.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, Mr. President, there are two situations. We found a number of instances of the War and Navy Departments having declared to be surplus certain supplies which would be held at an Army or a Navy depot pending actual possession being taken of them by the War Assets Administration. That is one type of situation. Another situation is where the Army and the Navy are keeping for use of the military forces certain supplies which in their judgment are necessary for the national defense program. Is it proposed that this subcommittee—I am merely seeking information for clarification—shall go into that phase of the matter?

Mr. AIKEN. If the property is not needed for use by the armed forces, or if it is being wasted, or is deteriorating, I feel the subcommittee would have full authority to investigate. For instance, I understand the largest naval depot in the Senator's own State has declared as surplus perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property. I do not know that I can pronounce the name of the depot.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It is Port Hueneme.

Mr. AIKEN. I shall leave that to the Senator from California. I understand the declaration of surplus at that yard was recently revoked; I do not know why.

I feel, though, that our committee, which is authorized to investigate the operations of the Government at all levels with a view to promoting economy and efficiency, would have every right to inquire and to find out why surplus property is handled in this way—why it is declared surplus, why a declaration is revoked, or whatever else takes place in regard to property, which appears not to be necessary to the armed services.

The armed services, of course, are entitled to keep any property that is necessary. The subcommittee would have no power to force them to dispose of it. But, as I understand the law, we do have the power of investigation to determine whether they are withholding from the market huge quantities of goods which they will never use, the holding of which will result in a real loss to the taxpayers.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I see the able junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] on the floor and I should like to address a query to him. As I understand, the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program held a meeting this morning and heard testimony. Is that correct?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct. I did not attend the entire meeting of the committee, because I was obliged to attend a meeting of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator from California tell the Senate why the meeting was held before the minority had announced its membership on the committee?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the chairman of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, said that he had communicated to the hold-over members from the minority side of the Chamber relative to the proposed meeting, and he also had communicated with those Senators whom he understood were going to be members of the committee representing the minority, the reasons for holding the particular hearing at this time. The witness who appeared before the committee is retiring from the Government service today. He has just been married. He is going on his honeymoon tonight and would not be available for testimony if his testimony had not been heard today. That reason was given by the chairman of the committee to the minority members who were on the committee, and also to those he understood would be placed on the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, is a very able man and a very farsighted man, but I, myself, did not know until 12 o'clock today who was going to compose the minority membership of this committee, and how the Senator from Maine, even with his great powers of necromancy and clairvoyance should have known in advance who these minority members would be is somewhat beyond me.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What was done, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, may demonstrate the investigative capacity of the investigating committee. But I will state further that the chairman guessed correctly as to two of the Senators who were to be members of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the chairman's imagination will not take him as far afield in the matter of war investigation as he heretofore seems to have gone in indulging in prophecy respecting who should be named members of the committee from the minority.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say that the chairman's investigative capacity seems to be very good, because two of the Senators with whom he communicated turned out to have been named as members of the committee by the minority.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose that to be 50 percent correct is about all we can expect under the circumstances.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the only suggestion I desire to make is that it seems to me that the minority members of the committee should also have a right to examine any important witness who appears before the committee. Simply because a witness is going on a honeymoon is not a sufficient reason for denying Senators on this side of the aisle the right to cross examine one who may be a material witness. If he is as important as the majority apparently thinks he is, no meeting should have been held unless minority members of the committee were present. I hope that what has just occurred is not a practice which is going to be followed in the future by the majority in holding meetings of this kind when the minority members are not present.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the distinguished minority whip that there was certainly no endeavor on the part of the investigating committee to show any disrespect to our colleagues on the minority side of the aisle. I call the Senators' attention to the fact, however, that the minority has had more than 10 days in which to make their appointments to the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, and because there are a number of matters of importance pending, the committee did not feel under the circumstances I have outlined, that it could delay indefinitely the holding of hearings.

FURNISHING AUTOMOBILES TO DISABLED VETERANS—REFERENCE OF BILLS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Presiding Officer to a parliamentary situation which is now confronting the Senate. On January 6 the Senator from Illinois introduced Senate bill 54 which relates to the furnishing of automobiles to disabled veterans. The Presiding Officer referred that bill to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and, I presume, did so under paragraphs 16 and 19 relating to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

My colleague the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], on January 27, 1947, also introduced a bill (Senate bill 357), relating to the furnishing of automobiles to disabled veterans. While the substance of the two bills is different, their objective is the same. The latter bill, I will say to the distinguished President pro tempore, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

I have conferred with the Parliamentarian respecting the situation and he advises me that the two bills ought to be in one committee or the other. It is immaterial to the Senator from Illinois to which committee the bills are referred, but I am now merely calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that two committees will be considering bills of similar purport, unless one committee is discharged from further consideration, and the bill is returned to the Senate and referred to the proper committee. I am ready to have that done if the Chair will advise me to which committee he thinks the bill should go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to take the matter under advisement and make an announcement later.

Mr. LUCAS. That is perfectly satisfactory to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thanks the Senator from Illinois for raising the question.

Mr. LUCAS. The only reason I have raised the question is because of the duplication of effort involved. Obviously the matters will be dealt with more efficiently, before one committee. That is in keeping with the basic principle of the Reorganization Act.

FILES OF A SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] submitted a parliamentary inquiry a few moments ago. It seems to the Chair that under the language of section 140 of the Reorganization Act and within the spirit of the language of section 140 the records to which the Senator from Wyoming referred are noncurrent records and therefore they can appropriately be deposited with the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Chair.

REFERENCE OF BILLS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to rule upon the point of order raised by the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] a few moments ago. The Senator from Illinois pointed to the fact that Senate bill 357 introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] was referred to the Committee on Finance, and that Senate bill 54, introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, although both refer by title to the fact that they are bills relating to the furnishing of automobiles to disabled veterans.

The Senator from Illinois is obviously correct in his belief that both bills should be referred to the same committee. As the Chair indicated at the time, it is typical of some of the difficulties which confront the Chair in making references of bills to committees until the Senate has had a more standardized experience under the Reorganization Act. For instance, in this case, the Reorganization Act clearly gives the Committee on Finance jurisdiction over veterans' measures generally. Obviously both these bills fall within the category of veterans' measures generally. On the other hand, the Reorganization Act gives specific jurisdiction to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of vocational rehabilitation and education of veterans, and readjustment of servicemen to civil life.

In the presence of this conflict of eligible jurisdictions over these two bills, the Chair is required to consult what he considers to be the preponderance of justification. The opinion of the Chair is that both bills should go to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to which Senate bill 54 was originally referred. Therefore, under this ruling, the Committee on Finance should be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 357 and the bill should be referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. Unless there is objection, that order will be entered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the order is entered.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE ECONOMIC REPORT (S. REPT. NO. 11)

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to file and read the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report. The report is as follows:

The Joint Committee on the Economic Report was established under the terms of section 5 of Public Law 304, approved February 20, 1946. Section 5, as amended by Public Law 601, approved August 2, 1946, reads, in part, as follows:

"SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby established a Joint Committee on the Economic Report, to be composed of seven Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The party representation on the joint committee shall as nearly as may be feasible reflect the relative membership of the majority and minority parties in the Senate and House of Representatives.

"(b) It shall be the function of the joint committee—

"(1) to make a continuing study of matters relating to the economic report;

"(2) to study means of coordinating programs in order to further the policy of this act; and

"(3) as a guide to the several committees of the Congress dealing with legislation relating to the economic report, not later than February 1 of each year (beginning with the year 1947), to file a report with the Senate and the House of Representatives containing its findings and recommendations with respect to each of the main recommendations made by the President in the Economic Report, and from time to time to make such other reports and recommendations to the Senate and House of Representatives as it deems advisable."

Although the act became a law February 20, 1946, the President did not appoint the Council of Economic Advisers provided for by section 4 of the act until July 25, 1946. This joint committee was not appointed until just before Congress adjourned, and it was not practicable to set up a staff or begin the work during the last Congress. Five members of the committee were not elected to the Eightieth Congress, and it was necessary to reconstitute and reorganize the committee this month. No staff has yet been appointed. The problems to be considered by the committee are the most complex economic problems which the country faces, and it is vitally important that the best possible staff and consultants be procured in order that the best possible studies may be made. The committee is now engaged in canvassing the qualifications of a number of men for this work, but as yet has not selected these men or begun the necessary studies.

The committee has considered the report of the Council of Economic Advisers to the President, made in December 1946 (S. Doc. No. 6), and the Economic Report of the President transmitted to the Congress on January 8, 1947 (H. Doc. No. 49). It has particularly considered the recommendations of the President in the short-range program appearing on pages 20, 21, and 22 of his report. The committee agrees with the President that removal of wartime controls and the return to a freer economy places on business, farmers, labor, management, and consumers the main responsibility for working out price and wage relationships. The committee joins in the President's hope that business will reduce prices; that labor will refrain from excessive wage demands; and that both will bend every effort to increase productivity.

The short-range recommendations of the President calling for congressional action may be summarized as follows:

1. Congress should extend rent control.
2. Congress should extend the coverage and raise the rate of the minimum wage.
3. Congress should extend the coverage and revise the benefits under the social-security system.
4. Congress should enact a long-range, comprehensive housing program.
5. While the tax burden should be reduced as soon as possible, it should not be reduced at this time.
6. Congress should deal with the whole field of labor-management relations in which sound collective bargaining is essential.

All of these six matters are already under consideration by standing committees of Congress, which will make a detailed study of each one of them and submit recommendations to the Congress. Most of them are highly controversial. A recommendation from this committee at this time which could only be casual before our studies are made, would not be helpful to the solution of the problems. The committee will proceed to consider these problems with reference to their effect on the maintenance of a stable economy and continuous employment.

The basic problem which this committee has to consider is the method of preventing depressions so that substantially full employment may be continuously maintained. No problem before the American people is more vital to our welfare, to the very existence of our way of life, and to the peace of the world. It is the most complex and difficult of all the long-range domestic problems we have to face. It involves a study of price levels and wage levels and their relation to each other, a study of methods of preventing monopoly control in industry and labor from distorting prices and wages, a study of spending for consumption and for capital investment, a study of individual and corporate savings, and a study of many other economic forces bearing on a stable economy.

Until we have further studied and analyzed the basic considerations which underlie this problem, we do not feel we should become involved in controversy on current issues which have many aspects besides their effect on the prosperity of the country.

With regard to the President's long-range program, no immediate recommendations are necessary. The committee will proceed to consider his different proposals as rapidly as we can reach them, to determine whether they bear a relation to the principal task of this committee and, if they do, make recommendations to Congress with regard to them.

The committee notes with approval that the report places special emphasis upon an over-all policy directed toward the preservation in agriculture of the family-sized farm (p. 25) and in industry of free competitive enterprise (p. 28). The details of a program to prevent another agricultural depression and of an affirmative program, in the words of the report, "to enlarge the opportunities for efficient and enterprising small businesses" will be among the primary subjects of committee study.

Regardless of the recommendations of the report on which there may or may not be controversy, it is our desire to commend the compilation of statistics and economic facts which are contained in the President's report and furnish a substantial basis for further study.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to express the feeling of satisfaction which I am sure the members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report have had with the two meetings which have been conducted under the able chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. Both those meetings had a full attendance, and the preparation of the report had the attention of all members of the committee. I feel that the filing of the report today is a very good augury for the complete study of the economic base of our society, which is so essential. We now have, created and functioning, a system in which the Executive, through the Council of Economic Advisers, and the Congress, through this joint committee, will for the first time endeavor to study the impact of economic events and legislative action upon the American way of life. I congratulate the Senator from Ohio for his leadership in this matter.

NATIONAL FOOD ALLOTMENT—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on January 10, Senate bill 131 was introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. It is a bill providing, roughly, for the disposition of agricultural surplus commodities through a stamp plan to populations in the cities. It has two aspects, the consumer aspect and the agricultural aspect. At this time I ask that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with the understanding that if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommends the bill, I may request at that time that it be again referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare for further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Ohio for requesting the change of reference of this bill, which relates both to human welfare, in the form of an adequate minimum diet, and also to the disposal of surplus farm commodities. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has previously considered this bill. The Department of Agriculture has done most of the work in reference to defining an adequate minimum diet. Therefore, I feel that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry should have first consideration of the bill. If later it appears that other factors enter into the case, it is possible that other committees, including the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, may wish to consider some phases of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none; and without objection the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 131, a bill to safeguard the health, efficiency, and morale of the American people; to provide for improved nutrition through a more effective distribution of food supplies through a food-allotment program; to assist in maintaining fair prices and incomes to farmers by providing adequate outlets for agricultural products; to prevent burdening and obstructing channels of interstate commerce; to promote the full use of agricultural resources; and for other purposes, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

TREATY OF CONCILIATION BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND PHILIPPINES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Executive C, Eightieth Congress, First Session, a treaty of conciliation between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines signed at Manila on November 16, 1946. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the treaty of conciliation, and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The treaty of conciliation is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a Treaty of Conciliation Between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines signed at Manila on November 16, 1946. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, a report on the treaty made to me by the Secretary of State.

The treaty corresponds in its provisions, except as otherwise pointed out in the report by the Secretary of State, to the other bilateral conciliation treaties or conventions which are now in effect between the United States and other countries.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1947.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State. 2. Treaty of Conciliation With the Republic of the Philippines.]

JANUARY 29, 1947.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, for transmission to the Senate with a view to receiving the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of conciliation between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines signed at Manila on November 16, 1946.

The treaty provides for the establishment of a permanent International Commission of Conciliation to which the high contracting parties shall submit any dispute arising which may not be settled through the diplomatic channel and in case the high contracting parties do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal. In case no definite settlement shall have been reached through the submission of such dispute to the International Commission, the treaty provides that the dispute shall be submitted to the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice and that the high contracting parties shall be bound by the decision of the court.

The provision relating to the submission of disputes to the International Court of Justice has not appeared in earlier treaties of conciliation to which the United States is a party, the Conciliation Treaty With the Republic of the Philippines being the first treaty of its kind concluded since the inception of the court. With the exception of that provision, the provisions of the treaty are similar to those of the bilateral conciliation treaties or conventions between the United States and other countries to which the Senate has heretofore given advice and consent to ratification and which are now in effect.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE C. MARSHALL.

TREATY OF CONCILIATION

The United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have decided to conclude a treaty of conciliation and for that purpose have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: His Excellency Paul V. McNutt, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines; and

The President of the Republic of the Philippines: His Excellency Elpidio Quirino, Vice President and concurrently Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of the Philippines;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of the Philippines, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, be submitted for investigation and report to a permanent International Commission of Conciliation constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding article.

ARTICLE II

The International Commission shall be composed of five members to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportions.

The International Commission shall be constituted within six months after the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original agreement.

ARTICLE III

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, and they do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, spontaneously by unanimous agreement offer its services to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall limit or extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third shall be retained by the Commission for its files.

The International Commission shall, together with its report, submit its recommendations for the settlement of the matter in dispute.

Should no definite settlement be reached, notwithstanding the report and recommendations of the International Commission on the matter in dispute, the High Contracting Parties agree to submit the dispute to the jurisdicion of the International Court of Justice conformably with Article 36 of its Statute, and further agree to be bound without need of special agreement by the decision of the Court.

ARTICLE IV

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the Republic of the Philippines in accordance with its constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Manila as soon as possible, and the Treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at Manila this 16th day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and forty-six and of the Independence of the Philippines the first.

For the Government of the United States of America:

[SEAL] PAUL V. MCNUTT.

For the Government of the Republic of the Philippines:

[SEAL] ELPIDIO QUIRINO.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as we come before the Throne of Grace this day, we would not weary Thee with our constant begging. We would not be like petulant children, seeking diplomas without study, or wages without work. We thank Thee for lessons to learn and for work to do. May we apply ourselves to both. As Thy servants here sincerely seek to do right, make it plain to them. Knowing that criticism will come, help them to take from it what is helpful, and to forgive what is unjust and unkind. Amid all the pressures brought upon them, may they ever hear Thy still small voice, and follow Thy guidance for the good of all the people, that Thy will may be done in this Nation, through these Thy servants. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 31, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

AMNESTY FOR CERTAIN PRISONERS OF WAR—PETITION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present a petition signed by over 400 citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying amnesty for certain persons now serving in prison for violation of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940. I ask unanimous consent that the petition, without the signatures attached thereto, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Armed Services and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached, as follows:

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On March 6 you said, "Now that we have preserved our freedom of conscience and religion, let us make full use of that freedom."

Some 300 who for reasons of principle refused to comply with the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 or were court-martialed for not obeying military orders are still in prison. These include conscientious objectors, Jehovah's Witnesses, Puerto Rican nationalists, Negro objectors to racial segregation and discrimination in the armed forces, Hopi Indians, and other political prisoners.

Amnesties have been granted to political offenders in the past by eight Presidents of the United States. Many other countries have declared amnesties since the war.

A general amnesty for violators of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 and war objectors court-martialed by the armed forces is the only possible way to free the men for whom we are concerned and to restore full civil rights to them and to the thousands already released. Continued punishment of these men violates our tradition of freedom of conscience and endangers the civil liberties of all citizens.

We therefore petition you to grant such an amnesty.

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON POSTWAR ECONOMIC POLICY AND PLANNING (S. REPT. NO. 12)

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to file the final report of the Special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning, which was created under Senate Resolution 102 at the first session of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The report was prepared for filing January 15, 1946. It was withheld at that time, at the earnest insistence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], because he was at that time, as a member of a subcommittee, engaged in further study of the surplus property problem, with especial reference to Government-owned plants.

The report is the same as that which was prepared for filing in January 1946, and I now wish to file it.

I desire to make the further statement that, of the modest sum made available to this committee, there is an unexpended balance in the Treasury of about $4,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

PERSONS EMPLOYED BY COMMITTEES WHO ARE NOT FULL-TIME SENATE OR COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report for the month of January 1947, from the chairman of a certain committee, in response to Senate Resolution 319 (78th Cong.), relative to persons employed by committees who are not full-time employees of the Senate or any committee thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR CERTAIN PACIFIC ISLANDS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution providing for civil government for the civilian populations of our islands in the Pacific Ocean and transferring jurisdiction over those islands from the Navy Department to the Department of the Interior.

It may not be generally realized that our smaller island possessions in the Pacific, namely Guam and American Samoa, although they have been United States possessions for many years, are still under the absolute control of the Navy Department. The native populations of those islands have no civil or political rights. There are no independent courts. The naval governors are, in effect, executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the government, all rolled into one.

Guam has been under our control since 1898 when we took it from Spain. American Samoa has been an American possession since 1900 when the Samoan chieftains ceded their sovereignty to a representative of our Navy. For almost 50 years the natives of those possessions have therefore lived under the absolute rule of the Navy.

In the case of American Samoa, the only government is a code called the Regulations and Orders for the Government of American Samoa, promulgated by the Navy. It may not be generally realized that the Congress has never passed anything in the nature of an organic act, laying down the principles of government for these small islands. For almost 50 years, Congress has been content to let the Navy rule as it wished.

Mr. President, government of this type would be burdensome even if conducted by a civilian. Certainly it is doubly so when the rule is that of a man trained in military methods—with all that that implies. The Congress of the United States has the final responsibility for the welfare of these people. We cannot dodge that responsibility. We ought to give them a truly American form of government.

The joint resolution I am introducing today is not so ambitious as that. It merely proposes, as a starter, that the islands be transferred from the jurisdiction of the Navy to that of the Interior Department with a civilian governor instead of a naval one. Later on, I hope we may take the opportunity to consider granting the natives some measure of civil and political rights.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) providing for the establishment of a civilian administration under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior over the Caroline, Marshall, and Marianas Islands and Guam and American Samoa, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BUTLER, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SHORTAGE OF FERTILIZERS AND FERTILIZER INGREDIENTS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a resolution requesting that the Senate Agriculture Committee conduct an investigation of the shortage of fertilizer and recommend necessary measures to alleviate the shortage. I may say I have discussed this matter with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who is also interested in this problem and has made some investigation of it through the committee of which he is chairman. He is perfectly agreeable to my resolution.

Every day I receive letters from farmers and organizations of farmers in my State, pleading desperately for assistance in obtaining needed supplies of fertilizer. The farmers of the Middle West have learned from the experience of the last few years how extremely necessary fertilizer is in obtaining profitable yields. They face the prospect of being unable to obtain the nitrogen they need until sometime next year—too late to do them any good this year. This situation is made all the harder to bear by the knowledge that in my own State, as well as in other States, the Army is engaged in a tremendous program of fertilizer manufacture, but none of that nitrogen will be available to our own farmers. All the Army nitrogen is for shipment to occupied countries abroad.

In its study, I hope the committee will give careful consideration to some of the statements contained in a little 10-page mimeographed statement on the 1946–47 fertilizer program, dated January 1947 and prepared by the Production and Marketing Administration. I believe a careful study of the facts contained in this document must convince anyone that there need not have been a fertilizer shortage in this country. In this document the statement is made that the rated capacity of synthetic nitrogen plants in the United States is in excess of 1,100,000 tons, not including the Army plants, while elsewhere it is admitted that the production program for 1946–47 amounts to only 559,000 tons. The production program for 1946–47 is, in fact, less than production for 1945–46. I believe our farmers deserve an explanation why production should be actually declining at a time when production in every other line of manufacture is booming.

One further fact set forth in this document deserves attention. All production figures given exclude production in Army plants, just as if there were no Army program to manufacture nitrogen. Any figure on anticipated production in Army plants is carefully left out. Yet it is clear that the Army program is a vital part of the whole fertilizer picture.

This is particularly obvious when we realize that the Army borrowed 110,000 tons of fertilizer from the civilian supply last summer and fall. This tonnage to be repaid to civilian use during the coming spring when it will probably be too late to help our own farm economy. In the face of this fact, the PMA publication makes the extraordinary statement that "the Army nitrogen program will have no net effect upon the nitrogen available for domestic use."

It is my hope that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will find it possible to check into all these matters and be of assistance in assuring adequate supplies of fertilizer to our own agriculture.

The resolution (S. Res. 78), submitted by Mr. BUTLER, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas there exists in the United States a shortage in the supply of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients available for and essential to crop production; and

Whereas such shortage is causing economic distress to producers of crops and threatens the maintenance of high crop production in the United States; and

Whereas considerable confusion exists with respect to the causes of such shortage and the action which should be taken for the purpose of alleviating it: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation for the purpose of determining the causes of the existing shortage in the supply of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients available in the United States and the action which should be taken by the Congress or the executive branch of the Government for the purpose of alleviating such shortage and insuring the availability to the people of the United States of an adequate supply of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients at all times in the future. The committee or duly authorized subcommittee shall include within the scope of such study and investigation thorough consideration of (1) the relationship to such shortage of the Army program of production and exportation of fertilizers and fertilizer ingredients, (2) the relationship to such shortage of any international agreements or commitments with respect to allocation, importation, and exportation of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients, (3) the possibility and practicality of increasing the production and importation of supplies of nitrogen, phosphates, and potash, and (4) the extent, if any, to which faulty distribution of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients and lack of facilities for distribution has contributed to the shortage in certain areas.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

NATIONAL MEMORIAL TO CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to formulate plans for a national memorial for members of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and merchant marine who lost their lives at sea during World War II.

There is nothing more precious to us than the memory of the men and women of America who have given their lives in the cause of world freedom and peace.

It is considered fitting by many that a special memorial should be erected in America as a tribute to those who, in the cause of freedom and peace, gave their lives at sea and were lost or buried in the depths of the seas. In most instances, we are able to place markers at the graves of those who gave their lives on the fields of battle, but it is never possible to mark the hallowed places on the oceans of the world where American men and women made the supreme sacrifice for their country.

The joint resolution would authorize a tangible, lasting tribute to those who, in serving America during World War II on the high seas, gave their lives and now rest beneath waters which are once more free.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) to establish a commission to formulate plans for a national memorial to members of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and merchant marine who lost their lives at sea during World War II, introduced by Mr. BRIDGES, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE PERIODICAL PRESS GALLERY

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time. Once it is read, I should like to explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to reserve the right to object until I know what it is.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 79), as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the base rate of $3,860 per annum for the services of a superintendent of the Senate periodical press gallery.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, we now have a radio press gallery, a regular newspaper press gallery, and a periodical press gallery. But the latter has not had space until a room assignment was made recently by the Committee on Rules and Administration. That room assignment was necessary due to the increasing number of periodical correspondents and the crowded conditions in the Senate press gallery. The representatives of the various periodicals of the country will make their headquarters in the room set aside for that purpose, just as newspapermen use the regular press gallery, and the members of the radio press use the radio press room. An attendant is needed for the periodical press room. This resolution is a very simple proposal, that a superintendent for the room be authorized and paid from the contingent fund until the proper appropriation bill is before us. If there is any objection to it, of course, I wish to have it referred to a committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that as a matter of good legislative practice it ought to go to a committee. I have received one or two letters in the last few days in regard to this matter, and it strikes me that the resolution has merit. However, it would take but a day or two for a committee to consider it, and I presume there is no immediate rush. I suggest that the Senator let it go to the appropriate committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his request?

Mr. BRIDGES. If there is objection, I shall withdraw it, and ask for appropriate reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

ADMINISTRATION AND USE OF PUBLIC LANDS RELATING TO GRAZING SERVICE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the first resolution coming over from the previous day, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 76) submitted by Mr. BUTLER on January 31, 1947, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 241, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to May 24, 1940, and continued by subsequent resolutions, relating to an investigation of the administration and use of public lands, is hereby continued until February 15, 1947, inclusive, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to prepare and submit a final report to the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of this resolution whether it provides merely for the continuation of the authority of the committee in order that it may make its final report, or is it proposed that there be further investigation? My question is based upon my premise that all questions pertaining to the public lands now should be investigated by the Committee on Public Lands. I myself see no further need for the continuation of the authority of any special committee unless the committee needs time to make a final report.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the Senator referring to the resolution we tried to have acted upon last Friday?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is the same.

Mr. BUTLER. The only purpose in asking for the extension was that the then existing subcommittee might have opportunity to make a report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will that be its final report?

Mr. BUTLER. It will be its final report. In the case of the committee that was referred to by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], he asked that it be extended until February 15, and at the session last Friday he filed most of the report he will make, though he will have a few additions or changes to present between now and the 15th of February.

Mr. BARKLEY. One of the resolutions that comes over asks for an extension to the 15th of this month.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the other until the 31st of March.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. In the case of that report, I will say that the chairman of the subcommittee was the then Senator from Utah, Mr. Murdock. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] were members of the subcommittee. They held a hearing somewhere in the West, I believe it was San Francisco, and it was an important hearing. The stenographer who took the notes went from the hearing room, when the hearing was concluded, to the hospital, and is still in the hospital. It has been estimated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] that it might take until March 15 to get him out of the hospital and have him complete his transcript.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if this were a resolution providing for a further investigation of the public lands I should oppose it, and I should feel it my duty to move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but inasmuch as it is merely a resolution asking for extension of authority of a preexisting committee to make its final report, I shall not object.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the situation, and I should like to say, in that connection, that I had a long telegram this morning from the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] suggesting that the final report be not filed until his return, and we have agreed to that.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what the Senator from Nebraska has said about Resolution 76 may be said with equal truth wtih respect to Resolution 77, that it merely provides additional time in which a final report may be made. It is not contemplated that further studies or further investigation shall be made?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to Senate Resolution 76.

The resolution was agreed to.

STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS BY PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS COMMITTEE, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the second resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 77) submitted by Mr. BUTLER on January 31, 1947, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys under Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to July 30, 1946, relating to studies and investigations of matters referred to such committee, is hereby extended to March 31, 1947, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to make a report to the Congress.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRIDGES ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask that a statement which I issued on Friday of last week, which I had prepared for the press, be published in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRIDGES

I want to add my voice to the Nation-wide appreciation of the character and services of our former Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes, who has just retired. Rarely has approval of a statesman been so spontaneous or so unspoiled by partisan notes.

If there are still people abroad who hope to profit from political rivalries in our country, the unanimity of our farewell tribute to Mr. Byrnes—and of our welcome to General Marshall, his successor—should set them straight. They should realize that in the domain of foreign affairs they are dealing neither with Republicans nor with Democrats but with Americans.

Underlying the popular tribute to Mr. Byrnes, I feel sure, there is an awareness of the great handicaps under which he started his term as Secretary. Everyone knows that he inherited a sorry mess of appeasement and political muddling from the war years. Everyone knows, for example, that he had to operate within the onerous terms of what historians will probably call the great American surrender at Yalta.

The popular applause—let's be candid about it—is not for the Secretary who was obliged, in the first stage of his work, to make the best of shabby and shameful bargains at the expense of other peoples' freedom. It is, rather, for the Secretary, aided by the able counsel of our two colleagues, Senator VANDENBERG and Senator CONNALLY, who showed himself firm, persistent, and conscious of principle in the later stages of his work.

When Mr. Byrnes and his associates took over, they were handed a dossier of compromises of the principles embodied in the Atlantic Charter, the Four Freedoms, and other expressions of war-time idealism.

Their first job was to extricate themselves from the methods and habits of a long-sustained policy of appeasement. They learned once more, the hard way, that totalitarian states, whatever their color, can be bought but will not stay bought; that their appetites grow with gorging; that they construe every gesture of conciliation as a sign of weakness.

It seems to me fair and useful to recall that some of us on the floor of this Senate warned repeatedly against the illusions of appeasers. We insisted that America stand pat on elementary decencies—that America refuse to use small nations and helpless peoples as chips in the poker game of power politics.

I mention the matter in no I-told-you-so spirit but as a wholesome caution for the months and years ahead. Our country started with a huge reservoir of moral prestige among the peoples of this globe. We dissipated that invaluable reserve when we allowed Russia to grab the territories of its neighbors and impose its control on 100,000,000 people through the old familiar strong-arm methods of "quislingism," coercion of the electorate, and outright terrorism.

Fortunately, we still have a chance to restore confidence in American leadership. The job of this restoration has been well started by Mr. Byrnes. It can, and I trust will be, continued effectively by General Marshall.

Both these men, and the country at large, know by now that far from solving anything, each of our compromises on principle, each surrender of national interest, has merely created bigger problems and enlarged the areas of totalitarian infection. For our gifts of appeasement we have been paid off in contempt, broken pledges, calculated delay and confusion—all of this against a backdrop of world-wide anti-American propaganda.

Whatever accomplishments we can claim in recent months, came after we stiffened our policy with an injection of the iron of self-respect.

Let's not forget that our representatives traveled a hard road, a humiliating road, before they reached, at long last, a policy of so-called patience and firmness. There is still a lot more patience than firmness in the amalgam. It was a road marked by disasters for heroic peoples like the Poles and the Chinese, as well as for liberated peoples who in their sufferings had dreamed of a new democratic start.

We have little enough cause for pride in that Via Dolorosa of our diplomacy. Few Americans can look back at its milestones without a sense of futility and a bad conscience. A mangled and enslaved Poland, a cruelly looted and prostrate Manchuria—these are the sad symbols of the "peace" imposed on both sides of the globe.

It will not do to put all the blame on Russia. We can hardly shrug off our share of responsibility.

The least we can do, therefore, is to resolve openly and resolutely that we shall not again compound evil in the name of compromise. We must make it clear to ourselves and the world that we do not propose to retrace our steps on that futile and tragic road of appeasement.

Implicit in the acclaim of Mr. Byrnes is the new American determination to go forward from where he stopped—not backward to where he started.

We have every reason to expect that General Marshall understands this. We sincerely believe he will not shrink from exercising those soldierly qualities that are natural to his character. Frankly, we have had too much of the kind of compromise which, when faced with a proposal for some monstrous crime, settles for half a crime.

We count on Secretary Marshall to resist the efforts of a noisy minority, typified by Henry Wallace and his fellow-traveling entourage, to steer American foreign policy back into the blind alley from which it has only recently emerged. In that resistance, he may be sure, he will have the support of most Americans.

We seek nothing for ourselves—except a climate of freedom and justice in world affairs. We can therefore afford to stand firm; to demand that other nations live up to their commitments; and to retrieve lost ground in the area of principle.

Recently we have been engulfed by great waves of gratitude because Messrs. Stalin, Molotov, and Vishinsky have finally deigned to smile on us; because, after gumming up the peace for a year and a half, after looting many areas of friend and foe alike, the Kremlin has generously consented to negotiate treaties.

I, for one, fail to understand the strange and illogical joy over this fact. Are we so lacking in self-confidence, so incapable of taking diplomatic initiative, that our moods depend on the shifting tactics of Soviet ambition? The American people as a whole fail to understand why we should be so grateful for every sign of Soviet cooperation. It is behavior unworthy of a fourth-rate nation under the shadow of Soviet aggression, let alone the world's greatest representative government.

The plain truth is that for all their supposed softening of attitude, the Russian rulers have given up nothing essential. They hold what they've grabbed and are proceeding at double speed to consolidate the empire they've carved for themselves. Democratic leaders in Hungary, representing the vast majority of the people, are being purged in the familiar Soviet style. Opponents of the quisling regimes in Poland, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Rumania, are being terrorized and liquidated.

Our job over the Kremlin's so-called concessions must seem fantastic to the people of Poland, where the comedy of rigged elections has reached its tragic finish. Those free and unfettered elections in east Europe and Balkan countries, morally guaranteed by the United States, have become a laughing-stock throughout the world.

The five peripheral treaties have changed nothing. On the whole, indeed, they have simply confirmed Russia in its dominion over nearly half of Europe. As far as Italy is concerned, the staggering reparations exacted by Moscow reduce the chances of keeping that country on the democratic side of the iron curtain.

Lest we succumb to a false optimism, let's get the picture back into focus. Half of Europe is still cut off from the life of the continent by a picket fence of Soviet bayonets. Three independent republics whose sovereignty is still recognized in Washington—Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia—have been swallowed whole by the Russian bear. Friendship for America and advocacy of American ideals are still punished as a high crime in countries which we helped to liberate from Hitlerism. Germany, whose economic unity was pledged at Potsdam, has been reduced to a prestering sink of poverty that menaces the health of all Europe largely because of Moscow's deliberate strategy of non-cooperation.

On the other side of the earth the spectacle is no more edifying. Manchuria, the industrial heart of China, has been looted and maimed in a way that will retard the development of China for generations. The great power which stood aside from China's struggle for survival until the very week of Japan's defeat now controls Chinese ports, railroads, and cities.

It was under American pressure that China gave up huge chunks of its soil and its sovereignty. In return Moscow explicitly promised "aid and assistance to the Chinese National Government and its armies" in establishing their control over Manchuria and the rest of the country. America therefore can hardly be indifferent to the fact that Russia has broken its promises and has treated China like a conquered rather than an Allied nation.

We have an opportunity in China that is also a duty. We must pledge our support to the nation which has just adopted a democratic constitution and is making heroic efforts to find the highroad to popular government. Let's not beat around the bush in the matter: We cannot afford to push China into the Soviet orbit. A free, sovereign, independent China is vitally important to the future of freedom in any part of the world.

The Communist fifth column in China did its best to prevent the adoption of the democratic constitution and will now exert itself to prevent its application. Meanwhile, it is engaged in a vicious campaign of insults against the United States.

That campaign, be it noted, is part and parcel of a world-wide anti-American drive sparked by Moscow. Whether in Latin America or in Asia, in north Africa or in our own country, the propaganda offensive against the United States derives from a single and centralized source.

That is not a pleasant truth. It cuts through too many lazy illusions. But it is truth we cannot ignore or evade. Our foreign policy will make no sense unless it is conceived and unfolded in full awareness of the whole world picture.

There is no peace-loving nation, large or small, which feels any less secure because our country is strong. On the contrary, whenever America seems minded to fritter away its military might, small nations become alarmed for their own safety and peoples in bondage lose their last hope of ultimate deliverance.

The common people of the whole world thank the general providence that placed the atom bomb in American hands for safekeeping. We shall serve them—and ourselves—badly if we become slipshod or overly trusting in that providential trust. What would happen if the mighty atomic weapon were exclusively in the hands of certain other people? The very thought sends a chill down humanity's spine.

We have shown our willingness to share the atomic secret with the whole world. But why the hysterical eagerness to give it away? Should any nation choose foolishly to provoke an atomic race, it will make the greatest mistake in its history. We have a head start. We can keep the lead under any circumstances.

No one in his senses wants such a race. We have not only invited but pleaded with all other nations to help themselves to our atomic secrets. What greater proof of American good will and pacific intentions?

But we do not propose to carry good will to the extreme of suicidal stupidity. The American people will accept nothing less than an airtight system of inspection and control; nothing less than a system of quick and effective punishment of violators without any veto nonsense. If we who possess the bomb are willing to accept the extreme in safeguards, the reluctance of others to do so is both strange and disquieting.

It seems to me important to underline for American public opinion the special problems presented by inspection in a police state like Russia. No one is naive enough to believe that formal investigation will be enough. Every technique of international intelligence will have to be applied. The stakes are too high for half measures.

Those techniques will guarantee enforcement of the rules in democratic countries. But how can they be applied in a straitjacketed, totalitarian country where no one dares to speak, where every inch of human existence is ruthlessly policed? After all, the keeping of secrets—from their own people and from the rest of the world—has been developed in Russia to the highest degree known in history. Aspects of Soviet life involving millions of victims—like the man-made famine of 1932 or the magnitude of slave labor—are still matters of doubt and dispute.

In the light of these realities we have no alternative but to move slowly and cautiously in the matter of internationalizing atomic knowledge. We must give civilization the benefit of the doubt.

And while on the subject of inspection, how about a little of it to reveal the facts about the millions of German war prisoners in the Soviet Union? Reports have been seeping through that a skeleton German Army is in the making on Russian soil. The free Germany committee set up by the Kremlin is no more—but other such groups under new names are said to be getting intensive military and ideological training.

No one who has followed the course of Soviet policy on Germany can help but think that it aims to turn that country ultimately into a satellite and ally of Russia. There is a telltale continuity about that policy. It was also in Soviet Russia that Germany after the First World War secretly built and trained the core of its new army in defiance of the peace terms.

The Soviet leaders, unlike our own, never succumbed to the self-defeating counsels of vengeance which would turn Germany into an economic, political, and cultural plague spot. From the outset, and repeatedly, Stalin and his spokesmen have not concealed their hopes of restoring Germany and cementing it into the Soviet sphere. Inside that country they have used all the weapons of terror to build up a totalitarian Communist-controlled party and to liquidate democratic-minded opponents of their scheme.

If Moscow succeeds in the great design of merging Russian manpower and German technical discipline, the last chance of saving liberal democratic civilization will be lost. That is why the scheduled Big Power Conference in Moscow is so terribly important. It is there that our new Secretary of State will have his first and most decisive test.

We dare not evade the challenging truth that the dream of one world has resolved into a nightmare of two worlds engaged in a duel of dominance. We cannot afford to lose; even the Russian people—the people, not their masters—will never forgive us if we do. The ideals and the practical purposes for which we risked our best sons in two world wars will be wiped out beyond retrieving if we suffer a loss of nerve at this critical hour.

Does Russia ever hesitate to throw its full moral, political and economic weight into the scales on the side of dictatorship, in support of its satellite governments and fifth columns everywhere? Does it have any scruples about pressing every marginal advantage, whether real or imagined, to expand the frontiers of Communist dominion?

I submit that we should have no more squeamishness about throwing our full weight at all times and everywhere on the side of freedom, democratic aspirations, liberal world trade, and above all, human rights. When we do this—when we put the whole leverage of our prestige, our economic might, our technological strength behind our diplomacy—there can be no doubt as to the outcome.

All the advantages are on our side. All the hopes and prayers of humankind are on our side.

Our duty is clear. Let's have the courage to do it.

REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING OF KANSAS STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received from Jake Mohler, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, a very interesting report of the Seventy-sixth annual meeting of that organization, held recently in Topeka, Kans. I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT THE SEVENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE KANSAS STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE, JANUARY 8–10, 1947

As the accredited representatives of more than 100,000 Kansas farmers and stockmen, we express our beliefs and recommendations as follows:

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

We pledge full support to the United Nations and reiterate our desire that this Nation exert every possible effort and influence to help establish genuine agreement, understanding and confidence among the nations of the world.

NATIONAL UNITY

For a strong America, commensurate with the talents and ideals of her citizenry, we feel it is imperative that all people work together for the common good. We commend organizations to promote the welfare of various groups, so long as they do not seek self-betterment at the expense of others. To avoid this, and to help guide the efforts of all toward general betterment of the entire Nation, we believe a national policy along these lines should be formulated by Congress, to embrace all groups, including industry, labor, and agriculture. We strongly urge such action and pledge our wholehearted cooperation in it.

ARBITRATION

We agree with the proposal for some form of arbitration of industrial disputes that will prevent work stoppages which jeopardize the national economy and safety. We favor early legislation to that end.

FARM PRICE POLICY

For the good of all people, including those in agriculture, we favor farm prices in line with, but neither higher nor lower according than, prices of other commodities and services. Our idea of fair prices would provide farm incomes adequate for a good standard of living on farms and at the same time allow for some expenditure of effort and income on the fundamental task of conserving soils, which serve as the very lifeblood of our civilization. We believe it should be the aim that farm incomes be maintained through fair farm prices, rather than by any combination of prices and subsidies. We believe, likewise, that security for farm people can best be provided by fair prices, rather than by extension of the Federal social-security law to include farmers.

RIVER BASIN DEVELOPMENT

We reaffirm our approval of the proposed development of water resources in the Missouri and Arkansas River basins through existing Federal and State agencies now cooperating in current water and reclamation activities.

WEEDS

We again urge that the United States Department of Agriculture set up a weed office for conducting research and education on weed control in cooperation with the various States. We urge, also, that Congress enact suitable legislation to regulate the interstate transportation and sale of weed-infested material, and to prohibit the importation of weed-infested materials from foreign countries.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

We reaffirm our endorsement of rural electrification as a godsend to farm living and to the business of farming. We urge, therefore, that the program of rural electrification be given every possible opportunity for continued expansion.

SOIL CONSERVATION

We commend the work being done under the organized system of soil conservation. We pledge our wholehearted cooperation to this work, which is fundamental not only to agriculture, but to the very existence of mankind.

HOPE-FLANNAGAN ACT

We commend Congressman CLIFFORD HOPE, coauthor of the Hope-Flannagan bill on agricultural research and marketing, for sponsoring this important measure and securing its enactment at the last session of Congress. The new law offers tremendous possibilities of sound, practical service to the people of Kansas.

TEACHER SALARIES

We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of school teachers in their influence upon our children during their most impressionable years. We favor, therefore, a general increase in the salaries of Kansas school teachers, and such other measures as may be necessary to attract capable instructors and maintain the dignity of the profession at high levels.

GASOLINE TAX

We adhere to the principle that roads should be paid for by those who use them, and we believe the 1-cent tax on nonhighway gasoline is discriminatory and unfair. We urge, therefore, that the legislature amend the 1-cent provision of this law to increase the tax on highway gasoline and provide exemption for nonhighway gasoline.

STATE LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

1. Marketing: Greater attention to the marketing of agricultural products has become a national movement, culminating in the recently enacted Hope-Flannagan law, classed by many as the most significant Federal legislation on agriculture, of this decade. As a service to both producers and consumers, we reiterate our recommendation of past years that the Kansas Legislature establish a State marketing agency. We suggest that this agency be empowered to promote the State's agricultural products, facilitate the marketing of such products by means of a market information service, establish grades and standards, provide inspection and grading services, and cooperate with the United States Department of Agriculture under provisions of the Hope-Flannagan law, and in beneficial agreements with its Bureau of Markets.

2. Weights and measures, coyote control, and agricultural chemicals: We again invite attention to the need of State legislation to provide: a weights-and-measures law adapted to current times and needs; additional means of controlling coyotes and other predatory animals; and a law to protect the users of agricultural chemicals, such as DDT, 2, 4–D, and others.

3. Temple of agriculture: With Kansas embarking on a State office building program, we urge that all State offices pertaining to agriculture be housed together in a temple of agriculture, and that this building also include space for agricultural and livestock conventions, as well as quarters for permanent exhibits illustrating the Kansas agricultural industry.

4. State educational institutions: Recognizing the increased demands upon our State educational institutions, we petition the legislature to give full consideration to their problems, which are of grave concern to the State and its future.

5. Kansas State College: Because of its far-flung service to agriculture and its betterment, we place particular emphasis upon the needs of Kansas State College, where record enrollments are severely overtaxing classroom, teaching, and housing facilities. We especially request increased funds for faculty salaries as the college is suffering serious loss of personnel to higher paying positions elsewhere, and respectfully urge the legislature to provide the college with adequate appropriations to fulfill its obligation to the State of Kansas and its predominant industry, agriculture.

6. Board of agriculture: We respectfully urge that the Kansas Legislature make adequate provisions for the State board of agriculture to carry cut its responsibilities to the people of Kansas as set forth by State laws, and especially to meet the increased demands of the board's work with weeds, dairy, water resources, and statistics.

7. Artificial insemination: Kansas is one of the leading dairy States, yet production per cow is relatively low. The average farmer feels he cannot afford to own a good bull for only a few cows. It is highly desirable that economical means of improvement be provided for the small herds. We urge, therefore, that the legislature provide funds to Kansas State College for the establishment of an artificial insemination service, this being an effective method of improving dairy production in Kansas.

8. Severance tax: In view of the fact that farmers pay not only property, personal, and income taxes, but also taxes on grain and livestock they produce, we feel that other products of the earth should pay their just share. We urge, therefore, that a severance tax be levied on oil, gas, and other minerals, to help meet requirements of the State government for additional revenue. Kansas is one of the few important mineral-producing States not having such a tax.

9. State 4–H camp: Because 4–H Club work is a publicly supported enterprise, receiving Federal, State, and local funds for operation, we feel it is in harmony with established policy that the legislature provide funds requested for basic construction work at the State 4–H Club camp.

CROP IMPROVEMENT

We commend the good work of the Kansas Crop Improvement Association and suggest that even more strict inspections be made to insure high-quality, weed-free, certified seed.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

We urge that the stockmen of Kansas be fully alert to the ever-present threat of foot-and-mouth disease. We advocate wholehearted cooperation with the Kansas livestock sanitary officials in any preventive program or recommendations that may be developed.

COUNTY FARM BUREAUS

Since the work of the Farm Bureau Extension Service is often hampered by inadequate county appropriations, we recommend that the levy be considered outside of the lawful county aggregate tax.

FARM COOPERATIVES

We believe in the principles of farm cooperatives. We, therefore, go on record in support of the present law providing for the creation and protection of cooperatives, and will vigorously oppose any legislation designed to destroy them.

SCHOOL REORGANIZATION

Whereas the present school reorganization law has been used in some instances in this State for the indiscriminate and wholesale elimination of rural elementary schools; and

Whereas the preservation of as many good and substantial rural schools as possible is essential to the continuance of our present rural life and the future prosperity of this great agricultural State: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That–

1. We believe that minimum pupil requirements for rural schools should be retained. If a school district meets the minimum student requirements, it should not be consolidated by compulsory order.

2. In those cases where a rural school district fails to meet minimum student requirements, then it should be disorganized by compulsory order, but the consolidation of such disorganized district should be in accordance with the vote of the legal electors of such district.

3. We oppose the consolidation of rural schools with city schools, where such rural schools have a sufficient student body to justify continuance of school and the majority of legal electors residing within the rural school district wish to retain their school.

4. The five-man reorganization committee should be eliminated and the power of consolidation vested in the County Superintendent of each county, who shall be bound to act by the rules above stated and in accordance with the vote of the people in the school districts affected.

5. Be it further resolved, Those who were forced into consolidation without a vote, and, if not satisfied, should have a right to a rehearing.

CAPPER-HOPE

We feel deep pride in the fact that Senator ARTHUR CAPPER is chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Congressman CLIFFORD HOPE is chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture for this forthcoming session of the United States Congress. These honors are not only fitting tributes to two great Kansas statesmen for their unfailing service to American agriculture but serve also to distinguish the entire State of Kansas, and especially its agriculture.

TRIBUTE

We again pay tribute to Kansas State College, to the farm organizations of Kansas, to vocational agriculture, to the 4–H Clubs, and other youth activities—all of which are rendering valuable service to this State. In commending these groups we extend our wholehearted cooperation.

APPRECIATION

An expression of gratitude is extended to those who have contributed to the success of this meeting. We thank the press and radio for their careful coverage, the city and State officials for their courtesies, the speakers for their excellent contributions, and Secretary Mohler and his staff for efficient planning and management of details.

PROTESTS AGAINST IMPOSITIONS UPON TEXAS CITIZENS

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, the Texas Legislature is now in session, and we are beginning to see evidence of protests by many members of that body against some of the skulduggery of the New Deal administration, the bureaucrats in Washington, and the labor leader racketeers. Many members of the legislature resent the impositions upon Texas citizens and the regimentation to which they have been subjected.

As an illustration I should like to read a letter I have received from Marshall O. Bell, a member of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas. He says:

STATE OF TEXAS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Austin, January 29, 1947.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing a portion of House Journal of January 16 in which we introduced House Simple Resolution No. 19 denouncing Daniel J. Tobin for his advocating a boycott on cotton and cotton products in order to defeat Members of Congress of the Southern States.

I believe this matter will be of particular interest to you, and if possible, I would like for it to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I am also enclosing two copies of the right-to-work bill which I am today introducing in the house of representatives.

With best wishes, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

MARSHALL O. BELL.

Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the RECORD a copy of House Simple Resolution No. 19, together with Representative Bell's statement concerning the resolution, and also a copy of his bill which would give to the citizens of Texas their freedom to work and his statement with reference to that bill. I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed, as follows:

DENOUNCING CERTAIN PROPOSAL IN REGARD TO THE BOYCOTT OF COTTON

Mr. Bell, of Bexar, offered the following resolution:

"House resolution denouncing certain proposal in regard to the boycott of cotton

"Whereas in the International Teamster, the official magazine of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, in the June 1946 issue the following editorial appeared:

" 'HOW TO CRACK THE COTTON BLOC

" 'The cotton bloc in Congress is responsible for most of our domestic troubles. It is composed of the reactionary southern Democrats who team up with the equally reactionary northern Republicans to destroy the living standards of the American people.

" 'Naturally the Republicans must bear the bulk of the blame because they are more numerous. But without the cotton Senators and Congressmen, they would be only a noisy, dangerous minority.

" 'The cotton bloc supplies the votes the Republicans need to kill legislation promoting full employment, higher wages, social security, and public health.

" 'It also supplies the votes the Republicans need to pass legislation restricting labor, removing price control, and reducing taxes for large corporations. Such legislation reduces living standards by reducing the purchasing power of the workers' wages.

" 'The cotton bloc is interested chiefly in higher prices for cotton, even though that means higher prices for shirts, dresses, underwear, socks, and other articles of wearing apparel.

" 'When Economic Stabilizer Chester Bowles restricted speculation in cotton, the southern Congressmen attacked him and the whole price-control program in retaliation. They are demanding inflation in cotton, even if it means inflation in everything.

" 'The public can go naked while warehouses bulge with cotton being hoarded for higher prices, for all the cotton bloc cares.

" 'The southerners in Congress, interested primarily in perpetuating the plantation-slave economy of the South, think that the public is helpless.

" 'But it is not. It can strike back with devastating force. How? By simply boycotting cotton goods.

" 'You can buy rayon underwear, rayon, nylon, silk or wool socks, and shirts. You can reject articles made of cotton, even insisting on automobile tires made with rayon instead of cotton thread. Such tires wear longer and are safer.

" 'If the public becomes cotton conscious and refuses to buy anything made of cotton, the price of cotton will tumble and the power of the cotton bloc in Congress will be broken. Many of them may be defeated for reelection because of the penalty their arrogance brought upon the South.

" 'Labor can do this job by mobilizing its economic strength and diverting its buying power to cotton substitutes with which the market will soon be loaded.

" ' "Patronize your friends," is the key to the success of the union label. And there is no union label on the cotton Congressmen. They are apostles of the open shop.

" 'You can beat them if you make the simple resolution and tell it to your friends:

" 'Don't buy cotton'; and

"Whereas Daniel J. Tobin is both president of the International Teamsters Union and editor in chief of the official magazine; and

"Whereas such editorial has called upon a Nation-wide boycott of cotton and all cotton products so that the price of cotton will tumble and the power of the Representatives of the Southern States in Congress will be broken; and

"Whereas the sole purpose of such a boycott is to starve America's cotton States into economic despair so that many of our Representatives may be defeated for reelection; and

"Whereas such program is calculated to bring distress and starvation to innocent women and children and will cause untold suffering to millions of people who are dependent upon cotton for their livelihood: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Texas:

"1. We denounce such a boycott as contemptible and unjust since it will bring starvation and distress to innocent women and children and to millions of other persons who are dependent upon cotton and cotton products for their livelihood.

"2. We urge the decent and responsible members of organized labor to disregard such an evil and un-American program and to denounce any false god of labor who advocates such a vicious and wicked program.

"3. We believe that this program is outside the legitimate activities of a labor union and it is suggested by a group utterly disregardful of the public welfare and who are fatally bent upon mischief.

"4. This proposal is an insult to the integrity of the people of Texas and regardless of the results we shall not surrender our vote and heritage to those who would destroy our State and our rights and liberties as freemen."

The resolution was read a second time and was unanimously adopted.

REMARKS OF HON. MARSHALL BELL

On motion of Mr. Bell of DeWitt the following remarks of Mr. Bell of Bexar, addressing the house on House Simple Resolution No. 19, were ordered printed in the Journal:

"Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the house, the resolution which has just been read is important to the Legislature of Texas. You will note in the resolution the suggestion of the International Teamsters Union that a boycott be established against cotton and all cotton products. This proposal is shocking to me and is a reflection upon the integrity and dignity of the people of Texas as well as the members of this legislature.

"From this story you can readily see that this defiant and arrogant overlord of labor has announced a definite program under which he is committed to a plan to starve, if necessary, the innocent women and children of the South in order to attain political and economic power over a prostrate people. Such a ruthless plan is hard to realize but from the past conduct of this particular organization it appears that they are willing to go to any limit in order to achieve their greedy and selfish goals.

"The sole purpose of such a boycott according to the self-appointed tyrant of the Teamsters is to starve America's cotton States into such economic despair that many of our chosen representatives in the legislative branch of our Government may be defeated for reelection because they will not bow their heads nor surrender their vote to those who would destroy our land from within.

"What is particularly significant to every citizen of Texas is the fact that our Nation's pampering and appeasement of professional false gods of labor has reached the point where Tobin has the impertinence to proclaim that we no longer shall be permitted to elect legislative representatives of our own choosing. With haughty contempt he threatens to wreck the economy of 18 cotton-growing States and to boycott into oblivion the Nation's largest single segment of workers (its 9,000,000 cotton farmers) if they insist upon electing members to legislative positions who are faithful to the public welfare rather than subservient to his orders.

"King Cotton is of great importance to the people of Texas. For many generations our State has led all other States in cotton production with an average yearly crop in excess of 4,000,000 bales. It is the crop which has afforded 70 percent of the ready cash for the small farmer and on cotton are dependent thousands of tenant farmers and laborers who Mr. Tobin is ready and willing to sacrifice on his altar of vengeance and greed.

"There is not a person in this legislative hall today who will not be personally affected directly or indirectly by this announced program of Mr. Tobin. Many of us know what it is to grow cotton and all of us realize how dependent we are upon agriculture for our economic success throughout the South. This vicious statement clearly indicates the contempt in which Mr. Tobin and his fellow labor racketeers really hold the people of the South. Yes, the great South which for generations has been the backbone for our great Democratic Party both while it was in office as well as when it was out.

"This International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers have now shown their true color and certainly a new name they have placed upon themselves. It should now be termed the 'International Union of Racketeers and Teamsters' for this announced program can only be classified as a racket of the first order.

"In the 1945 International Teamsters' publication the Honorable Daniel J. Tobin was perfectly willing to let our returning soldiers sell apples and pencils again rather than to give them an even break. This is what he has to say personally:

" 'As to new men who were never members of our union, who are in the service, we do not really know how we can place them, even with payment of an initiation fee, because there will not be work enough to go around for the returning members of our organization now in the service of our country.

" 'We hope and trust there will be, but we are not living in dreams, nor are we going to be deluded by political promises made during campaigns.

" 'We went through the stagnation of business after the last war and we know what happened, and we expect much worse conditions of unemployment to prevail at the ending of this war, at any rate until reorganization of industry has taken place.'

"This is the same union which for years forced the farmers of Maryland and Virginia to pay tribute for each truckload of foodstuff taken into the New York food markets. This practice became so vicious that, at the last session of Congress, President Truman recommended the passage of the Hobbs antiracketeering bill which Congress quickly passed. This bill now outlaws highway robbery and extortion in interstate commerce. Is it little wonder that such an organization with this background now seeks to extend its activities Nation-wide in order to bring the South to political and economic chaos?

"After that unfortunate struggle within our country which we call the Civil War, there descended upon the South a group of human termites and drones who sought to plunder and destroy our fair Southland and to make slaves of a proud and defeated people. Their conduct was so abusive and so unjust that finally Texans and the people of the South rose up and drove these unscrupulous and ruthless carpetbaggers back to the North and East from whence they came. It now appears, my friends, that we have a new variety of these cheap and ruthless carpetbaggers who have been living off the land long enough. I personally do not believe that such labor racketeers should be allowed to hold a State or community for political or economic ransom and that legislation apparently is necessary to protect our State from arrogant union officials who seek to destroy our Government, our liberties, and our heritage. Each member of this legislative body no doubt will be given an opportunity to express himself relative to the matters which I have discussed today.

"When the time comes in our great State that we are forced to surrender our political ideals and our economic independence to a group of ruthless labor racketeers, then death itself becomes more desirable to a liberty-loving people."

STATEMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE MARSHALL O. BELL

More than 170 years ago the founders of this Republic, in our Declaration of Independence, declared that all men are entitled to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. For generations Americans lived by and prospered under these fundamental principles of government. However, in the past 15 years new and strange theories of government have been tried on a long-suffering and patient people.

It is evident to most Americans that we, in fact, have been political guinea pigs on whom the long-haired men and short-haired women might try out their planned economy and cradle-to-grave philosophies in order to regiment a free and liberty-loving people.

During this unfortunate period many unwise and unscrupulous labor leaders have risen to power and under the protection of unjust Federal laws have tried to gain control over the economic and political welfare of those who are privileged to labor. Those same labor leaders have demanded power and recognition, but have been unwilling to assume the duties and obligations that accompany leadership. During our war years we experienced over 13,000 strikes and work stoppages involving more than 5,000,000 laborers. In 1946 we observed over 5,000 strikes, all of which have impaired our reconversion program and tended to bring about an economic crisis.

No American should be forced or required to be a member of any organization or group in order to do an honest day's work for the support of his family. Recent polls in our State and Nation clearly indicate that the vast majority of our citizens are opposed to the unreasonable and arbitrary demands of labor unions and favor an open-shop system under which Americans and Texans can work. We Texans believe in the dignity of each person who works and that each individual should be allowed to determine his own destiny and the terms and conditions under which he will labor. To accomplish this purpose I am, therefore, introducing this right-to-work bill, to relieve Texans of the obligation of paying tribute to the Petrillos, the Lewises, the Tobins, and to other well-known characters.

MARSHALL O. BELL.

An act providing that the inherent right of a person to work and bargain freely with his employer, individually or collectively, for terms and conditions of his employment shall not be denied or infringed by law or by any organization of whatever nature; that no person shall be denied employment because of membership or nonmembership in a labor union; providing that certain types of contracts shall be void and that this act shall not apply to existing contracts; definitions of words; containing a saving clause with respect to constitutional invalidity; and declaring an emergency

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas:

SECTION I. The inherent right of a person to work and bargain freely with his employer, individually or collectively, for terms and conditions of his employment shall not be denied or infringed by law, or by any organization of whatever nature.

SEC. II. No person shall be denied employment on account of membership or nonmembership in a labor union.

SEC. III. Any contract which requires or prescribes that employees or applicants for employment in order to work for an employer shall or shall not be or remain members of a labor union, shall be null and void and against public policy. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any contract or contracts heretofore executed but shall apply to any renewal or extension of any existing contract and to any new agreement or contract executed after the effective date of this act.

SEC. IV. Definitions: By the term "labor union" as used in this act shall mean every association, group, union, lodge, local, branch or subordinate organization of any union of workingmen, incorporated or unincorporated, organized and existing for the purpose of protecting themselves and improving their working conditions, wages, or employment relationships in any manner, but shall not include associations or organizations not commonly regarded as labor unions.

SEC. V. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall for any reason be adjudged to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act and the application thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the portion of the act directly involved in the controversy in which judgment shall have been rendered and to the person or circumstances involved.

SEC. VI. Due to the fact that there have been widespread labor difficulties resulting from the unreasonable demands of labor unions, all of which has delayed the reconversion plan, and there being an urgent need for constructive legislation to protect the public welfare, which need is so found, there exists an emergency and an imperative public necessity that the constitutional rule requiring bills to be read on three several days in each House shall be suspended and the same here now is suspended, and this act shall become effective from and after its passage, and it is so enacted.

PURCHASE BY VETERANS OF SURPLUS GOODS

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have a copy of a letter from another member of the Texas Legislature, Hon. Allan Shivers, the lieutenant governor, who presides over the senate at Austin. Gov. Allan Shivers gave up his work to volunteer his services to his country. He served his country with distinction during the war. When he came back from the war he was, in the recent election, elected lieutenant governor by a large majority.

Governor Shivers is protesting against the lack of consideration, or downright disrespect, shown to the veterans by the War Assets Administration, with reference to purchasing goods that are supposed to be offered as surplus property to the veterans. I ask unanimous consent that Lt. Gov. Allan Shivers' letter be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

JANUARY 24, 1947.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Houston, Tex.

GENTLEMEN: I have your memorandum of December 30 with reference to the above subject matter advising me that you were placing same in the inactive file. I certainly have no objection to this procedure.

For your information and for the record, I want to recite the history of this application with the hope that other veterans have not received similar treatment and consideration.

On May 7, 1946, I wrote you that I had seen an ad in the Houston Post which stated that you had some several thousand gallons of OD paint for sale to veterans with the requirement that the veteran must purchase a minimum of 500 gallons. In this letter I requested that blanks be immediately forwarded to me so that I might purchase this paint, and also stated in the letter that if the red tape could not be completed within the 15 days, which the ad stated the paint would be held for veterans, to please set the minimum amount aside for purchase. I also stated that I wanted this paint for use in repainting agricultural buildings on an East Texas farm. Of course, I did not need that quantity of paint, but at the price of 30 cents per gallon, at which it was offered, I would purchase the minimum quantity which you required a veteran to purchase.

Some time after the expiration of the 15-day limit I received my first communication from you stating that, if I would furnish certain information, my application would be filed and a search made for the items requested. I call your attention to the fact that this statement was made by your office in spite of the fact that you had paid for an ad in the Houston Post offering the very products which I requested for sale. I completed the various forms and supplied you the information requested immediately.

After a lapse of several weeks I received another communication from your office stating that the items that I had requested were not available, but that my application was being placed in your files for future reference.

Periodically I have received additional communications stating that you were still searching for the items which I requested.

Shortly after the expiration of the 15-day limit placed in your paid ad in the Houston Post I was offered these items for sale, and upon investigation found that the paint could be obtained by me, and I suppose most anyone else who desired same, from several industries and dealers, the prices ranging from 75 cents to $1.25 per gallon.

If this is a typical manner in which the applications of veterans to purchase surplus commodities have been handled, I am not surprised at the amount of criticism which the War Assets Administration has received nor am I surprised at the usual disgust that the average veteran has for the Administration.

Yours very truly,

ALLAN SHIVERS.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF SECOND WAR POWERS ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying appendix, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 750.)

DESTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT FILES

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish very briefly to invite the attention of the Senate, and especially the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the eminent chairman of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, to the matter to which I am about to refer.

I hold in my hand a press clipping dated January 31, from the Chicago Tribune. It is an Associated Press dispatch. The article refers to the action of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program in a hearing on Friday of Gen. Maurice Hirsch, who told the committee something about the renegotiation of contracts and something about profits on contracts.

I have no objection whatever to the action of the committee in holding the hearing on Friday in order to hear General Hirsch. Although the minority members of that committee had not at that time been appointed by the Senate, General Hirsch was desirous of leaving the city and was about to leave, and the majority of the committee acted properly in calling him before it and getting some information from him.

What I wish to call attention to, however, was the last paragraph of this article:

BREWSTER told a reporter he has a tip that "one Government department has been destroying papers and files that are of definite interest" to the committee. He declined to identify the agency, but said he has taken the matter up with President Truman.

What I desire to observe—and I am making this as a public statement to the distinguished chairman of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, because of the fact that this newspaper article has been carried as a public release—is that we are to have an organization meeting of the committee this afternoon, when, no doubt, we will have an opportunity to discuss the future policies and actions of the committee.

Obviously the effect of such an article, stimulating and encouraging belief in the minds of the readers that some department in Washington has a sinister purpose in concealing the truth and in going so far as to destroy Government records and files in a furtive attempt to deny the committee an opportunity to ascertain the truth, is contrary to the public interest and contrary to the wishes of the committee and of the Congress, who do not wish to establish unjustified distrust in the Government of the United States.

I simply wish to observe, Mr. President, that since this matter has been made public, if there is any department or agency of the Government which is attempting to thwart the functioning of the committee in making a thorough and full investigation of any matter within its jurisdiction, such agency or department needs to be publicly identified, and if it has been wrongly named, it is entitled to an opportunity to defend itself. As it is now, readers of this article, whether or not it might have been so intended by our able chairman, cannot fail to receive the impression that some agency of Government, which is not identified and which has no opportunity to deny the charge or to invite inquiry as to what the charge is, is guilty of wrongdoing and is trying to conceal something from the committee.

I now invite my able friend from Maine, who is the distinguished chairman of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, to name here in the Senate the agency of the Government which, according to the tip which the Senator has received, has been destroying papers and files which are of interest to the committee. I think it would be just to the department or agency which he has in mind that it be named, so that it may defend itself if it is wrongfully charged or be condemned if it be guilty.

I wish further to say to my distinguished friend from Maine that the statement is made on the basis of what purports to be a "tip." I do not know what the able chairman meant by a "tip." I do not know whether it came from an anonymous source or from a responsible source, or exactly what may be the dignity or the reliability of the "tip."

I wish to suggest in the presence of our colleagues who created the committee that it would probably be better public policy for statements of this sort not to be given out, especially by one whose utterances carry the weight which statements of the chairman of the committee would naturally carry. Such a statement is likely to prejudice the public against their Government unless it has been authenticated by proof that will establish its credibility or reliability.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall yield the floor in a moment.

I have spoken of this matter publicly because the committee referred to has not yet begun to function as a committee, and because the committee is answerable to the Senate for its authority. We shall probably discuss the procedure in the future, but I think it is only appropriate and fair to the Senate and to the Government, Mr. President, to make an observation on the subject and to express not only an invitation to the Senator from Maine to name any agency or department which has been guilty of anything which should be condemned, but also the hope that in the future such statements will not be made public, certainly not by the chairman or any member of the committee, unless the statements have been officially determined by the committee to be authentic.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] regarding the hearing which was held on Friday under the circumstances indicated. I also confirm the fact that that morning, a little after 9 o'clock, I called one of the Members of the Senate who was later designated as a member of the committee, and who appeared likely to be named, to inform him of the situation. I also communicated with the Senator from Florida, but found that his office did not answer telephone calls before 10 o'clock, so I was not able to reach him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator will recall that I said, "Except on one line," and I gave the Senator the number.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator said that he would give me the number.

I also notified two former members of the committee who were in a state of suspended animation. All of the steps possible were taken.

I am sure that the appearance of General Hirsch was informative and helpful, and I deeply appreciate the Senator's approval of our action in that connection, because the situation was somewhat difficult. The committee has been in a transitional state. The Senator called attention to the comment at the end of the article, while things were in a somwhat undetermined condition.

The matter came to my attention through a report from a subordinate in the department who was profoundly concerned with what was going on, which was intimated to be a wholesale destruction of records which might be of great significance. It was difficult to understand. In compliance with our usual procedure, it did not seem to me that the name of the person or the department should be identified. Why, then, it may well be asked, should any comment be made? Because time was elapsing and because of other rumors of this character that we had heard as to bonfires of records, it seemed to me that there should be no long delay in bringing such a serious matter to the attention of all concerned.

I recall a similar episode in connection with the Pearl Harbor investigation relating to certain missing files. It was denied on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that there were records missing, but it later developed that there were serious gaps in the records bearing on certain memoranda.

I accordingly made the statement to which the Senator from Florida has referred, except that my statement was not that I had communicated with President Truman, but that I contemplated so doing. I thought the matter should be taken up with him, and it was my intention, this afternoon, at the meeting of the committee, to report in detail this episode and ask the committee to consider what might be the proper procedure. At that time we were not clear as to how soon the membership of the committee would be complete, as the appointments had not then been made. Following the Hirsch hearing the appointments were announced on the floor of the Senate that afternoon.

I may say, however, that apparently this comment has borne abundant fruitage, as I now have on my desk a statement, signed by an apparently responsible party, quoting a responsible official of a major Government agency, which has been much under discussion for possible investigation by this committee or by other committees, to the effect that orders had been issued to destroy all records over 2 years old. I propose to lay this matter before the committee this afternoon, to ask the committee what action it believes appropriate, and to recommend, so far as I am concerned, that the matter be taken up immediately with the Chief Executive, to ask what are the existing rules and regulations regarding the destruction of public documents. This fits in very well with the currrent discussion regarding the removal of records, which—as we are all informed—is now a matter under discussion between the present and former Secretaries of the Treasury, and seems to supplement it very well.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and myself have served for 6 years, I believe, as the sole Senate members of the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments; and in carrying out our duties in connection with that committee we have signed a number of documents authorizing the destruction of various papers. That has been done on the recommendation of responsible officials, so the record has been kept clear.

If there is authority and if there is procedure for destroying files without first obtaining clearance of that character, I think it is a matter of very great interest to the Congress and to the country, and I am very hopeful that one of the initial steps of our committee may be to clarify this situation.

Meanwhile I hope that my brief statement, which certainly does not cast reflection on any department or agency, inasmuch as I decline to name the ones involved, may perhaps result in suspending temporarily any destruction which may at this time be proceeding or contemplated.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maine for his statement. Inasmuch as he has already given this matter publicity, I am sorry he has not chosen to name the agency and to let that agency also have access to the public, either to deny the charge or to be convicted for its wrongdoing.

As the matter now stands, no agency is singled out, but the Government of the United States is by the Senator from Maine indicted on a "tip" and charged with having done something which has a suggestion or an environment or atmosphere of odium. If I may say so, and I am saying this in the presence of the Senate, before we inaugurate our procedures in the committee this afternoon, if this matter came to the able chairman only on a "tip" and if he has not yet communicated with the President, as the article said, it seems to me that it would have been far better not to have given out any public statement about it at all, because the effect of the statement, although I am sure it was not so intended by the able chairman, cannot but be to stimulate distrust on the part of the people in their Government and to make the suggestion that someone is trying to conceal or suppress something that the public or this committee is entitled to know.

If any persons have been guilty of that kind of wrongdoing, I invite the Senator from Maine to name the persons or agencies and to condemn them; and if the evidence justifies conviction, our committee will convict them of their wrongdoing. But I respectfully submit that the Government of the United States should not be indicted by the able chairman of the committee on a "tip" without naming the agency or department that is the wrongdoer and without giving it an opportunity publicly to deny the charge which has been hurled against it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Florida as to the care with which we should proceed in any matters of this character. Perhaps the effect is a matter of judgment. However, if even before a particular agency or department is named, the comment which has been made has resulted in preventing the destruction of any papers or files, I shall feel well warranted in having taken this action.

Meanwhile, until we know more as to the details and the responsibility, to name one of the departments is not in accordance with the procedure of our committee or in accordance with what I believe to be sound public practice. Full details regarding this matter will be laid before the committee this afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the committee meeting; and then the committee itself can determine the procedure which it deems wise to adopt.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator from Maine understands that there is quite a difference, and would be quite a difference in the public mind, between a routine elimination of records or papers by a department, an elimination which went on regularly from year to year, and a rush to eliminate papers in view of a possible investigation. We all know that there are routine eliminations of papers in the Government files, just as there are in connection with our own files. We go through them and dispose of things which we do not think are any longer necessary. That is not to be criticized, because I think it is a regular matter of routine.

It would be a matter of criticism if any department had rushed to dispose of papers which it thought might be called for by an investigating committee, although in view of the length of time during which the committee has functioned it would be rather strange to me, if now at this late date, after 5 or 6 years, the departments were to become uneasy, in view of the wide latitude the committee has always had in respect to investigating anything which it thought worthy of investigation.

I think the Senator from Maine will agree that in any statement made by anyone or in any information furnished a difference should be drawn between the ordinary, routine elimination of useless papers and an accelerated effort to do that because of the approach or possibility of an investigation.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able Senator from Kentucky, my senior in service as well as in years——

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Maine is going into that matter, I am willing to make profert in open court, so far as that is concerned, as to our respective ages. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the elimination of records and files is authorized other than through the procedure of the very distinguished committee on which he and I have served for the past 6 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably it is now an extinguished committee. Of course, on that committee, our function was performed largely through the Archivist.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. He would send to us certain papers which he had decided were no longer of any use; and, ordinarily, we concurred in his judgment in the matter.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether back of that, before he is called upon to act, the departments have any extensive authority to eliminate papers which accumulate in their offices I am not certain, and I would not be able to answer as to that.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have asked our counsel to have a report to present at our committee meeting this afternoon, as it seems to me quite appropriate to have that done.

Mr. BREWSTER subsequently said: Mr. President, as bearing on the discussion of a few moments ago between the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and myself, I wish to read from the United States Statutes at Large, chapter 192, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of certain records of the United States Government," Public Law 115, July 7, 1943, the pertinent part of the chapter being as follows:

SEC. 15. The procedures herein prescribed are exclusive and no records of the United States Government shall be alienated or destroyed except in accordance with the provisions of this act.

I thought that would complete the record regarding the act's providing for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government, which are here set out in considerable detail.

TIMBER FROM THE NATIONAL FORESTS

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, within the last year or year and a half no subject of national importance has received wider discussion in the Senate and throughout the country than the national housing shortage. It may be interesting to my colleagues and to the people in general to have some information regarding the extent to which the national forests of the United States have contributed to the alleviation of the shortage of building and construction materials. I have requested and have received from the Forest Service certain information on that subject, and I desire to present it at this time.

Of the sixteen hundred billion feet of timber of saw-timber size in the continental United States, 518,000,000,000 feet are on the national forests. Obviously, the management and cutting policy for this 32 percent of the merchantable timber reserves of the Nation is of great concern to both manufacturers and consumers of forest products. The timber-cutting policy for the national forests is to build up the cut, working circle by working circle, to sustained-yield cutting capacity. This statement will review briefly recent progress toward that objective.

For several years prior to the war the cutting from the national forests was approximately 1,250,000,000 feet annually. Beginning in 1941, the rate of cutting increased rapidly to a peak of 3,300,000,000 feet in the fiscal year 1944. During the next 2 years national forest cutting declined in approximately the same proportions as the decline in national lumber production. In the last completed fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, cutting and timber sale receipts were as follows:

	Volume, thousand board feet	Value
Timber cut:
Sales	2,470,050	$10,493,573
Exchanges	259,658	966,745
Total	2,729,708	11,460,318

Progress in building up the cut since July 1, 1946, has been substantial. In the first half of the fiscal year 1947, ending on the 31st of December 1946, 2,173,713,000 feet of timber were cut in sales and exchanges on the national forests, as compared to 1,569,649,000 feet in the corresponding period of the preceding year.

Mr. President, to the average mind those are merely figures. They may be more understandable if we reduce them to concrete measurement. Let me say, then, that the amount of timber cut from the national forests in the last half of 1946, if the lumber produced therefrom were used entirely for the construction of residences, would construct 217,000 frame dwellings of the ordinary five-room type, or practically a quarter of a million small homes.

Receipts to the Treasury from timber sales for this same period have increased in corresponding ratio, being $7,760,637 in the half year ending December 31, 1946, and $5,555,839 in the corresponding period in the preceding year, an increase of $2,204,798, or 40 percent. These increases in the contribution from the national forests toward alleviating shortages of supply of lumber and other forest products, and enlarging receipts to the Federal Treasury, are particularly timely.

The increasing contribution of national forest timber to the supply of forest products is indicated by a comparison of the national forest cut with total lumber production. In the fiscal year 1946 the total lumber cut was 28,565,000,000 feet. The cut from the national forests was 9.5 percent of this amount. For the 6 months ending December 31, 1946, national lumber production was 18,900,000,000 feet, the production for December being estimated. The national forest cut for this period was 11.7 percent of this amount.

The total national forest cut for the fiscal year 1947 is estimated at 3,900,000,000 feet, an increase of 1,200,000,000 feet over the fiscal year 1946, or 44 percent. Receipts to the Treasury for the fiscal year 1947 for timber cutting are estimated to increase by about $4,500,000 to a total of approximately $15,000,000.

An annual rate of cutting of slightly less than 6,000,000,000 feet could be currently maintained on the national forests of the continental United States if cutting on all working circles should b developed to sustained yield capacity. In addition, an annual rate of approximately 1,000,000,000 feet could be supported by the national forests of Alaska if a pulp and paper industry could be established to utilize this volume of timber. These estimates of maximum current cutting capacity are approximate, because it has not yet been possible to take an adequate inventory of the timber stands on all national forests, or to develop management plans to establish accurate sustained yield cutting rates. These estimates of cutting capacity are also subject to upward revision as progress is made in more intensive management of the national forests and betterment of utilization in the areas where cutting operations are conducted.

The key to development of cutting on the national forests to full potentialities is an adequate transportation system. The need for access roads on the national forests is much greater than any other major classification of the Nation's timber lands. Of the 73,000,000 acres of commercial timber lands in the national forests in the continental United States, 53,000,000 acres, or 72 percent, are in the western national forests, and in general are the most rugged and remote commercial timber lands in the United States.

The first major effort to develop adequate timber hauling roads in the national forests was initiated last year. A program involving the expenditure of $19,300,000 got under way about June 1946 by allotment of funds totaling $13,300,000 from the National Housing Agency for the purpose of rapidly expanding the cutting of national forest timber. This program includes 329 projects in all parts of the national forest system and involves 1,554 miles of road construction and 715 miles of road betterment. Around 200,000,000 feet of national forest timber has already been hauled over these access roads, and it is expected that over a billion feet will be hauled over them during each of the calendar years 1947 and 1948.

Today, because of the serious depletion of privately owned timber, coupled with the high level of postwar needs for forest products, development of the national forests to provide maximum rates of cutting allowable under sustained yield management offers the Nation an opportunity to reap the full benefits from its care and conservation of these lands over the last 40 years.

Mr. President, I have also requested and received a statement of the receipts in dollars from national forests for the fiscal year 1946. I ask unanimous consent that this statement may be made a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CORDON. I call attention to the fact, Mr. President, that for the fiscal year 1946 there was received $13,875,071.11 from the sale of national forest timber; that that money came from States throughout the United States where commercial national forests are located, and that of that sum 25 percent is returnable to the States in which the timber is cut, as a payment in lieu of taxes on the timber lands under existing law.

THE PALESTINE PROBLEM

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to take much of the time of the Senate in a discussion which probably may seem somewhat repetitious to many Senators, to the Congress, and to the country at large, but in my opinion the times call again for some statement on the subject to which I am about to refer.

Congress, long since, and over and over again, has expressed itself, and I believe in so doing it has expressed the demand of the American people, in connection with the Palestine problem. Numerous resolutions have been adopted, and both the late President Roosevelt and the present occupant of the White House have made statements concerning it. We always run into the impasse of the British Empire.

I think it is no exaggeration to say that the people of this country, and I am sure of many others, have been profoundly shocked by the recent events which have taken place in Palestine. This is true both on the part of the Jews in America and those who are not adherents of the Jewish faith. I also think it a shocking thing that now, some year and a half after the end of the war, there are hundreds of thousands of its most tragic victims who are still homeless and penniless, many of them living in the same concentration camps where they were imprisoned by their enemies.

It must be, Mr. President, with great irony that these people hear constant references made to the achievements of the Allied Powers in liberating the victims of Nazi oppression. It is true that the Allied Powers are feeding and caring for many of them. But that is far from fulfilling the humanitarian obligations which inevitably accompanied victory in the late war. It is, Mr. President, a shameful thing that with the sole exception of France, the victorious powers have done practically nothing to facilitate the immigration of these victims to places where they can live as decent, normal human beings. France, with great sympathy and understanding, has admitted thousands of refugees to her borders and has, I am happy to say, given them material assistance in their efforts to reestablish the remnants of their families and find an opportunity to rebuild their lives.

My point here, however, is to make it clear that the events in Palestine and the problem of the displaced persons of Europe are closely and directly connected. We hear daily of violence, of conflict, and of strife in Jerusalem, in Haifa, and in Tel Aviv. The British Government protests vigorously and sometimes hysterically against these things. But it is perfectly obvious, Mr. President, that the sole and only reason for the determined resistance of the Hebrew people of Palestine is the white paper policy which Great Britain, in violation of the pledges of the mandate for Palestine, continues to apply. I, along with millions of other Americans, want to see the end of violence in Palestine and, for that matter, any place in the world, because I think violence in any land is an incipient threat to every other country.

I am also greatly disturbed by the repressive measures which the British Government is adopting in Palestine. I do not think the problem there can be solved by restrictions upon the civil liberties of citizens and the curtailment of the right of free speech and press. As an example of how far this policy has been carried, I cite a recent order of the Palestine administration forbidding the mention in the press of the American League for a Free Palestine, a nonsectarian organization of American citizens, of which, Mr. President, I happen to be one of a large number of congressional sponsors.

I am convinced that violence will continue in Palestine until the Mandatory Power reverses its present policy, repudiates the White Paper of 1939, and carries out the terms of the mandate for Palestine. I think, Mr. President, that the Government of the United States should insist, as it legitimately may insist, that these things be done so that peace may come to Palestine.

I believe we cannot afford to wait longer. The British order for the evacuation of English women and children is ominous, but not because English women and children are in any danger by reasons of the activities of the Palestine underground military operations. It is more than slightly ironic that the English wives themselves have made irate protests against this order. They are mindful of the fact that the Palestine underground has conducted its operations with scrupulous concern for the safety and security not only of English women and children, but of all civilians. To be sure, there have been civilian casualties in Palestine. Unhappily, there are civilian casualties in any war, and we are very blind indeed if we do not recognize that there is at the moment actual war in Palestine. The British order for the evacuation of women and children is frightening because it indicates that the scale of military operations in Palestine is to be greatly extended. This will mean further casualties both among the armed forces and the civilian population on both sides.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that I believe the United States cannot afford to delay efforts to bring about a cessation of hostilities and a peaceful solution of this problem. It is perfectly obvious that nothing is to be gained by further appeals to Great Britain. For 18 months the President and the Department of State have attempted to bring about a peaceful solution only to see Great Britain persist with a policy which is alone responsible for the constantly deteriorating situation in Palestine as well as in the displaced-persons camps of Europe. I maintain, therefore, that the time has now come for definitive action to solve both segments of this extremely dangerous problem. I propose that the President of the United States make a forthright public statement in which he will call upon the British Government to revoke immediately all military orders, restore civil administration, and remove all restrictions upon the civil liberties, and at the same time call upon the Irgun Zvai Leumi and the Fighters for the Freedom of Israel simultaneously to lay down their arms and suspend all military operations. I propose that the President, in his statement, announce that unless within a stated time large-scale emigration of displaced Hebrews in Europe to Palestine is undertaken, the Government of the United States will itself undertake to transport such persons from Europe to Palestine under the protection of the American flag, as it has every right to do under the Anglo-American Convention of 1924.

Mr. President, this may appear to be drastic action. If it is, I call attention to the fact that the situation which it is designed to correct is one which has already had drastic consequences and which is certain to have consequences which are still more tragic. I am confident that such a statement by our President would result in immediate cessation of hostilities and the consequent saving of human life and that it would pave the way for a correction of the evils which have brought about this serious threat to the peace and safety of the world.

DEATH OF ADMIRAL MARC ANDREW MITSCHER

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, today, Marc Andrew Mitscher, one of our great naval heroes of the Second World War, went on his last mission.

Admiral Mitscher was born on January 26, 1887, in Hillsboro, Wis. He entered the Navy in 1906, and advanced through the grades to vice admiral by 1944. He was in command of the aircraft carrier Hornet when that vessel transported Gen. Jimmy Doolittle's bombers within 800 nautical miles of Japan to bomb Tokyo on April 18, 1942. Mitscher's carrier task force participated in virtually every important naval operation in the Pacific war theater in 1944. Mitscher was selected to command Task Force 58, which was described as the most powerful, destructive naval unit in the history of sea warfare. His force participated in the Marshall Islands invasion, the attack on Truk, the Marianas invasion, the battle of the Philippine Sea, the Luzon and Formosa raids, and the battle for Leyte Gulf. In March and April 1945, the carrier planes of Mitscher's task force slashed targets on Japan and the Ryukyus. On May 11, 1945, two Japanese kamikaze planes crashed on the deck of the carrier Bunker Hill, Mitscher's flagship, taking the lives of 373 crew members. Mitscher was transferred to another craft. In July 1945, he was made deputy chief of naval operations for air and returned to Washington. On December 4, 1945, he was made commander of the Eighth Fleet in the Atlantic.

Admiral Mitscher's loss will be mourned by all those who wore the Navy uniform during the war and by every American patriot who recognizes the admiral's great contribution to victory. He will be mourned particularly in his home State, Wisconsin.

America knew and loved Marc Mitscher as a forthright, fearless sea chief, who will have a high and lasting place in the annals of the history of our sea arm. He ranks with the Navy immortals—in the company of John Paul Jones and other great naval commanders.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I also wish to pay a tribute of profound respect to Admiral Mitscher. The Senator from Wisconsin has well pointed out his great achievements. The country mourns his loss.

I can only add that I knew him well in the Pacific. I served with him on two of the raids which have been mentioned. Not only was he a great naval officer, but I know of no man who was held in greater respect by the sailors who served under him than Admiral Mitscher. He was a sailor's sailor, a great naval strategist, and a man upon whom the Navy learned to rely, and whom it learned to respect all during the long Pacific war. The country has lost a great American, and the Navy a great commander.

PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE PETROLEUM RESOURCES (S. REPT. NO. 9)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief announcement. The report of the Senate Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources was filed last Friday. It is Senate Report No. 9. My office has been deluged with requests for copies. I am informed that the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office has already received orders for more than 1,200 copies. Some of the Government departments and agencies have also indicated an interest. I make this announcement so that those who may be interested may notify the Superintendent of Documents of their desire for copies, or notify me, and, so far as the Government agencies or departments are concerned, that they may place their orders with the Government Printing Office.

The document is now being prepared for formal publication by the Government Printing Office. I have asked the Superintendent of Documents to notify me what the cost of the document will be, and as soon as I receive the estimate, both for the total cost and the cost per copy, I shall place it in the RECORD.

ALL-AMERICAN FLAG LINE FOR AMERICAN AIR COMMERCE ABROAD

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senate has heard me many times with reference to what is known as the all-American air line for foreign air transportation. I stated on the floor of the Senate during the past Congress, and I shall state in this Congress, that unless America wakes up and takes governmental control over an all-American flag line to carry air commerce abroad, she will find herself very shortly with no commerce to carry, and no opportunity for facilitating or promoting an air line.

Mr. President, I have drawn to the attention of the Senate on numerous occasions, and to the attention of the Committee on Commerce in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses, the fact that Great Britain has established an air line supported by the British Government, with all its strength and all its resources—an air line which will have British sanction, British support, and British financial aid, with the intention of taking away from America supremacy in the air, which we have held, and should be holding for years to come. We have been supreme in the air until this hour. We had every right in the world to retain that supremacy. Not only had we every right, but we had every obligation—an obligation to ourselves, that we might attempt to pay off or assist in paying off our national debt by air commerce, and an obligation to assist our citizens in getting their commerce abroad and hold supremacy in the air for the purpose of aviation development.

However, I am sorry to say that the suggestions offered in the all-American air line bill, which was pending during the Seventy-ninth Congress, and is today pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, were not adopted. I do not hesitate to say to the Senate that its defeat in the Seventy-ninth Congress was due to the activity of British agents, who worked night and day to see that the United States should not establish a chosen instrument, so to speak, so that Great Britain might do with us in the air what she has done with us on the waters of the world—practically put us out of business. No matter what we did to build a fleet on the water to carry the commerce of America to the ends of the earth, we found that by some method of jockeying we were relegated not to a secondary place but a third place in the commerce of the world. Unless America awakens very promptly to conditions in the air, we shall find ourselves even in worse condition than we have been on the seas.

Mr. President, in the publication, "American Aviation," in the department entitled "Background and Trends: Significant Developments and Forecasts Based on the Fortnight's Top News," I find this significant little squib:

BRITISH MADE A BID

British South American Airways came close to invading the United States back yard in Latin America by buying TACA Airways. If Waterman Airlines hadn't stepped in at the right time, the TACA system probably would have gone to BSAA. If nothing else, it would have demonstrated how terrifically obsolete and narrow is the United States policy on international aviation.

I repeat that the bill to establish an all-American air line, so that America may take her place in the forefront of commercial aviation, is pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate. With every ounce of energy and strength I possess, I shall attempt to bring it to the attention of the committee, with the hope that the committee may on this occasion vote favorably on it, so that in this country we may establish an air system which will keep America in the forefront of commercial aviation in the world.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to speak a word of assurance to the Senator from Nevada. As chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I appreciate the fact that the proposed legislation is pending before the committee. I believe that I and all the other members of the committee appreciate the tremendous importance to this country of having a vigorous and wise aviation policy. I think there will be unanimity of desire among all members of the committee to explore this subject; and we have the hope that sound judgments will be reached.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, supplementing what my distinguished colleague, Mr. WHITE, has said, within the past week the President expressed publicly and privately his very great concern regarding this situation, and his continuing hope that the Congress, which is presumably the policy-making body of the Government, will give attention to this subject. He stated that the reason for his own action as an executive in formulating and carrying on policy was the vacuum which existed in the formulation of policy.

So I am sure that there is recognition by all concerned with aviation—the Army, the Navy, and commercial air-transport interests—of the profound significance of efficiency in our domestic and overseas air commerce. Perhaps the very dark picture presented as the result of recent crashes may ultimately prove to be a certain measure of compensation in inducing all interests to cooperate in giving to American air commerce the significance which it deserves if America is to be secure. I say that in deference to what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] has said and the great interest which he has always shown in the whole subject of air development.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose heavenly bounty blesses our lives with each succeeding day, Thy providence is a pledge that Thou wilt go with us to the end. In this sublime virtue the humblest, the greatest, and the best of men have walked. With this gift so enrich us that no shadow shall fall between us and our fellow men.

Take all our gifts and make them thine; take our reason that it may ever seek the truth; take our wills and make them free, merging them with the ideals of divine purpose; take our hearts and set them on things pure, knowing that the anchor of a good man is love. O may it hold when at the desk, in the forum, or in the street; and when the day is ended, bless us all with the quieting consciousness that we have been in the presence of our God. SMALL BUSINESS

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein certain recommendations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the needs of small business have been of great concern to many Members of this House. It has long been common knowledge that small business employs more men and women than big business. It is the essence of the free enterprise system.

Out in Ohio the legislature created an Ohio small business commission and instructed it to make a very exhaustive study of the situation in the State. This report was submitted to the ninety-seventh general assembly when it convened in January of this year. It is not my intention to include in my remarks the entire report, but there are certain recommendations directed to the Members of Congress on the Federal problems having to do with small business.

Some of these recommendations are as follows:

SMALL BUSINESS AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE OHIO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS OF THE OHIO SMALL BUSINESS COMMISSION RELATIVE TO FEDERAL PROBLEMS

With respect to Federal affairs, it is evident that the province of the commission can only be to present the picture with its recommendations to the Ohio Members of Congress.

First. The OPA was the subject for greatest discussion and complaint. The general feeling was that this agency should be abolished and dissolved as quickly as possible.

Second. Small business lives, and grows, only in an atmosphere of economy. It has been shocked by Government expenditures and hurt by the taxes that accompanied such expenditures.

Small business has been, and is, very critical of both of these items, demanding that:

1. Intense economy must take place in the Federal Government at once.

2. Taxes should be reduced generally, with especial attention to incentive taxes for small business, venture capital and management.

We therefore recommend that the Congress reduce Government personnel and expenses by quickly eliminating war emergency agencies, pruning peacetime departments and agencies, examining all requests and budgets for appropriations, and refusing to spend one unnecessary dollar of the taxpayers' money. Also, to reflect these savings in reduced taxes immediately.

Third. Small business expressed itself to us as dissatisfied with the present employee-employer-public situation and definitely recommended that the Wagner Act be amended to provide equality, justice, and protection for all three of those groups.

Also, it was recommended that strikes be limited to the actual employees and employer directly involved only; that some means of preventing and handling them be devised to prevent the losses always suffered by all three groups—employees, employer, and the public.

Fourth. Small business repeatedly insisted on a minimum of interference with the law of supply and demand.

We recommend that the Congress examine the present Government, its departments, laws, and rules, and eliminate all such interference possible.

Fifth. Small business is very much alarmed, and small business states that it has been actually hurt by the growth of large stores, branches, chain stores. During the past scarcity of goods, many have felt discriminations in favor of these large competitors. However, many feel that the free operation of supply and demand will generally cure this situation, but it will not cure some of the other evils that accompany "bigness" when it tends toward "monopoly."

It is difficult to keep our traditional "freedom of opportunity" and at the same time consider limitations as to size or growth. So our recommendation is that Congress seek the evils or abuses at every level and provide correction in the public interest, which interest, we feel, is also that of small business.

Sixth. Small business corporations feel strongly on the subject of double taxation as being unfair and a hindrance to their development and growth. We feel that this is an inequitable and unjust procedure and recommend to the Ohio delegation and to the Congress that it be eliminated.

Seventh. Certain types of business organizations are legally free of income taxes and are allowed as deductible certain reserves which are not allowed to other forms of business.

We recommend that there should be equity and equality of treatment for all types of business.

Eighth. Small business feels that the least possible amount of authority and government should prevail at the Federal level and that as much as possible should be returned to the State and local levels.

We recommend that the efforts of the Federal Government to centralize and federalize be minimized and instead it make an honest effort to return to the States all possible action, power, and authority.

Small business is the living example of what made America great, the willingness to accept risk in exercising its freedom of choice and to receive a commensurate return. It is individualism and self-reliance. As such, its main desire is to be let alone, seeking and needing a minimum of regulations, regimentation, or interference, and resenting such from any source—Federal, State, local, labor, big business, etc.—demanding protection only from evils beyond its ability to handle.

We recommend that a copy of this report on Federal affairs, as having been brought to the attention of our commission, be sent to each of the Ohio Members of Congress, with a request that they give them consideration and effort.

This report is based on statements made by small businessmen at many hearings over the period of 1945 to November 22, 1946.

CERTAIN ORDERS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION AND OFFICE OF DEFENSE TRANSPORTATION

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that recently the Interstate Commerce Commission and Office of Defense Transportation have issued orders, or directives, to railroad companies to immediately furnish a large number of empty boxcars to the western area for the use of grain transportation. The order is of such nature that it is mandatory for railroad companies to haul the empty cars from the east coast to the western area—and in some instances the boxcars are earmarked for certain points—and not be allowed to stop the cars at any of our midwestern industries that have storerooms completely filled with finished products that are awaiting shipment to the general area, or near area, to which these empty cars are consigned.

This morning I am advised that a large number of industries have been required to close down and their men are being thrown out of work, because of this inconsistent directive.

Mr. Speaker, if other Members of Congress have not already heard objections on this subject, they probably will hear from their workers and their industries, and I hope they will join me in asking the ICC and the ODT to repeal, or at least revise, this order. It certainly would appear that we are wasting transportation.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter I have written this morning to the Chairman of the ICC and the Director of ODT:

Mr. CLYDE AITCHISON,
Chairman, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.
Col. J. MONROE JOHNSON,
Director, Office of Defense Transportation, Washington, D. C.:

I have learned this morning that you have recently issued a directive compelling railroads to furnish a great number of empty boxcars to the western area. It is my understanding this order has compelled the railroads to confiscate empty boxcars in the East and haul them empty all the way to the western area. The railroads are not allowed to place these boxcars at any industry en route, although it can plainly and definitely be shown that industries have many carloads of finished products awaiting transportation in the direction in which the empty boxcars are assigned. Even in the face of the knowledge that the lack of boxcars is forcing many industries to close and many men are being forced out of work, this directive still is in effect.

I protest such action and immediately request that this directive be at least amended. I assure you that many, many Members of the House and Senate desire to be heard on this subject at once unless more equitable arrangements can be made immediately.

I will appreciate your giving this letter your prompt attention and advising the writer of the action taken.

Respectfully yours,

J. HARRY MCGREGOR,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I know of one instance in my district where one employee of an industry counted many trainloads of empty boxcars going West when his plant was being shut down within a few days because they had no available boxcars to load their finished products, and a great percentage of their products were going in the same direction the empty boxcars were going.

It would seem to me this transportation program could be handled more equitably than to force our railroad companies to haul empty cars practically across the country and at the same time force our industries to shut down and men be forced out of work.

This directive issued by the ICC and the ODT to me is a waste of transportation when we need transportation, and I urge the membership of Congress to join me in bringing about an equitable handling of this subject.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on Wednesday of this week at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] will discuss the very timely subject of the sugar supply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the Washington Times-Herald on February 2, entitled "It's Your Money," by Frank C. Waldrop. I would like to say that if the Members of Congress will read that article and help aid and assist the Committee on Appropriations in cutting down expenditures, we will do this country a great good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including observations on the current oyster war between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of Maryland.

Mr. BUCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement on surplus property by the National Institute of Government Purchasing.

Mr. BRADLEY of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article appearing in the Pennsylvania Bandmasters' Association News Letter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article published by Mr. Robert F. Klepinger, a very distinguished young lawyer from Washington and Ohio.

BOXCAR SHORTAGE

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, with all due sympathy for the gentleman from Ohio as to the need for boxcars in the Ohio area, I would like to say to my distinguished colleague that out in the Middle West we are having the same shortage problem in the matter of the movement of corn and grain. It happens that in the Middle West this year we have some very high moisture-content corn. If that corn is not moved by the 1st of May the corn is going to spoil. I would like to say to the gentleman from Ohio that we are having a meeting with the American Association of Railroads and other officials that have to do with the regulation and movement of boxcars on Tuesday of this week. I assure the gentleman the situation is one of the most critical that we have. I am informed that some of our midwestern railroads are operating on about 65 percent car capacity.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McGREGOR. I appreciate the gentleman's invitation to attend the meeting, and I am certain that the gentleman in his fairness will recognize the fact that these cars can be loaded in the Midwest with products going to the West and it will only delay the actual loading from the West a few minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

CAMP STEWART REFUGEES

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning in the interest of 1,000 families of my district who were in 1940 notified that they had become victims of the Federal power of eminent domain and would have to give up their homes and farms in order that their lands might be used for an Army training camp. These lands became known as Camp Stewart, Ga., and these families became refugees of Camp Stewart. They were a brokenhearted lot as they went from place to place seeking a new home. Many of them would not accept the low value placed on their property and while litigation moved slowly toward a determination of the value, these families were without funds to purchase lands to settle upon. In a fashion reminiscent of the early colonial days when the Indians were driven to the West, these families, who are all direct descendants of the first coastal settlers of Georgia, moved one by one into other sections of Georgia. They patiently set about the task of establishing a new home and with a faith in the fairness of their Government, reconciled themselves to a new life, believing that when the United States conquered her foes she would permit them to reclaim their ancestral homes and allow them to move back onto the soil which had provided sustenance for them and their pioneer ancestors.

In the meantime the Army moved onto the 280,000-acre tract, measuring 440 square miles, and proceeded with the removal of all buildings, schools, and churches. In a few months the villages of Willie and Taylors Creek became nonexistent and the only signs of habitation remaining were the tombstones standing as silent reminders of the fact that domestic security and peaceful habitation are oftentimes enjoyed today and only a memory tomorrow.

The war was waged and won. The artillery weapons long used in practice on this vast reservation were silenced. The shaftlike beams of the searchlights so often seen playing acros the sky were seen no more, and on February 30, 1945, the War Department placed this camp on an inactive status. Only a handful of troops were left behind to act as caretakers of the property.

The passage of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 gave new hope to these 1,000 families and many believed that when the camp was closed that their faith in their Government was justified and that soon they would be allowed to purchase their homes back according to the terms of the Surplus Property Act.

But such was not the case. Two long years have passed since Camp Stewart closed. It has not yet been declared surplus by the War Department. It is today under strict guard while thousands of hogs and cattle, now become wild, range the ridges and swamps bearing the brand and marks of these 1,000 families. Their once well-kept cemeteries are now hidden by shaggy dog fennel. Barracks and other buildings are rotting away.

While structural depreciation is very much in evidence, on the other hand many acres of saplings have grown into tall and stately pine trees ready to be chipped and cupped for turpentine purposes. Millions of trees have reached sawmill size; game, fish, and wildlife have multiplied many times under the enforcement of strict hunting and fishing regulations.

These are some of the inducements that invite the former land owners to rebuild their homes, restore their schools and churches, bring back to life an area that once played such an important part in the affairs of the counties of Bryan, Evans, Liberty, Long, and Tattnall, put into production the fertile soil which once bore such abundant crops and put back on the tax digest of these counties this valuable land, thereby making lighter the tax burden of other property in these affected counties.

Mr. Speaker, it is agreed by all that the cantonment area of this camp where millions were spent should be preserved by the War Department for training purposes or by sale to a suitable municipal agency for the purpose of establishing some productive industry. It is a city within itself and could house a huge assembly plant, including all of its workers. I realize its importance for this purpose, but I appeal for the return of all other lands to the former owners.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the Members of the House this startling fact: The War Department, in apparent disregard for the rights of these American citizens, transferred 56,629 acres of this land, lying on the west, north, and northeast perimeter of the camp, to the Forestry Service of the Department of Agriculture. By what right does the Forestry Service come into the possession of this land to the exclusion of the former owners? Yes, they claim a right under the Clark-McNary Act of 1924, but when the provisions of any law contravene the moral rights of citizens the United States Government should be the last one to invoke the law. It is but another example of the blind might of Federal power. The Forestry Service will sell millions of dollars' worth of sawmill timber from this area and show it proudly as a departmental income.

The worst blow was yet to come to these valiant citizens who had been laid upon the sacrificial altar of war. The War Department had a survey made of all available timber and when a report was made on Camp Stewart timber they let contracts to cut the timber on the Camp Stewart Reservation to be used for military purposes only, and I read you a letter which I received January 28 from the War Department:

DEAR MR. PRESTON: Permit me to refer to your recent inquiry concerning the present and future status of Camp Stewart, Ga., and the possibility of former owners reacquiring their property.

This installation was placed on an inactive status on February 30, 1945. The camp is, however, being retained for possible use by the National Guard and for universal military training in the event legislation is enacted for this purpose.

Camp Stewart contains approximately 280,400 acres of Government-owned land. Based on a recent survey of acreage requirements for the possible postwar utilization of this facility, it was determined that four tracts of land, totaling approximately 56,629 acres on the west, north, and northeast perimeter of the camp, were excess to the immediate plans of the Army. The Forestry Service, Department of Agriculture, has requested that this area be made available to them under section IX, Clark-McNary Act of June 7, 1924. In view of this request, the Chief of Engineers was directed to transfer this land to the Forestry Service and to retain maneuver rights to the property.

No property within the boundaries of this installation, other than that indicated above, has been declared surplus to the needs of the War Department. However, if at a later date it should be determined that additional land could be released, ultimate disposal would rest with the War Assets Administration. In this connection, it may be pointed out that former land owners are accorded certain priorities in accordance with the Surplus Property Act of 1944, when such property is declared surplus.

Reference your inquiry concerning timber cutting on the Camp Stewart Reservation, the War Department issued a directive on August 16, 1946, relative to the cutting of timber on military reservations. This directive required that a survey be made of all available timber and report submitted to the Office of the Chief of Engineers. A report was received by the Chief of Engineers concerning Camp Stewart and was forwarded to the division engineer, Atlanta, Ga., for necessary action since, under the directive mentioned above, the division engineer has authority to make a timber cruise of all installations and cut mature timber in accordance with good forestry practice. Therefore, it is believed that after qualified forestry personnel have marked the timber on the Camp Stewart Reservation, contracts will be let by the division engineer for the cutting of the timber which will be used for military activities only.

Your personal interest in Camp Stewart, Ga., has been made a matter of record in this office and it will be a pleasure to advise you of any changes relative to its status and future disposition. In the event you desire more detailed information relative to those tracts of land made available to the Forestry Service and contemplated timber-cutting activities, it is suggested that you communicate with the division engineer, South Atlantic Division, 50 Whitehall Street, Atlanta, Ga., whose office has that information immediately available.

Trusting that the above information will be of assistance to you in advising your constituents, and with assurance that it is a pleasure to be of service to you, I am

Sincerely yours,

NOAH M. BRINSON,
Colonel, GSC, Legislative and Liaison Division.

I ask, Is this a fair attitude for the War Department to take toward private citizens who have no recourse at law? Their only recourse is through a change of policy of the War Department or by suitable congressional action.

Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill directing the War Department to declare this area surplus so that the War Assets Administration might proceed to return it by sale to the former owners. Last Friday they declared Camp Butner, N. C., surplus, containing 40,364 acres. Why not Camp Stewart now?

In conclusion, let me remind you that this area of land is the fourth largest tract of land purchased by the United States Government since the Louisiana Purchase. More American citizens were forced out of their homes in this purchase than ever before in the history of our Nation.

I earnestly solicit your support of this bill.

PIG-IRON SHORTAGE

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, for the last several days I have received much information about a pig-iron shortage in my State as well as on the west coast generally. We all know that there is a shortage of pig iron all over, but in this particular area we need this pig iron to assist the agriculturalists. Just last week, while we were trying to get some information from various departments here about having additional pig iron shipped out to the west coast, we found at Los Angeles that there was a ship loaded with 6,000 tons of pig iron en route to Russia. Also waiting to be loaded was 1,500 tons of coal from Utah, yet the people of Utah say they cannot produce pig iron without coal. The following statement was received from Mr. William E. Howe, owner of the Tulare Foundry, in my home town:

Two weeks ago today, on the 16th day of January, the writer had a conference with Mr. Walker Kennedy, manager of Columbia Steel Co., in Los Angeles (controlling Provo, Utah, plant). Mr. Kennedy stated that, due to Government controls, he could offer no assistance in hardship cases. Mr. E. L. Brumley, my supplier of pig iron, and myself, both related to Mr. Kennedy that at the very moment we were conversing a Russian freighter was standing off Los Angeles harbor waiting for a supply of coal before proceeding to Russia with 6,000 tons of pig iron aboard. During Mr. Kennedy's conversation he stated that his company was having trouble securing coal in Utah to produce iron. He was amazed to find out that this particular freighter was loading 1,500 tons of coal (Utah coal) for the trip. Mr. Brumley, in whose office we met, was supplying this freighter with the above-mentioned coal. The authority for the sale of this coal was a telegram from the State Department. Another instance related to Mr. Kennedy was that a foundry in Los Angeles was unloading that very day several carloads of pig iron to manufacture dumbbells. We also related to Mr. Kennedy evidence that pig iron had been shipped to Mexico, and in turn forwarded to Los Angeles to be consumed in one of the larger foundries.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering how much longer we are going to permit these Federal bureaus to operate on this basis?

ORPHAN CHILDREN OF SOLDIERS WHO DIED IN SERVICE

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill in behalf of the orphaned children of soldiers who were killed in battle or died of service-connected injuries or illness. This bill provides that hereafter the payments of compensation to these orphaned children shall be $40 per month. This sum, $40 per month, will buy no luxuries or nonessentials. If judiciously expended, with the utmost thrift and frugality, it is sufficient to provide only the barest necessities of life in the way of shelter, food, clothing, medicine, school expenses, transportation, and the like.

Under the present law the following is the schedule of compensation payments our Government makes to the widows and orphans of our soldiers and servicemen who gave their lives in the late war:

Widow but no child, $60.

Widow with one child, $78.

Each additional child, $15.60.

No widow but one child, $30.

No widow but two children—each $22.80.

Each additional child $12.

Under this schedule, if a child lives with its widowed mother, the Government pays the pitifully inadequate sum of $18 a month for its support. If there are two children, the second child receives the still smaller sum of $15.60 per month for its support. It is obvious to everyone who will take the trouble to give it a moment's thought, that these payments of $18 and $15.60 per month are not sufficient to keep body and soul together; and the burden and responsibility at present rests upon the shoulders of their widowed mothers to provide the additional money necessary to support these children of our soldiers who gave their lives in our defense. We should regard, and I believe we do regard, their children as our responsibility. Yet the amounts our Government is now providing as compensation will not support them. This means that the mothers of these children must leave the home, find jobs, and work to earn the additional money which is absolutely necessary to support these children of our men who died in our common cause.

This brings us face to face with another problem. These fatherless children, already deprived by war of the earnings, love, and parental control of a father, are then, when the mother leaves the home to work, thus deprived of the care, discipline, and parental control of the other parent. These children, therefore, face the prospect of being reared in a home without any parental control or discipline whatever during the day. The chances are good that they will grow up on the streets, with whatever companions chance or circumstance may throw them. They may become gangsters, thieves, drunkards, or juvenile delinquents in a dozen different ways because of this enforced absence from home of the mother.

Being a circuit judge during the last 13 years I know that we have had a great increase in what we call juvenile delinquency. From my own experience I know that a great percentage of these juvenile delinquents come from homes without parental care and control because one parent was dead or absent, and the other parent worked, leaving the home and children without parental care.

It is pathetic to see the lives of children wrecked without having a chance. It would be pathetic indeed to see in the next 5 to 10 years the children of our dead American heroes coming into our courts branded as juvenile delinquents. Let us now provide enough money for the support of these children so that their mothers may remain in the home with them and keep the home together. Since they cannot have the love, care, and training of a father, the least we can do for them is to make it possible for the mother to be in the home with them, and take the place there as best she can, of both father and mother. We are spending millions of dollars to alleviate human misery and suffering. There is no call upon us that is more worthy or more deserving than the support of the orphaned children of our fighting men who died in service. The cost is small, but the benefits both now and in the future will be beyond the possibility of measuring in dollars and cents.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

THE LATE ADMIRAL MARC A. MITSCHER

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I announce the passing of a truly great American, Admiral Marc A. Mitscher, the famous commander of the famous Task Force 58. Admiral Mitscher did as much as any one man to turn the tide of defeat to one of victory in the Pacific.

Long years before the test of his great understanding and mastery of naval air warfare came, Admiral Mitscher prepared for the day when a new type of naval warfare would turn the tide for victory for this Nation's arms. Mastery of all phases of naval air warfare was his life's chief interest and ambition. How well this life of interest, study, work, and experimentation served his country is now written in every line of the history of the great war in the Pacific.

Admiral Mitscher was one of the early pioneers of naval air warfare and his contributions to its success were legion. No test was too hard. One of his earliest achievements in flying successfully across the Atlantic for the first mass flight in the world's history was over an ocean with the now famous NC–4.

America has lost a great hero; but in whose passing every citizen can thank God that he was spared long enough to do so much for his Nation in its great test in World War II.

Admiral Mitscher was a citizen of Oklahoma—one of her grand, patriotic, heroic sons. He was appointed to the Naval Academy from Oklahoma City. The family has long resided there. His father was at one time mayor of Oklahoma City. I know the entire Congress joins me in expressing deep regret at the passing of this great, heroic American.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, during the past week I received the following information from four different veterans of World War II. If this information is typical of the attitude of many of the employees in the executive branch of our Government, it might have very disastrous results.

In each of the four cases the story was in substance about the same. The veterans went to a regional office of the Veterans' Administration, in two cases to inquire about the delay in receiving their subsistence checks, and in the other two cases to inquire about the status of their claims for compensation.

In all four cases these veterans were told not to blame the Veterans' Administration for the delays, but to write to their Congressman; that Congress was to blame for cutting the Veterans' Administration's budget.

I want to serve notice now on all employees of the Veterans' Administration, or any other agency of the Federal Government, that they want to be very sure of the truth of their statements before they falsely blame Congress for their own shortcomings.

In the future I intend to ask for the removal of any employee who circulates false information of the kind referred to by the veterans who contacted me. I intend to devote whatever time is necessary to bring about the removal of those who pass out such misinformation.

RENT CONTROL

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, last week in public print there appeared information that 43 federally owned public housing projects in Washington and vicinity would increase their rents as much as $35 per month. At the same time there also appeared in public print information from the State of Kentucky that in that State some of the owners of large residential buildings were threatening either to tear the buildings down or convert them to commercial purposes, unless they were given some relief from increased maintenance costs. The tenants of one of these buildings, sensing that that might be done, joined in a petition unanimously offering to increase their rents 15 percent providing the owner would give them a lease for 2 years. He agreed to it. They sent that proposal here to the OPA, and the OPA turned it down. Why? Because, they said, that the owner of this residential building had some commercial property in other cities and that he could offset the losses he sustained on the residential property by the profit that he made from the commercial buildings. That reasoning is repugnant to every principle on which this Government was founded. It is communistic. Yet some people want rent control continued. There will be no houses built for rent for veterans or anybody else as long as the Government controls rent. Rent control is making the housing shortage more acute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

PAYING THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H. R. 1536 which is a bill to reduce the interest charges on the national debt by refunding outstanding obligations through the issuance of tax-exempt bonds bearing a low rate of interest.

Mr. Speaker, the interest on our national debt now amounts to about $5,000,000,000 per year. Under this bill it is proposed to reduce these interest charges by approximately half, which would result in a net saving of two and one-half billion dollars a year. If this amount of interest could be saved each year it would retire our national debt in 100 years by applying our savings to the principal.

Our present national debt is around $259,000,000,000. Let us assume that is two hundred and fifty billion, with the average interest rate at 2 percent. This gives us an annual interest charge of $5,000,000,000 and must be included in the budget each year. Under the terms of my bill the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue bonds bearing interest at rates not exceeding 1 percent. This would cut our interest charge in half, providing all of the bonds could be refunded, and we would then be paying only $2,500,000,000 a year instead of the five billion as at present. We could apply the difference on the principal of the debt and thus retire the same in 100 years.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that it will not be possible for the Secretary to refund all of the outstanding bonds, and that we cannot expect to effect the full amount of the savings possible. However, I am convinced that many of these outstanding bonds and obligations that are now drawing higher rates of interest can be refunded. Whatever we save is affording that much relief to the taxpayers of this country, and will enable us to retire our national debt that much sooner.

The bonds to be issued will be tax-exempt, except for gift, estate, and inheritance taxes. This inducement should enable the Secretary to dispose of these bonds without difficulty. It is believed that insurance companies and others making large investments will be attracted by these bonds. It is also provided that the bonds may be used in payment of any estate or inheritance taxes imposed by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the question of paying off the present national debt is one which demands the prompt attention of the Congress. The proposal I am today discussing will provide for the gradual payment of the debt by reducing our interest charges and applying the savings on the principal. The money received from the sale of these bonds shall be used only for the payment of the national debt which is outstanding at the time the bill is passed.

Under this plan the figures show that the Government will effect a saving of over $52,000,000,000 as between the saving of 1 percent on its interest payments and the amount that could be collected as tax on bonds subject to income tax. At the same time, over a period of 100 years, we can pay off our national debt with the amount of interest saved. I hope this proposal will have the favorable consideration of the Ways and Means Committee, as I believe this plan offers a sound and sensible way to pay our present indebtedness.

PRODUCTION OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill providing for Government assistance in the production of strategic and critical materials and particularly nonferrous metals. In discussing Government assistance of this kind, frequently there is reference to whether we are a "have" or "have not" Nation in these essentials to modern industry and modern warfare. In my opinion, the real question is, Can we be assured of a rate of production or availability which will meet the demands of either industry or war? The importance of mineral resources lies in how quickly the metal contained may be made available for use. Mere location in the ground does not mean available for use when needed.

There has been a growing dependency on foreign resources. For example, from 1919 through 1935 only 1.8 percent of our annual zinc consumption was from foreign sources; in 1936 through 1940 this rose to 8 percent; in 1941 through 1945 it was 36 percent. I wish to introduce a graph showing the rate of increase of the use of foreign zinc in this country. Nevertheless, with this increase in use of foreign metal, in October 1946, the latest month for which figures are available, 88.4 percent of the zinc produced in this country could not have been produced without Government assistance in the form of premium payments.

If we eliminate this assistance, we must depend almost wholly on foreign sources for this essential material. Then the question becomes, Should we expect other countries to supply us for every need and every emergency? The January 1947 issue of Engineering and Mining Journal states:

> The United States cannot greatly increase its present dependency on foreign sources of copper, lead, and zinc without foreign reserves being depleted faster than our own.

It is obvious that the present availability of these metals cannot continue without assistance from somewhere.

The purpose of this bill is to keep mines going and, in keeping them going, to help them explore and develop new reserves so as to assure the country of a rate of production which will meet the demand for any emergency.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

DISCRIMINATORY FREIGHT RATES—THE BATTLE OF THE EMPTY BOXCARS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a copy of a bill I have introduced, H. R. 1234.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR], I desire to call attention to the fact that the battle of the empty boxcars has just begun.

The bill I have introduced, H. R. 1234, which I am inserting at the end of my remarks, would eliminate the discriminatory one-way freight rates.

For instance, a man in my town, Tupelo, Miss., was doing business with a firm in New England. That firm accidentally sent him a consignment of goods which should have gone to another customer. He discovered the error, and did not even open them. He simply put another label on them and shipped them back. It cost twice as much to ship them back as it did to ship them down there over the same road. The same thing would have occurred had the shipment been to Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Texas, Missouri, Utah, or any of the other Western or Southern States.

This battle of the empty boxcars has just begun. We are going to have relief from these discriminations for the South and West, or we are going to carry on the fight not only throughout this Congress but throughout all succeeding Congresses.

The bill to which I refer will correct this evil. It reads as follows:

H. R. 1234

A bill to prohibit any carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, in transporting property between two points, from making a difference in its charges depending on the point of origin or destination

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"(3) It shall be unlawful for any carrier subject to this part to charge or receive, for the transportation of property from any point of origin to any point of destination, compensation which is greater or less than the compensation charged or received by such carrier for the transportation of like kind of property from such point of destination to such point of origin."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 90 days after the date f its enactment.

Pass this bill, give the South and the West a square deal in freight rates, and our railroads will not be burdened with empty cars going either way.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the legislative business of the day and following any other special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE OPA

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the situation called to our attention by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is nothing new. He disclosed a situation where, though the tenants and property owners had agreed upon terms of tenancy, the OPA refused to accept their decision because, though the owners were losing money on the present rents, they would not by OPA be permitted to raise rents so as to break even because the owners had other property on which a profit was made. From the very beginning, OPA has assumed and exercised the right, if it is a right—has assumed, let us say, the power of not only limiting profits but to wipe them out. All along the line they have been doing that very thing. It is unlawful and it is unjust. It is an arbitrary procedure. But it is a familiar procedure. Congress found it necessary at one time to amend the act. It expressly denied to OPA authority to take into consideration the question of a profit when issuing its orders. Nevertheless, OPA, in disregard of congressional mandate, has time and again, by rule, order, and directive, thwarted the expressed will of the Congress; put into effect, in direct opposition to the congressional mandate, its own orders, established its own policy. When the law is up for amendment or extension, OPA promises to be good. The ink is hardly dry on congressional amendments before those promises are repudiated. No one is to blame for this situation but Congress itself, because we continue the life of OPA. Those fellows will never administer the law as we write it. They follow their own sweet will. They do just as they please. They are determined that no one shall make an honest, decent profit. OPA should be ended; its administrators should be removed from office. To at least in part bring that about, H. R. 1541 was introduced last week. Let us have action.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—SECOND WAR POWERS ACT (H. DOC. NO. 80)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk and, together with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the past 18 months the Nation has almost completed its great task of reconverting from all-out wartime production to a peacetime economy. As reconversion has proceeded, we have found it increasingly possible to dispense with many controls that were essential during active hostilities and immediately thereafter. We can now foresee the day when no further use of these powers will be necessary. But it has become apparent that the effective completion of reconversion will, in a few instances, require the continued use of powers granted by the Second War Powers Act after March 31, 1947, the expiration date of this law.

I stated to the Congress in my recent State of the Union Message that after the termination of hostilities was proclaimed on December 31, 1946, there were two groups of temporary laws that still remained, namely, those which were to last during the emergency and those which were to continue until the termination of the war. The study of these two groups of laws is proceeding and I shall submit recommendations on them in the near future.

This present message is directed solely to the Second War Powers Act because the powers existing under such act expire on March 31, 1947.

Since the fighting ceased, it has been my avowed policy to terminate all emergency controls that were no longer necessary or workable. By November 1946, we had removed all manpower and wage controls, and all price ceilings except those on rent, sugar and sirups, and rice. Almost all the priority and allocation regulations based on title III of the Second War Powers Act have been eliminated. As early as last May, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, in reporting out the last extension of the Second War Powers Act, made the following findings in this connection:

The record clearly shows that there has been a rapid lifting of the controls which have been exercised over our economy during the war, and a progressive abandonment of the rigid provisions of the original War Powers Act, evidencing what your committee regards as a sincere purpose and intention by the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, by the Civilian Production Administration, and by all the other agencies concerned, to return as rapidly as possible to the normal processes of our economy.

The House Committee on the Judiciary in its report also referred favorably to the record of reductions in controls by the Government.

Speedy decontrol under the Second War Powers Act has continued since these reports were made. From a wartime peak of about 700 orders and schedules, the Civilian Production Administration—Office of Temporary Controls—by January 27, 1947, had in effect only 24 orders and 3 schedules, and this number will be still further reduced in the immediate future. The Department of Agriculture had left by January 27 only 19 war food orders, of which 9 are merely administrative or procedural, and still further reductions are planned by the Department between now and March 31. The Office of Defense Transportation has eliminated all but three transportation orders, and the Office of Price Administration—Office of Temporary Controls—now rations only sugar.

After March 31, 1947, moreover, it will be possible to dispense entirely with the use of the broad powers granted by title III of the Second War Powers Act. Thenceforth only a few controls coming under this title will be needed over a progressively diminishing list of commodities of which the supply is seriously deficient, both domestically and throughout the world, and the affected final products are critically important to industry or the public. Power to allocate under the Second War Powers Act is requested only for the specific cases described in this message and for national emergencies declared by the President.

The few orders that would remain would be limited to clearly manageable controls in an economy freed of most emergency restrictions. They afford positive aids to business and the public which we must not withdraw prematurely, and they assist us in meeting international understandings and obligations.

The first area in which I believe continued authority is essential is in connection with foods still in critically short supply throughout the world. I consider that current import and export controls must be kept after March 31 to assure this country a proportionate share of the commodities in which we are deficient while carrying out our international food allocation arrangements. In a subsequent communication to the Congress I shall state whether there will be any need for continuing the Export Control Act beyond June 30, 1947, its present expiration date. We must also continue some controls on domestic use and distribution of grains and grain products, rice, sugar, and edible molasses.

Grain: World cereal supplies are still far short of essential needs. Stated world import requirements for grain total about 38,000,000 tons. Only about 24,000,000 tons will be available from all exporting countries. This deficit will become most serious in the next few months. The most careful allocation of the available supplies, including those from the United States, which is the largest exporter, will be essential to avoid extreme hardship in the war-devastated countries. The United States has, in addition, a special responsibility in Germany and Japan, where heavy imports are required to maintain food supplies at least at a level sufficient to prevent disease and unrest. If this is not done, our troops would be jeopardized and our policy of encouraging the growth of democracy in these occupied countries would be endangered.

The United States has announced an export goal of at least 10,500,000 short tons of grain and flour. To reach this target, controls may continue necessary after March 31 to insure the movement of the grain to seaboard and to insure economies in the nonfood uses of cereals in this country.

Special controls may also continue to be necessary on rice. World export supplies are even more short than other grains, and the United States has export responsibilities to areas of particular concern to us, such as Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and Cuba.

Sugar and related products: Because of our heavy dependence on imports, the world shortage of sugar and related products is of outstanding concern to the United States. Total sugar available for shipment to the United States, Canada, and all western European countries in 1947 is expected to be only about 7,500,000 tons compared with average net imports before the war of about 8,500,000, and 1946 imports of 6,750,000.

The United States will continue to receive its share of these supplies. Our share in past years has been sufficient to permit us to maintain, along with Canada and the United Kingdom, a considerably higher proportion of our prewar consumption than other importing countries. Supplies in 1947 will be larger than in 1946. Nevertheless, 1947 supplies for the United States will still be below prewar per capita supply and even further below the estimated demand.

In this situation, both our domestic and international interests require continuation of domestic and import controls over sugar and edible molasses and sirups and import controls only over other sugar-containing products and inedible molasses.

Domestically, unless current controls are continued, there would be inequitable distribution of the limited supply among various users; much sugar would be held for speculative purposes; and it is probable that sugar would go to a greater extent to industrial users, resulting in a lower proportion for household consumers than they now receive.

The cost of sugar used in the United States during 1947 will exceed $1,000,000,000. Although the extent to which prices would rise under premature decontrol is uncertain, there is grave danger that this cost might multiply several times, with serious results to consumers and sugar-using industries and eventually to sugar producers and refiners similar to those experienced after World War I.

Internationally, decontrol would make it extremely difficult for us to carry out the understanding under which the United States, since 1942, has acted as agent to buy the Cuban export supply for distribution among the importing countries in accordance with the recommendations of the International Emergency Food Council.

Fats and oils: Fats and oils are among the commodities in shortest world supply. World import demand for the current calendar year amounts to about 6,000,000 short tons, which is almost equal to prewar trade in these commodities. However, only about half of this will be available. The production of coconut and palm oils in many parts of the Far East is still far below prewar levels, and the European production of animal fats is also far below levels of prewar years. As a consequence, all importing countries are forced to consumption levels of from 75 to 90 percent of their prewar levels. Only by maintaining careful distribution between countries, therefore, will it be possible to avoid serious inequities.

This situation requires the continuaton of import and export controls to insure that we and other countries receive a proportionate share of this short world supply.

Other foods: There are other agricultural commodities over which continued import controls also appear to be necessary as a result of continuing serious world shortages. These controls are necessary to carry out international understandings. The commodities they cover are: meat and meat products, dairy products, peas and beans, canned fish and protein foods.

Imported industrial materials: At the same time there are other commodities which we import for industrial purposes over which some form of allocation control will be necessary after March 31, 1947. These are cinchona bark and cinchona alkaloids, rubber, manila (abaca) and agave fiber and cordage, tin and antimony.

Cinchona bark and alkaloids are chiefly supplied by the Netherlands East Indies. Adequate imports from this source are uncertain. The estimated civilian deficiency for the year ending July 1947 is over 3,000,000 ounces of quinine and 70,000 ounces of quinidine. So long as such a shortage continues, the most vital medical uses must be given top priority.

Natural and synthetic rubber: Natural rubber will probably continue in short supply throughout the world in 1947. At the same time, it is important to the national defense that a minimum synthetic-rubber industry be maintained in the United States pending consideration of permanent legislation by the Congress. Consequently, continued allocation control over rubber is necessary.

Manila and other hard-cordage fibers are of basic importance, because from them are made rope, binder, baler, and wrapping twines, paper, and padding. The supply in prospect from all sources for the next 12 months is no more than half our annual requirements. The termination of allocation control over manila would seriously impede agricultural and other essential production.

Tin and antimony are also basic materials which we must import. The supply of tin will not approximate demand until some time in 1948. In the case of antimony, we must wait for resumption of shipments from China, the primary prewar source. Continued allocation of tin, tin plate and other tin products, and antimony is an important positive aid to our domestic industries and in carrying out our international understandings.

DOMESTIC SHORTAGES

Housing: The allocation powers of the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act and of the Second War Powers Act were instrumental in increasing the flow of building materials to which the veterans' housing program in large measure owes its progress to date. This achievement made possible the recent reduction in the number and scope of these controls.

During the balance of 1947 I anticipate a further reduction in the use of these powers, but it will be necessary to continue some limits on construction and to continue assistance to the producers of some bottleneck materials.

I understand that voluntary arrangements are being made with a number of producers to meet the needs of the building materials industries so that the use of allocation powers can be held to a minimum. To the extent that formal action may prove necessary, the Congress has wisely provided that materials and facilities for building construction may be allocated under the Veterans Emergency Housing Act until December 31, 1947. Accordingly, title III need not be extended for the purposes of the housing program.

Freight cars: There is at the present time an extremely serious freight-car shortage. The shortage will increase as the Nation's production increases. The reported average daily freight-car shortage now amounts to approximately 22,000 cars. For a number of months car loadings have been heavier than at any period since 1930, including the war years. The American railroads have about 521,000 fewer cars now than in 1930, and about 31,100 fewer serviceable cars than they had on VJ-day. The number of freight cars being removed from service each month because of their being worn out exceeds on the average the number of new freight cars delivered to the railroads.

The load our railways must carry is growing, while the facilities for handling the load are dwindling. To cope with this problem with any measurable degree of success requires a provident use of rail transportation facilities. Allocation is therefore necessary if we are to use the railway freight cars and other equipment and facilities that we have at all efficiently in this period just ahead.

Other shortages: The only other current domestic shortages sufficiently serious to require continued allocation control beyond March 31 are streptomycin, automobiles, and tractors. Limited distribution of streptomycin for civilian use was begun in September 1946, but it is at present impossible to determine requirements or to plan production of this drug. In the case of automobiles and tractors, it may be necessary for a time to continue to carry out the purpose of the Export Control Act by limiting production in this country of automobiles and tractors designed for export.

Some critical materials and equipment freed from distribution controls will remain short after March 31. In a very few cases this will mean that essential export requirements will not be met unless priorities are used. Priorities assistance should therefore be given, where necessary, to expand the production in foreign countries of materials critically needed in the United States, and, upon certification of the Secretaries of State and Commerce, to meet international understandings and responsibilities.

Because of the distortions and uncertainties generated by war conditions, we may encounter a national emergency that we do not now foresee. The extension of title III should provide for allocation authority in a national emergency of this kind, but only if there is a declaration by the President that such a national emergency has arisen. Although I do not anticipate that such an emergency will occur, it is imperative that the Government should have the power, during the remainder of the reconversion period, to deal with major unforeseen contingencies of this character.

RECOMMENDATIONS

When first adopted, the Second War Powers Act had 14 substantive titles, of which 7 have been either enacted into permanent legislation or have been permitted to lapse. Only three of the remaining titles—I, III, and V—will be needed after March 31, 1947. Although some of the programs remaining under these titles can and will be terminated during the next few months, it would be unsafe to act on the assumption that this can be done with all of them. I, therefore, recommend that the Congress extend for 1 year, to March 31, 1948, titles I and V, and, in addition, title III for the limited purposes enumerated in this message.

The necessity for extending title III I have discussed at length. I shall briefly state the reasons for extending titles I and V.

Title I permits the United States Maritime Commission to operate certain shipping lines and the Army and the Navy to supply local transportation to personnel where public facilities are inadequate. This title will be necessary until the Maritime Commission is in a position to settle with companies whose ships they have taken over and operated.

Title V permits the operation of ships under less restrictive rules as to equipment and manning than would otherwise be the case. This title is necessary for troops stationed abroad, both for their demobilization and the transportation of supplies, and in connection with repatriation programs. Its extension is urged by the State, Treasury, War, and Commerce Departments, and by the Maritime Commission. The Navy's vessels are already covered by permanent legislation.

It is unsettling, both for business and for the general public, to be obliged to wait until the last possible moment for decision by the Congress on emergency legislation. I urge the Congress to give immediate and favorable consideration to the limited extension of the Second War Powers Act I have requested.

For ready reference, I attach hereto an appendix setting forth a summary of the titles of the Second War Powers Act, together with a brief comment on each.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a recent radio address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE STEAGALL AMENDMENT

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, one of the most—yes—one of the very most important problems to be considered at this time is the Steagall amendment. Why do I say this? First, because if the Steagall amendment is supported without reservation or evasion, the rural people of America will know that the Government keeps its promises and fulfills its legislative commitments. Second, if the legislative commitments of this Steagall amendment are followed, the economic life of our country will be kept in a healthy condition. Why do I say this? Because if the national farm income is one-seventh of the national income, and if a national income of one hundred and forty to one hundred and seventy-five billions is needed to service the public debt and carry on the necessary function of the Government, it is imperative that we have a twenty to twenty-five billion dollar national farm income. The Steagall amendment if followed will provide this national farm or comparable income. This is the first period following any war that there has not been a collapse of agricultural prices. Why? The Steagall amendment has up to this time prevented this collapse of farm prices. If the Steagall amendment is properly, legally, and sensibly administered and adhered to, its provisions will prevent millions of unemployed and will provide a demand for goods and service which will prevent any great slump in business. It is the key to the agricultural problem, unemployment problem, and to the business problem.

Every American, regardless of party, should feel this responsibility. The American free-enterprise system is on trial. American goods and American labor and agriculture are being called upon this very day to compete with the Government monopoly of England and the dictator nations of the world. These nations do not have labor loss with minimum wages and maximum hours, nor do they have agricultural support prices that legalize both jobs and a guaranty wage. Many of them believe in business that is in keeping with the dictates of the government or the dictator, and we as Americans must think, act, and legislate for the best interests of our people. This is not a Democratic nor is it a Republican problem. No Member should, and no Member would, take the position that would jeopardize our system, or throw sand into the economic gears of this free-enterprise system. Did you ever think that possibly the Moscow broadcast just before the election had other objectives than those that appeared on the surface? Did it ever occur to you that possibly Moscow felt that its way of life would have a more general approval in the United States if the more conservative elements of the American electorate were in control of our Government? Did it ever occur to you that they might feel that the same electorate did not have the ability, the vision, the broad and sincere human understanding necessary to maintain and improve the American way of life? The best way to meet this problem of communism, of course, is to prevent it. It can be prevented by supporting legislation based on the greatest good for the greatest number and legislation for the many and not for the few. That can be prevented by providing legislative set-ups whereby the average man can become a direct and part owner in America in accordance to his diligence and in accordance with his abilities.

The fact still remains that with the two hundred and sixty billion public debt the American system is on trial. It was shown to be the best system in war. It can be shown to be the best system in peace. These are serious days. With this burden of debt every effort must be exercised to keep an abundance of jobs available to American workmen, to keep business in operation, and to keep agriculture in a healthy condition. Labor, business, and agriculture are interwoven in our economic system. No position, no attitude, no single action should be taken by any individual, by any group, or by any political party that will throw any part of this machinery—yes, this interdependent machinery—out of gear. This is not the time for any visionary schemes nor for anyone or any group to be rocking the economic boat. This is the time when each and every one of us should strive for a fair and an equitable set-up that will maintain the present standard of living of our people with hopes of improved standards of living of our people in the days to come.

Regardless of the hundreds of agricultural bills that have been passed during the past 20 years, the fact still remains that the Steagall amendment, if properly adhered to, will give more benefits to a larger number of farmers than all previous legislation. So much of this previous legislation has been for the benefit of a few, but of little benefit to the many. Even the President is cognizant of this situation as shown in his Budget message. The Steagall amendment, I repeat, is the main legislative instrument to be relied upon so far as all agriculture is concerned.

Let us take a look at the situation in 1939 before the influence of the war was felt by our economic system with billions of—yes, billions of dollars poured into this scheme and under that scheme in the name of agriculture. We ended up, according to official statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture for August 1939 with the farmers receiving 5 cents plus for pork, 8 cents plus for cotton, and 54 cents plus for wheat, with an export subsidy of 25 to 30 cents per bushel at that. The agricultural program had bogged down with most farm products selling from 50 to 70 percent of parity. We also had 10,000,000 unemployed. There are 10,000,000 who did not make any gains so far as their labor was concerned.

Once more, let me repeat that the adherence to this Steagall amendment is the main ray of hope for the great bulk of people that live on our land as well as the millions through which jobs can be obtained and business activity can be maintained. If properly administered the Steagall amendment will put an end to sectional crop legislation that has been provided for certain crops. The so-called basic commodities, if you wish to dignify them all by calling them basic, like corn, cotton, wheat, peanuts, rice, tobacco, which under previous legislation, had loan provisions, with price guaranties comparable to the commodities under the Steagall amendment. Commodities under the Steagall amendment include: Hogs, eggs, chickens—certain exceptions—turkeys, milk and butterfat, dried peas, dried edible peas, beans, certain varieties of soybeans for oil, peanuts for oil, and flaxseed for oil, American, Egyptian, and sweetpotatoes. There are in addition some 140 agricultural prices supported but they are not classified as commodities under the Steagall amendment.

At this point I wish to call your attention to the fact that the Steagall amendment provides for a floor not less than 90 percent of parity. The floor price can be above this 90 percent of parity. For example, the flaxseed prices for 1947 are to be supported at $6 per bushel, although 90 percent parity would be but $3.26 per bushel as of December 15, 1946, the latest issue of agricultural prices.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Summing up the factors involved in this legislative situation in regard to the Steagall amendment we have:

First. The Steagall amendment provides for a floor price on most agricultural products of not less than 90 percent of parity for 1947 and 1948.

Second. Regardless of how carefully it is administered many millions of dollars will be required to administer the law. If only domestic products are supported it will take certain millions, but many additional millions will be needed if large imports are invited. These imports can be invited by lowering the duty still further, or by undesirable allocations of the world supply of agricultural products.

Third. If anyone anywhere wishes to repudiate the commitments of the Steagall amendment, or if he wishes to follow a policy of defeating the Steagall amendment by advocating a support price for all the agricultural products of the world with untold billions, that is his responsibility.

Fourth. Anyone familiar with the present wool situation and the fur situation can readily realize what the situation can be for other crops and commodities.

Fifth. A bipartisan support of the Steagall amendment can be expected. If too large amounts of public funds are used, which amounts will be necessary to guarantee 90 percent parity floor price for the crops and agricultural products of the world, a public and a taxpayer resistance can be expected. Note the criticism of the $90,000,000 used in the domestic potato-support program.

Sixth. With 517,000,000 pounds of domestic wool in the warehouses now, how many millions will be added if the duty is reduced by 50 percent at this time?

Seventh. Public disapproval of the support plan can be expected if too large public expenditures are made, and this disapproval can be expected to be louder the more crops and products are supported.

Eighth. To prevent a waste of funds and foods it is necessary to have (a) some control or restrictions on domestic agricultural production. (b) Some control or limitation must be exercised on imports of agricultural products to prevent excessive expenditures of public funds. If the American farmer is compelled to submit to a control program in order to carry on a sensible and appropriate means or method to effectively carry out the provisions of the Steagall amendment, do you not believe that farmers in other lands or speculators or governments should also be subjected to at least equal controls and restrictions of imports? Do you wish to find yourself in the position of supporting controls for the American farmer but opposed to the same program for food producers of other lands? This is not to be interpreted as the policy of my party. This is my own position, and I am willing to defend this position anytime and anywhere.

Ninth. A duty on wheat of 42 cents per bushel when the parity price was around $1 per bushel is one problem, and a duty on wheat of 21 cents or 10½ cents per bushel when the parity price of wheat is $1.85 is assuredly a different problem. However, so long as this administration keeps the near embargo on wheat in operation we will never, never know.

Tenth. The Steagall support price is based on a parity concept or formula. The duty is based on so many cents per pound or bushel together with the involved ad valorem which is based on the price at the point of origin.

I wish to say that during the winter of 1943 and 1944 I introduced a bill which became law which removed the duty altogether on grains coming into this country. Many millions of bushels of grain were imported as a result of that legislation. I introduced that bill so that the provisions of the Steagall amendment could be more effectively carried out. I say this for the reason that the approach I have today to this problem is as purely nonpartisan as it was at the time I introduced the legislation to which I have referred. I have presented this problem because there is no use shadow boxing; there is no use trying to work both sides of the street; and there is no use trying to deceive ourselves or trying to deceive anyone else. We are faced with the problem of setting up the machinery to make the Steagall amendment really operate. You may ask what the Steagall amendment is. That is an amendment by our former distinguished colleague from Alabama which provided, in the first Price Control Act, that the farmers of this country should be guaranteed 90 percent of parity for a 2-year period following the termination of the war. Several hours could be spent discussing the merits of that legislation. When the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which our former colleague, Mr. Steagall, was chairman, brought that bill out, it provided for a 90-percent-parity floor price and 110-percent-parity ceiling price, which was a fair arrangement. Due to certain forces that were pretty strong in Washington at that time, the complaint was made that the farmers of this country were getting 10 percent more than they deserved. I remember at that time I was sorry to have President Roosevelt make the statement when he called us back in October of 1942 that we had to do something about that or else he would. I felt at that time that the President was not listening to the right people and that we would suffer afterward as a result of that position. What has happened to prices since has surely justified that apprehension.

We just listened to a message from the President of the United States. I do not want to get into a discussion of the tariff issue. If anybody desires to spend his time going before the Committee on Reciprocity and telling how bad the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act is and then wind up by saying he believes all of this but does not want it to include anything grown in his State, he is privileged to take that position. Reciprocity has nothing to do with the Steagall amendment, in itself, except that we are liable to jeopardize the entire provisions of the Steagall amendment. In other words, the State Department may take attitudes and actions that will nullify the provisions of the Steagall amendment. If any person in the State or any Member of this House wants to take the position that we should not follow the provisions of the Steagall amendment, he surely is entitled to take that position. I am sure, however, there is no Member of this House present at this time, who was here at the time that amendment was passed and knows what was behind the Steagall amendment, who wants to be in that position. The purpose of the Steagall amendment was not to try to be particularly friendly to the farmers. The purpose of the Steagall amendment was to stimulate food and fiber production during the war. There was not a legislative act passed by this Congress that did so much to increase production as did the Steagall amendment. You ask why. The reason is they knew they could step up their production without finding themselves down in the cellar. At least they had a place to stop and rest on the first floor anyway. The producers would not lose everything they had in trying to go out and fulfill their commitments so far as the production of food was concerned. That was the real purpose of the Steagall amendment. Now, at this late hour, with all the billions of dollars that have been used to take care of all of the other commitments that have been made during the war, I think every Member of this Congress feels that our responsibility cannot be viewed lightly at this time. I say that because the time to arrange these things is before it is too late.

I would like to mention just one fact at this time. Wheat is the staff of life. At the present time we are faced with a floor price of $1.69 a bushel. That is 90 percent of parity as of today. The last time I checked the world price of wheat it was $1 a bushel. The proposed duty is 21 cents a bushel. How are we going to support wheat at $1.69 a bushel if there is a 48-cent differential between the world price plus the proposed duty, and the Steagall, 90 percent of parity, $1.69 per bushel wheat?

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], former chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in 1945, a year ago last spring, secured the information from the Department of Agriculture that showed that practically all major agricultural products will be in the same position if we make any reduction in duties at this time. I mentioned the potato program previously. In fairness to the potato program let me say this, that so far as acreage was concerned they did not have too high a goal.

The reason we had possibly too many potatoes was because we had too good a potato year. The same thing might or might not happen next year. The question as to whether the program should be operated on the basis of acreage or on the basis of bushels also enters into the picture as far as the next year is concerned. But the fact still remains that public funds up to the amount of $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 had to be used to support potato prices this year. This one crop in itself would not be so disturbing, but I should like to know what will be the opinion of the American people if it happens that instead of $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 we spend $500,000,000, or $1,000,000,000 to support agricultural prices during the next 2 years? And, incidentally, I might say that the Committee on Appropriations already has appropriated $500,000,000 for the purpose. I said appropriated, not authorized. There will be public reaction to it. I would like to have someone learned in finance tell us how we are going to take on the responsibility of supporting the agricultural prices of the whole world. I think the time has come when we must stop, look, and listen. We should not get involved in any of the arguments about any form of trade, whether it be reciprocity agreements or something else. They are all incidental, because in 1939, or before the war, reciprocity treaties might have meant one thing, but they mean something very much different today because we have on the statute books of this country the so-called Steagall amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I think he has made an excellent point.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. As the gentleman has indicated, if we continue this program of stabilizing prices and then permit foodstuffs from all the world to enter this country the question soon will be, Where are we going to get the money?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. That will be a question to answer. I might say that I think the point that has been made so many times in so many papers—and I surely have been here long enough to make it evident to everyone that I am perfectly willing for each person to have his own opinion on any subject, that I do not get into personalities, I just do not like to be deceived by anybody. When they tell me that by my position I am keeping this country from the benefits of a world agricultural market, the statement is absolutely simple and absurd.

Here is a chart. I did not prepare this chart. It was prepared by the Department of Commerce. This chart shows what chance we have of obtaining, in normal times and under normal conditions, any part of the world agricultural market. The only agricultural exports we have that amount to anything are either subsidized by export bounties or are given away. Another instance was when we had UNRRA. We voted for UNRRA because we felt it would keep human beings from starving to death. This chart in itself shows how ridiculous it is to think our agricultural exports amount to anything under normal times.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman indicates that this chart came from the Department of Commerce. Did it come from the Department of Commerce at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; the Commerce Department furnished the figures and they kindly made the chart.

Mr. STEFAN. I had a copy of the chart last year. It indicates that we are not producing enough for our own self-sufficiency. Is that correct? Is that the answer? What does the chart indicate? Does the chart show that we have enough agricultural products to export or that we can use them all here in our own country?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Of course, we have a possible surplus. We can take care of ourselves if we want to. But let me read what Mr. G. L. Shores, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, said about this in the Journal of Farm Economics, volume 26, page 404:

We—

Meaning the United States—

were consistently a net exporting Nation in these products—

Meaning food products—

during the period 1912 through 1924 and a net importer during the period 1925 through 1941.

The above comparisons point to the significant but not too widely recognized fact that the United States foreign trade in foodstuffs during the past three decades has been small relative to food production and that except for the two war periods the country—has been a net importer of foodstuffs.

Meaning the United States—

The only point I wish to make there is that we should not permit the rural people of this country to be deceived into thinking they are going to have a big market somewhere else in the world for their products when we must subsidize them or give them the agricultural products.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further to develop debate on this chart?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman has just explained the chart as it was explained by an official of the Department of Agriculture. I noticed the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is addressing the House at this time, sat very attentively when the Clerk read the message from the President of the United States a while ago which referred to the possibility of eliminating more controls. The gentleman will recall, the President said in his message that we are going to have a tremendous world shortage of grains, sugar, and many other agricultural products. The gentleman's speech today is on behalf of the Steagall bill is it not?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman feel that the time has come when we should put a floor under farm prices in the United States? Is that the gentleman's argument?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes, we already have the law. We should be announcing the floor prices. We should be looking ahead how to make the floors effective.

Mr. STEFAN. I agree with the gentleman that there should be a floor under agricultural prices. Let me ask the gentleman one more question. The gentleman also realizes that the production of food in the United States on the part of American farmers for consumption all over the world should be an argument for considerable protection for the American producer. The American producer produced a miracle in the way of production during the war and is also doing the same at this time. Much of the land has been depleted; that is, the fertility of the land has been depleted. I am happy that the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture is now acting as Speaker pro tempore of the House today. I call attention of both the Speaker pro tempore and the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is now addressing the House, that there is a great need for fertilizer in our country. Defense plants no longer needed for the production of war material in my State are now being used for the manufacture of fertilizer, all of which is being exported to Japan and Germany. This fertilizer is being manufactured at the very doors of the farms where it is badly needed to produce food which the world is clamoring for. Will the gentleman enlighten us as to that?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. We had that before the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. STEFAN. What are you doing about it?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I may say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Illinois, the Honorable ANTON JOHNSON, was chairman of the fertilizer subcommittee and the report of his committee should be released in a very few days.

Mr. STEFAN. Does that mean that my farmers are going to get some fertilizer so that they can produce this food that the world is clamoring for?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The report will show what the fertilizer situation really is, and what can be expected.

I do not know of a man in this House that does want to support the Steagall amendment, but I know that a lot of us are going to be in deep water if we support the Steagall amendment and we take too much money to support the Steagall amendment because we are going to have the public against us and we are going to have the agricultural people as a group in a very embarrassing position.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We were speaking a while ago about exporting foodstuffs and taking care of the people of foreign countries now in need of the farm products of this country. We are supporting the potato growers, and I am glad we are, but can the gentleman explain to us why we are destroying 200,000,000 bushels of potatoes now rather than shipping them to the foreign countries that need that kind of foodstuffs? Can the gentleman give us the reasons why we destroyed them rather than send them where they are so much needed? It seems to me the custom that was established here in 1932 and 1933 ought to be abolished and that we should eliminate the destruction of foodstuffs.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman's premise is not exactly in keeping with the facts, for we are not destroying 200,000,000 bushels. The chances are we will keep it within 100,000,000 bushels. As I said before, the reason we are in distress and embarrassed, so far as potatoes are concerned, is not on account of the acreage. We could be embarrassed on the other side just as well in another year with the same acreage. We happened to have a wonderful year in 1946 for producing potatoes. That is another thing we ought to realize—that we have had some wonderful years in the last 5 or 6 years in producing these foods, and that we may not always have.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says I am in error as to the number of bushels that will be destroyed. I saw a statement made the other day that 200,000,000 bushels are being destroyed. The gentleman now says 100,000,000 bushels. Why destroy even 1 bushel?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. They were not all destroyed. In many cases they were used for animal feed and for other purposes. It sounds good to have them dehydrated and it sounds good to put them in cans, but we have to have tin before we can put them in cans, and we have to have a way of dehydrating them before they can be dehydrated. Those are complications that go along with handling any program.

Mr. BULWINKLE rose.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I just wanted to bring out the fact to one gentleman from Pennsylvania, so I could help him out a little bit, that the dehydration costs so much that it is almost impossible to apply it to potatoes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. It is not only the dehydration costs but the facilities for dehydrating them so I am advised.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Would not the gentleman from Wisconsin want to add also that there have been several million bushels of potatoes shipped abroad, but they deteriorate so rapidly and the shipping facilities are so inadequate that they have not been able to ship the entire surplus, but they have shipped every potato they could get the shipping facilities to transport?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. A good example of that is this story about the boxcars here today. I presume they could not get them for potatoes any more than they could for all these other commodities they wanted to ship. I did not want to condemn or defend the present set-up as regards potatoes because I have not made it part of my business to investigate. I am willing to listen to both sides of it. But I should like to say that I do not care who the man is that is administering the Steagall amendment, these potatoes are the first indication of the headaches he is going to have.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, because I am a little afraid of him.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman does not need to be afraid of me because I have the highest respect for him not only personally but because of his great knowledge with respect to agricultural matters. He knows I have been coming to him for years for advice. Now I am going to ask him whether or not he has discussed what chance we have of making alcohol out of potatoes. Has that already been discussed today? If it has, I do not want to take the time to discuss it now.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I do not want it answered. I want to talk about the Steagall amendment and the machinery we have to have to put the Steagall amendment in operation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I believe the observation that I want to make is directly concerned with the Steagall amendment. During October or November of last year our food-study committee was called up into New Jersey, which is a great potato-producing section. We went to Monmouth County, N. J., where they had hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes piled up. I stood on one of those great piles of potatoes which they said would fill 60 boxcars. I could see many such piles of potatoes all around us. The Government agreed to pay those farmers $1.80 a hundred for the potatoes. They were aroused because the Government did not give the money to them. We went up and saw those potatoes and came down and reported it. The Government responded pretty quickly and went up there and got the potatoes. Here is what the Government did with the potatoes: The Government paid the farmers $1.80 a hundred for them, then moved them down to Philadelphia to the distilleries to make alcohol. The Government paid them 15 cents extra. In other words, they did not get enough out of the potatoes to pay for the freight by about 15 cents a hundred. That was a very expensive experiment under the Steagall amendment or some other amendment, which proves exactly what the gentleman is saying—that that is a proposition which needs attention right now.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPE). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the January 1947 issue of The Staple Cotton Review by my esteemed friend, Hon. A. H. Stone, chairman of the Mississippi Tax Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'KONSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article, Defeat in Victory, by Felix Morley.

Mr. STEVENSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the La Crosse Tribune of La Crosse, Wis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPE). Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE KNUTSON THEORY OF TAX REDUCTION AGAINST THE ENGEL THEORY OF TAX REDUCTION

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I want the membership of the House to strictly understand that in my remarks today I am not attacking the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. I have a great respect and admiration for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], who has done a monumental job as a one-man committee uncovering waste and extravagance in the military affairs of this Government. He is entitled to the thanks of all the American people. But when the gentleman from Michigan enters the forest of taxation, and I call it a forest advisedly, he runs the risk of not only becoming lost and confused but not knowing which direction he is heading. Because of the fact, I am attacking the theory of taxation contained in H. R. 62 introduced by the gentleman from Michigan. I am challenging and want to answer the arguments that he has presented in support of that theory of taxation. It is for that reason I am taking the floor today. I want you to know also at the outset that I have asked for 30 minutes and I expect in my prepared statement to take only about 8 minutes. But I do want to provoke discussions on the theory of taxation as advocated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and the theory of taxation as advocated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. I shall not yield until I am through with my prepared statement and then let come what may.

Mr. Speaker, the three successive Democratic tax bills of 1940, 1941, 1942, added to Uncle Sam's tax list the names of some 45,000,000 American citizens that had never before paid a direct Federal income tax. This was done by lowering the tax exemptions and by imposing the special victory tax. These 45,000,000 new names added to the 5,000,000 taxpayers who had been carrying the load made a tax list of 50,000,000 names. When this was done and pay-roll deductions were put into effect as the easiest method of making collections, these new taxpayers—all American voters—became tax conscious almost overnight. Then these 45,000,000 voters began to howl because they were being assessed to help pay for the Federal squandering that had been going on for a decade, squandering which they had either heretofore approved or had ignored. They now for the first time became interested in such subjects as Government spending, a balanced budget, a reduction in tax rates, and kindred subjects. It is my considered opinion that these millions of voters who had suddenly become tax conscious constituted the balance of power in the election last November. Their votes were cast against deficit spending and for tax reduction, the most important issues of the campaign.

Mr. Speaker, we have had more than a decade of New Deal spending. Every person in America today below 30 years of age has been exposed to, and most of them have become saturated with the something for nothing New Deal philosophy. The average person in America today has a hazy notion that what Uncle Sam spends does not come out of the average person's pocket but comes mostly out of the pockets of the fellows in the upper brackets, so why should he—the average person—worry if Uncle Sam does spend more than he should. This mistaken idea on the part of the majority of American citizens is the real reason that the New Deal's strategy of "tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect" lasted for a decade.

Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-ninth Congress in its last revision of the Federal income-tax law removed from the tax rolls between ten and twelve million low-income taxpayers. This was approximately 25 percent of our total Federal income-tax payers. That is water over the dam. It is an accomplished fact. I opposed the removal of those taxpayers' names from Uncle Sam's tax list; and today I am opposing the removal of any more names from that list. I am convinced that we must make the American people tax conscious if we ever expect to get public approval for the reduction of Federal spending.

Mr. Speaker, the question this Congress faces today is whether we want to remove from the tax rolls 20,000,000 additional taxpayers who are becoming tax conscious and permit them to go back to sleep on tax matters and public spending; or whether we want to retain these 20,000,000 people on the tax rolls and give tax relief to all taxpayers in proportion to the amount they pay in taxes. Let us, therefore, in the face of this question analyze the Engel bill, H. R. 62, and the Knutson bill, H. R. 1, to see how they compare as to soundness, as to justice, and as to the effect each would have upon the general welfare of the Nation.

If we do as the Engel bill proposes—raise the exemptions of a single man from $500 to $1,000 and the head of a family from $1,000 to $2,000, leaving the exemptions for dependents at $500 each as they now are, we would remove from the Federal tax rolls from eighteen to twenty million people and we would lose in Treasury receipts approximately $5,000,000,000. Do we want to do that?

If we do as the Knutson bill proposes, give a flat 20 percent reduction to all taxpayers who have incomes of $300,000 or less, and a 10.5 percent reduction to all taxpayers with incomes above that amount, we would retain on the Federal tax rolls every name now on the list, and would provide a rebate of $3,500,000,000 to American taxpayers, such rebate to be distributed in proportion to the amount of taxes each pays.

The gentleman from Michigan says the Knutson bill is not fair to the low-income taxpayers. To illustrate the unfairness of the Knutson bill he takes for his example a person earning $11 to $12 per week and says that person now pays 10 cents per week tax or $5.20 in taxes per year, and that under the Knutson bill that person would receive a rebate of only 2 cents per week or $1.04 per year.

The gentleman from Michigan then goes on to say:

> Taking money we call taxes from the low-income groups which should be spent for bread, butter, milk, and food to fill the stomachs of hungry children will not avert inflation. Such a policy can only bring about suffering, crime, immorality, and poor citizenship. No policy of making everyone pay a tax to make people tax conscious can be justified when the tax dollar collected forces the living standards of the taxpayers below a decent level.

Now, of course, these are touching words. They are heart-stirring words. They present the usual exaggerated picture of oppression. But the trouble is the picture is extremely farfetched. In the first place, for practical purposes there is no person working today who earns only $11 to $12 per week. We do have a minimum wage law. In the second place, if there were such a worker and he had hungry children who needed their stomachs filled, he would pay no tax under our present exemptions of $500 for each child. A man today who has two children would have to earn more than $2,000 a year before he would have to pay any taxes under present tax laws. So, the touching picture of tax oppression painted by the gentleman from Michigan loses its force, if it ever had any force. It falls by the weight of its very absurdity. However, I believe we should be interested, deeply interested, in the reasoning of the gentleman from Michigan even if we are not interested in his illustration.

If it is inequitable and unjust to do as the Knutson bill proposes—give tax relief in proportion to the amount paid by the taxpayer—as the gentleman from Michigan contends, then what would he say concerning the following hypothetical parallel case?

We will suppose that the real-estate tax on farm lands in a certain rich agricultural county amounts to $2 per acre.

John Jones owns 10,000 acres and pays a tax of $20,000.

John Smith owns 160 acres and pays a tax of $320.

John Doe owns 10 acres and pays a tax of $20.

A reduction of 20 percent in the real-estate tax in that county is proposed and becomes a reality.

John Jones saves 20 percent of $20,000, on $4,000 on his tax bill.

John Smith saves 20 percent of $320, or $64 on his tax bill.

John Doe saves 20 percent of $20, or $4 on his tax bill.

According to the theory behind the Knutson bill this real-estate tax-reduction program is fair, is just, and is equitable because each taxpayer gets a reduction on his tax bill in proportion to the amount he pays in taxes. According to the theory behind the Engel bill, this real-estate tax-reduction program is not fair; it is not just, it is not equitable because it gives John Jones a tax reduction of $4,000 and gives John Doe a tax reduction of only $4. Under the theory contained in the Engel bill, both John Smith and John Doe would be removed from the tax rolls; they would not be required to pay any taxes on the small amount of acreage they possess; and John Jones and his kind would carry the full tax load.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle: Which theory is right? Which is fair? Which is just? Which is equitable? And you must answer my questions because you will be called upon to support with your votes either the Engel theory of tax reduction or the Knutson theory of tax reduction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to intelligently act upon a tax-reduction program we should have before us the essential facts that bear upon the problem of tax reduction, facts that throw light upon the number of people in the different tax brackets.

Treasury experts tell us that if we increase exemptions from $500 per person to $600 person, it will take 3,000,000 people off the tax rolls and will mean a reduction in Treasury receipts of $1,500,000,000. If we increase income-tax exemptions from $500 to $700 per person it will take 10,000,000 people off the tax rolls and will mean a reduction in Treasury receipts of $3,000,000,000. This would practically use up the $3,500,000,000 tax rebate covered in the Knutson bill. Do we want to do that?

The following facts also bear directly upon the problem of tax reduction and should be kept in mind when considering the same:

(a) Sixty-seven percent of all Federal income taxpayers receive $2,500 per year or less. This group pays $4,500,000,000 in Federal taxes each year, and therefore would receive under the Knutson bill a rebate of $900,000,000.

(b) Twenty-eight percent of all Federal income taxpayers receive between $2,500 and $5,000 per year; pay $5,200,000,000 in Federal taxes, and would receive $1,040,000,000 rebate under the Knutson bill. The Federal Treasury books show that about half of the total Federal income-tax receipts come from these two groups, namely taxpayers who receive $5,000 per year or below. We must keep these taxpayers on the tax rolls if we expect to balance the budget.

(c) Under present Federal tax rates and exemptions:

A $1,500-a-year man, with family of two children, pays no Federal income tax.

A $2,500-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $95 Federal income tax.

A $3,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $190 Federal income tax.

A $5,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $589 Federal income tax.

A $10,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $1,862 Federal income tax.

A $50,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $24,111 Federal income tax.

A $500,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $406,600 Federal income tax.

A $1,000,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $838,850 Federal income tax.

And on top of these Federal taxes the taxpayer must pay State income taxes in most States, which further greatly reduces the amount he has left after Uncle Sam gets his.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat and to emphasize the question this House has to decide in connection with income-tax reduction. Do we want to remove from the Federal tax rolls 20,000,000 people who are now paying Federal income taxes, who are now becoming tax conscious for the first time in their lives, and by so doing free them from paying some $5,000,000,000 into the Federal Treasury, as the Engel bill proposes? Or do we want to retain on the Federal tax rolls every taxpayer now on the rolls, lighten his tax load in proportion to the amount he pays in taxes, and give a rebate of $3,500,000,000 to the American taxpayers, such rebate to be given in proportion to their tax bills as the Knutson bill proposes?

Which program of tax reduction, in your opinion, is fair? Which is just? Which is equitable?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to say that the gentleman from Illinois has made a very enlightening speech. I wish that every Member of this House and every Member of the Senate of the United States could have heard it. I hope that those who have not heard it will take the trouble to read it. May I suggest to the gentleman that I think he has made his case very clear, but I think he can still, if he will do so, further enlighten the House by discussing the technical and the over-all differences between the Knutson bill and the Engel bill.

Mr. MASON. In answer to that I wish to say this, that I have analyzed the two bills and have pointed out the difference in a practical manner. But the theory behind the two bills is the important thing. That is the thing that ought to be discussed and considered, and there is a difference in those theories.

We have two general tax theories in the world today, and only two, I might say. One theory is that a person should pay to support the Government on the basis of the benefits received from the Government. That was the theory that prevailed all through the Middle Ages. That was the theory that said that if I have 10 children going to school and you have 1, I should pay 10 times as much as you. Of course, in those days there were private schools; we did not have public education then. When democracy came into the world they drafted a new theory of taxation, and that is the theory that each person should contribute to the support of the Government on the basis of his ability to pay.

Underlying our real-estate taxes today is the theory of benefits received. That is the theory underlying it. If I have three lots in town and you have one, and I have more benefits of water, light, and paving and all the rest of the improvements on my property, then I pay three times as much as you, and it works mighty well on real-estate property. Now, our whole graduated-income tax is based on the theory of ability to pay. The more ability a man has the more he should pay, and that, too, is a mighty fine theory and that, too, is a good theory as applied to income. But any good, well-balanced tax system is like a good, well-balanced meal.

It has to have a mingling of the different kinds. So we have got to have that mingling of theories, and we have to apply them where they apply the easiest. The minute you do as the Engel bill suggests, remove from the tax rolls eighteen to twenty million people who are now paying $5 a year, as he says, or $10 a year or $40 a year or $100 a year, you are destroying the theory that is behind that tax, and I am opposed to it. I say it should not be done, and I say this House has to consider that very seriously when we propose these tax reductions.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman made a statement there with respect to the procedure that might be followed in submitting this very important question to the Congress. He said that the House Members will be called upon to vote upon either one bill or the other. Has the gentleman had any conferences with those in control?

Mr. MASON. No; I have not had any conferences. I did not say we would be called upon to vote on either one bill or the other. I said we would be called upon to vote on the theory in the one bill or the other.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman have any idea as to whether the Committee on Rules will give the House an opportunity to vote on either of those theories, or whether the Committee on Rules might not send out one bill or one theory and say, "Vote that up or down." That is what has happened in the past with respect to tax bills.

Mr. MASON. I refuse to answer for the Committee on Rules. I am not on it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I just wondered if the gentleman knew.

Mr. MASON. I do not.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Of course we on this side are quite pained at the unity on the Republican side on tax theory. May I project this theory which the gentleman relates as exemplified in his real-estate tax, and inquire into his theory? In the example which he cited the tax rate was the same on all three individuals.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman says that is a good theory. That is the theory embodied in the Knutson bill. Then it would follow, would it not, that the gentleman would reduce the income tax to a point of having the identical rate apply to everyone, which would recognize in no way the ability to pay.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman is mistaken. He does not interpret my statement correctly. The theory in the income tax is ability to pay, and that is just the opposite of the theory that applies in the real-estate tax in the illustration I used. The Knutson bill does not have that theory in it.

Mr. GORE. Did I not correctly understand the gentleman to give as an illustration of the differences in the theories, as he pleases to call the differences in these two bills, the real-estate tax?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. GORE. He went further to say that this was the theory of the Knutson bill and that each man would pay the same rate.

Mr. MASON. No; that each man would have a reduction in proportion to the amount of his tax bill.

Mr. GORE. Then the gentleman's example does not apply at all. The gentleman has used an entirely wrong example, because the real-estate tax in the gentleman's county and in mine is levied in identically the same way—the same tax rate applies to everyone.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. GORE. Does the Knutson bill do that?

Mr. MASON. The Knutson bill as it was originally drafted and as I approved it, and still approve it, was a flat reduction on all income-tax payers, the same reduction.

Mr. GORE. Then the gentleman's heart does not bleed for these few with incomes over $300,000?

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. What the gentleman advocates is that the man who pays $1 of income tax gets 20 cents reduction.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. The man who pays $100 under the Knutson plan would get $20 reduction.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the man who pays $100,000 in income tax gets a rebate of $20,000.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the man who pays a million dollars in income taxes gets a tax cut of $200,000.

Mr. MASON. That is exactly right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the gentleman reasons that 20 cents tax cut to the poor devil who pays $1, and that is all he can pay, is all right and that is just, equitable, and right?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. DINGELL. You think that is just right when it is compared with the man who gets $200,000 cut on $1,000,000?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; of course.

Mr. MASON. And that is the whole theory of it.

Mr. DINGELL. If you advocate that in your district in the next election, you will stay at home. The gentleman does not know as much about taxes as he knows about the man in the moon.

Mr. MASON. I would not lose much sleep about that.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman has not been on the committee long enough to know what it is all about.

Mr. OWENS. I had intended to ask this question when the gentleman mentioned the situation about the real-estate taxes. Is it not a fact that when a man is paying a real-estate tax he is paying on his capital and he may not have the power to pay without his capital being taken away from him? In other words, If he does not have the wherewithal to pay the tax he may have his real estate taken away from him. But where a man is paying an income tax, he is paying on money that he is receiving whether the money is large or small in amount. He is receiving money and he can pay the income tax out of that money. Is there any reason why one who is paying $500, for instance, as compared to one who is paying $100, should not receive a $100 reduction while the other is receiving a $20 reduction? What is unfair or inequitable about that? It would be unfair or inequitable to take a man's real estate from him when he does not have the ability to pay.

Mr. MASON. Of course, that is the thread of my whole argument. It is fair and just and right to reduce your income-tax bills and your real-estate-tax bills on the basis of the amount that you are required to pay in taxes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I congratulate the gentleman on his fine and logical presentation of the tax picture and to the contrasts he has drawn between the two bills. Of course, there is a side to this that has not been developed at all. The gentleman from Michigan, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the very distinguished gentleman from Detroit, referred to the fact that if you advocated this theory you may stay at home. He has been advocating other theories in the 17 bills that he has voted for and he almost stayed at home this time.

Mr. DINGELL. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] that while he is here two of his Detroit colleagues, very able gentlemen, and one from the Northern Peninsula, are not here. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] also said that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] followed through on his theory he would not be here. I heard the gentleman's answer that he would not lose any sleep over that and we all know that none of the rest of us will lose any sleep if we stay home because we support and adhere to a just principle. I would like to add further that if the gentleman from Michigan follows through on his theory of advocating special privileges for this, that, and the other one, and especially to the low-income group——

Mr. DINGELL. Who is advocating special privileges?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the gentleman from Michigan follows through on his theory of advocating special privileges to this, that, and the other group as he has in the past, and especially to the members of the low-income groups—and, of course, there are more people and more voters in those groups than in any other group—he may remain here by purchasing votes through advocating those special privileges in return for their votes. That has been the policy of the New Deal all along with labor and with every minority and racial group, and you have bought and bought and bought, and taxed and taxed, and finally the New Deal at several elections succeeded in buying a majority of the votes. The national debt piled up until now we are at our wit's end to find money to service it—the country is in a mess. The New Dealers were voted out and Republicans have the job of cleaning house, devising ways and means of reestablishing a sound, safe economic policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous orders of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE GROWING COPPER SHORTAGE AND WHAT IT MEANS IN MY DISTRICT

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, when I was back home in Naugatuck and Waterbury, Conn., a week ago I talked with scores of my constituents. I found that the problems confronting the people who honored me by sending me to Congress are not unlike those I hear my colleagues discussing every day. Some veteran wants help on his case, and I am glad to talk with him and to be of assistance to him. Someone has a matter pending before a Government department, but has had no report as to what is happening. Some want more immigration, yet others want visas to leave the country, and so it goes.

But, Mr. Speaker, I ran into one problem so serious that the whole Congress must do something about it. One of my constituents has a lot to do with the purchasing of supplies for one of the big brass mills in Waterbury. He told me that commencing in the second quarter of this year it will become almost impossible to buy supplies of copper. I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing more important to continued employment in the Fifth Connecticut District than adequate supplies of copper, for it is absolutely essential to the brass industry and to the dozens of industries which manufacture brass parts, valves and plumbing supplies, to mention only a few of the items produced in my district. These industries employ thousands upon thousands of people. Their wages are the only source of their livelihood. Their purchasing power enters the stream of commerce in the payment of rents, or doctor bills, in the purchase of milk produced on our nearby farms, in the purchase of food supplies and all of the other things required in this highly complex age.

Mr. Speaker, you can imagine my concern for the welfare of the thousands of workers in my district when I heard about this threatened copper shortage. Before I left Waterbury I immediately set about getting together as many of the facts as possible, and since my return to Washington I have pursued the subject more thoroughly. Presently I will introduce a bill, designed to deal with the situation, but before doing so, I want to tell you a little bit more about the problem. During the war it became evident that there was, with the possible exception of petroleum, no more vital and essential commodity than copper. This noncorrosive metal went into shells and cartridges. It went into every plane, every automobile, every ship. Without copper, we could not have won the war. The Government called upon every possible source of domestic production to increase its output. Abandoned mines were pumped out; subsidies were paid to high-cost producers. All supplies and all uses of copper came under Government control. The two-price purchasing plan saved the American people billions of dollars, for there was one price for the low-cost producers and another price, not including subsidies, for the high-cost producers. This device, however, although it produced the maximum possible output within the United States, also stimulated depletion of our reserves and of our copper resources. Besides, before we actually entered the war, we exported tens of thousands of tons of our copper to other nations. Notwithstanding, we could not possibly produce all the copper we required.

So, the Government imported copper from other producing centers. Under one Executive order, copper came in duty-free. In addition, the Metals Reserve Company actually paid a duty of $80 per ton on imported copper and made it available to American consumers. Thus, we were able to get through imports added to our domestic production, an amount sufficient for our wartime needs.

All that has now changed. The only copper coming into the United States now is copper which was purchased by the Metals Reserve Company under contracts entered into before November 10, 1946. The supply of such copper will presently cease. Besides, the Government has drawn upon our stock pile of copper and has permitted its sale to the industry, but before the end of March that stock pile will have completely disappeared.

I do not suppose it is possible for anyone to tell exactly how much copper will be required over the next 3 years. I do not suppose it is possible for anyone to tell exactly how much domestic copper will be produced in the same period. It has reasonably been estimated, however, that our requirements will run around 1,400,000 tons per year, while our production is estimated at about 900,000 tons per year. Obviously, we will be short 500,000 tons per year, and that deficit can only be made up by imports.

Mr. Speaker, you may say, "All right, go ahead and import 500,000 tons of copper per year." Right there is where the Congress becomes concerned. It is a little-known fact that there is an excise tax of 4 cents per pound on imported copper. Four cents per pound per ton produces a levy of $80 per ton, in addition to the cost of the copper. Obviously, an increase in the cost of a vital raw material like copper at the rate of $80 per ton will inevitably be reflected in an increase in prices of all items using the copper. Such an additional inflationary factor at this time can have a most serious impact, for it will run into every home in the United States. A manufacturer, for example, cannot say that this item was made from domestic copper and will bear one price, and then sell the same item at a higher price on the ground that it is made from imported copper. No, Mr. Speaker, the price increase will run to all items.

Moreover, the really big operator will be able to go into the world market and buy copper while the small operator will not be able to get it at all. Resistance to higher prices will also drive many users to seek lower-cost substitutes which, in the long run, might run to a considerable percentage of our ordinary domestic use and thus a partial market, at least, would be lost to our domestic producers.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Suppose we remove the 4-cents-a-pound tariff on imported copper and decrease production in our own country. The gentleman says our production is 900,000 tons. Suppose further we lose another 200,000 tons of production because of foreign imports. This will mean that certain of the copper miners will lose their jobs, because the mine operators cannot continue to pay their wages. Other wages in the industry will be reduced. What is going to happen to the gentleman's industry if they cannot sell their manufactured products to the people of this country?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have taken that into consideration in the rest of my address.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. BELL. Can the gentleman enlighten the House as to the foreign countries from which the copper comes?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; Chile. I would say South America is about the only place where we can get it, for the reason that production in the Belgian Congo and Rhodesia have been tied up by the European countries. There is demand for copper not only in the United States but all over the world. It is quite possible that no one else looks at it the way I do, but one of our first lines of defense is metal and the most important metal in an emergency is copper.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I agree with the gentleman in the first part of his statement as to the importance of copper in both our domestic and wartime needs. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania particularly that we ought not to wreck the industry in this country by cutting down domestic production. That would not be in the interest of national defense.

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman says we are going to wreck a big industry in this country. I say that if we do not get the copper now we will not only wreck one industry but many. For instance, at the present time three companies control 80 percent of the copper here in America. Is that right?

Mr. MURDOCK. I cannot believe that the 4 cents-a-pound duty is keeping out foreign copper or blocking industry. If 12 pounds of copper are used on an average to build a car, I cannot believe the additional cost of 48 cents will check the building of cars.

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman is evading my question. I asked him if it is not a fact that three big corporations today control 80 percent of our copper. The gentleman, among others, advocates that we do something for the GI's. Does the gentleman realize that when you enter the door of a house and turn on the electric light that the electricity which lights that light flows over copper wires and through copper switches?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am from a copper-producing State. I do not want to see the copper mines in this country hurt, as they surely would be if the duty on foreign copper is removed or reduced. I want to help GI's, including GI's in copper camps.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not criticizing the gentleman's position, but I would like for someone to show me where copper production today is sufficient to make this other step unnecessary. I may say in this connection that I am only taking into consideration one part of the code, section 3425, which goes on to list other articles which are not affected by my bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. We put a maximum 5-cent subsidy on copper during the war and greatly increased production. That shows we can produce it if we get the right price and pay proper wages.

Mr. PATTERSON. Why are they not producing it now?

Mr. MURDOCK. The present shortage is only temporary. I thought the gentleman was going to advocate a plan to increase home production of copper when he started out. I cannot feel that a rate of 4 cents a pound on foreign copper is too high a duty.

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman will probably have a chance to vote on that.

If copper cannot be obtained, unemployment will follow, not only in Waterbury, Conn., but in every industrial center, large and small, throughout the United States. For example, for the lack of 20,000 tons of copper, your manufacturer will not produce 1,000,000 automobiles. Differing only in degree, the lack of copper will create a bottleneck in the production of refrigerators, of electric motors, of cable, of wire, of plumbing supplies, and literally of thousands of articles. We need copper for our GI housing program. You can't even enter your own house to turn on an electric light switch without realizing the importance of copper. Again, in the national-defense field, copper will be an absolute prerequisite to any preparedness program for the defense of our Nation, just as it has been in the last war. We need to import copper to assure ourselves of an adequate supply for our own protection.

The Congress, if it chooses to do so, can sit idly by and do nothing to protect American workers, American business, the American economy as a whole, against this serious threat. On the other hand, the Congress can take affirmative action and insure the success of our reconversion program. For example, it can repeal the excise tax of $80 per ton and allow copper to be brought into the United States, at least until such time as domestic consumption levels off in reasonable ratio to American production. It has seemed to me that such a step is the most desirable, particularly because three large American producers produce approximately 80 percent of our American copper output and use most of it themselves. The inevitable result is that all the rest of American industry is bound to bid for the remaining 20 percent of American production. The possibilities of price rigging inherent in such a situation are obvious. As a matter of fact, it may be pertinent to observe that during the war the price of domestic copper was 12 cents a pound. Early in November it went to 14⅜ cents a pound. On November 12 it went to 17½ cents a pound. I notice in the New York Times for January 29 an article which says that the domestic price is now 20½ cents a pound, "the highest price commanded by the red metal since 1929." The New York Times' article also says that "increased prices for raw copper must be passed along by boosting the prices of copper products." The bill which I have prepared is designed to remove the excise tax on imported copper, but my proposed amendment to existing law as set forth in section 3425 of the Internal Revenue Code does not affect any other of the items treated in that section.

I intend to ask that my bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. That extremely able committee can then hold hearings and make inquiry into the whole situation. Perhaps it will seem to the committee that an outright repeal is not the answer. Perhaps it will seem that for a period of some 3 or 4 years, the first 400,000 tons of imports in any 1 year can be brought in for consumption, duty free, with the tax to be attached, however, to all imports above that quota. Such a device can easily be administered by our customs authorities. In fact, they are doing this kind of thing every day. Perhaps it will seem to the committee that the application of section 3425 should be suspended for a period, say of 3 years, until the necessary postwar adjustments of consumption and supply can be met. I am not wedded necessarily to any one of these formulas, but it would seem that removal of the $80 per ton barrier will most quickly get us the copper we need.

But this much is certain, Mr. Speaker. We must act, and we must act fast. Both consumers and producers are in complete agreement on this score. Only a few days ago I was reading a brief which was filed before the Committee for Reciprocity Information in behalf of some 16 domestic producers including the Phelps Dodge Corp., which is one of the largest in the United States. These producer companies in their brief announced themselves in favor of taking measures to meet the problem. They said that they felt such measures must be designed to prevent the entry of more foreign copper than is needed to meet the temporary excess of demand. They must assure the domestic producer that he will have his full protection and can proceed in safety to make the most efficient use of his ore resources. They must provide that the quantity of foreign copper admitted shall supplement domestic production and not replace it.

I mention this point only as additional evidence that something must be done.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to insure the continued employment of tens of thousands of workers in our manufacturing industries, we must have copper. To protect more than 3,300 wholesale dealers in electrical supplies, we must have copper. To preserve the business of more than 160,000 electrical appliance dealers, we must have copper. Already production of fractional-horsepower motors is slackening because of inadequate supplies of copper, and there are more than 1,200 different kinds of machines using fractional-horsepower motors. This will give you some idea of the scope of this problem. It is estimated that our returning GI's who have entered the electrical business are now failing at the rate of 5 percent per month for lack of materials to sell which employ copper.

Necessarily, under the rules of the House, my time today has been limited. I have said enough, however, to give my colleagues some insight into this most serious threat to the American economy due to our lack of copper. It will be my purpose to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means and make further presentation of my views on this subject. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I am offering a bill designed to bring the problem formally before a great committee of this body, and I ask unanimous consent that the language of my bill may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

A bill to maintain continued employment, to provide adequate supplies of copper to assist American industry in the reconversion period, to protect the American people against a new inflationary threat, and to assist in promoting stabilization in the American economy

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3425, title 26 of the United States Code (act of June 6, 1932, ch. 209, sec. 601 (c) (7), 47 Stat. 260) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3425. Articles provided for in paragraphs 316, 380, 381, 387, 1620, 1634, or 1659 of the Tariff Act of 1930, 4 cents per pound on the copper contained therein. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this section, in which copper (including copper in alloys) is the component material of chief value, 3 cents per pound. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this section, containing 4 percent or more of copper by weight, 3 percent ad valorem or three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, whichever is the lower. The tax on the articles described in this section shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this section (53 Stat. 415)."

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of other special orders today I may be given permission to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Des Moines Register of Saturday, January 25, 1947.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I preface my remarks here today by saying that I am in favor of labor legislation generally and at the same time I want to do what I can to aid and assist management in getting a 50–50 break in freedom of laws. I am also most vitally interested in the welfare of the general public, so laws must be just to all. That is my duty to this country, as I see it, if we are to preserve the Constitution of the United States and keep our country of liberty-loving people free as we have known it in past years. My feelings are the same as those expressed in a letter dated January 31, which I have received, and in which are suggested the changes that are necessary in our labor laws if we are to have a contented, happy people in this country. The letter is as follows:

CAMP HILL, PA.,
January 31, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Knowing your personal interest in the affairs of industry, with your intimate knowledge of the problems facing it which I think will be making a most helpful contribution to the solving of the problem of labor relations, I am writing you with reference to my company's ideas with which I heartily agree. My company thinks that now is the time for Congress to treat the cause and not the disease of our labor troubles. During the past few years we have seen labor groups and their leaders stifle our existence. Let us see how it happened. How did John L. Lewis gain the power he has? How has one man achieved more power than our Government? Have we by law vested power in labor leaders to strangle the Nation?

With the trend through the years of Federal legislation building up the power of organized labor, the unions have been able to strangle the Nation and substitute coercion for bargaining. Therefore, just as business trusts were broken up, labor monopolies must be broken up. Congress should make industry-wide contracts illegal, and limit labor contracts to each separate company.

Just as employers by law are required to bargain collectively, and when agreements are made, to execute contracts, the labor unions in turn should be made responsible for carrying out these contracts in good faith. Therefore, the Wagner labor law should either be repealed or it should be so modified that it will be fair to both employer and employee—and closed-shop labor contracts which establish a monopoly of labor and take away the worker's right to choose a job should be prohibited by law.

For many years State and Federal Governments have implemented by law the principle that investors in public utilities must give up certain rights of control, to limit the return on their investment, to determine when and under what conditions public service shall be rendered or discontinued. But how long could a public utility maintain its position if the management should demand an increase in rate and announce to the governing authority that unless the increased rate was approved by a certain date it would discontinue service? Yet Congress and State legislatures have not recognized the public obligation of employees who are employed by public utilities. When a man accepts a job with a public utility he does it as willingly as the man who invests his money in that same utility. They both have a public obligation.

We do not need punitive or vindictive legislation. We need a few simple laws which will make all of our citizens, including labor unions and their members, responsible to the law of the land.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE I. METZE.

Mr. Speaker, on January 8, at page 188 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I made a speech on this topic and I received numerous letters, some approving and some disapproving my remarks relative to the responsibility of unions as well as of business enterprises. I insert at this point in the RECORD three letters from labor unions in my district in reference to the matter:

LOCAL 12313, U. M. W. OF A.,
DISTRICT 50, NEW YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA COUNTY WORKERS,
Lock Haven, Pa., January 14, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
Member of United States Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please be informed that this local union composed of approximately 624 members, and all residing in Clinton County, disagree with views as expressed by a certain constituent and published by you in the Lock Haven Express on January 13, 1947, as a speech which you made in Congress on January 8, 1947.

We further advise you that we are earnestly opposed to any legislation to revoke or modify the union shop, the Wagner Labor Act, or any other legislation which is now on the statute books of the United States of America.

We also request you to use your influence to have this letter published in the Lock Haven Express, since all of the 624 members of this union are also your constituents. This action was taken by unanimous vote of this local union, meeting in regular session and well attended, at Union Hall, 209 East Main Street, Lock Haven, Pa., January 14, 1947.

Trusting you comply with our wishes. We remain,

Very truly yours,

DONALD A. GRIEB,
President.

CHARLES C. EICHENLAUB,
Recording Secretary, Local Union 12313, District 50, United Mine Workers of America.

DYE AND CHEMICAL WORKERS
LOCAL UNION 13059,
DISTRICT 50,
UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Lock Haven, Pa., January 28, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RICH: Pursuant to action taken by the Dye and Chemical Workers Local Union 13059, District 50, United Mine Workers of America, at the meeting held in the union hall, at 209 East Main Street, Lock Haven, Pa., January 22, 1947.

In view of the stringent labor bills being introduced that are designed to be very harmful to labor and the gains made over a long period of years, it is the desire of this local union membership, that you, our respected and honorable Congressman, take a firm stand against any and all such bills presented.

There appeared in the Lock Haven Express, Monday, January 13, 1947, a letter from one of your constituents with a 10-point program for you to vote for.

This letter represents at least 140 of your constituents requesting you to vote against such points, and it may also be published in the Lock Haven Express.

It is also the desire of these constituents that you keep an eye on appropriation bills for flood control and use your influence in the interests of flood control for this area, where losses due to floods have been very high.

Hoping that you will support and use your influence in these matters, I remain,

Respectfully,

M. C. ORNDORF,
Recording Secretary, Local Union 13059, District 50, UMWA.

LOCAL 628, UNITED ELECTRICAL,
RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Williamsport, Pa., January 18, 1947.

ROBERT RICH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The 600 members of Local 628, UE-CIO, request that you oppose any anti-labor legislation and amendments to the Wagner Act. We expect you to fight for full hearings on all bills and to oppose all legislation designed to confine labor.

The workers are badly in need of a wage increase to meet the high living costs of today; therefore, we expect all Congressmen, who consider themselves fair to labor, to make an all-out fight against restrictive legislation every step of the way.

Respectfully yours,
S. P. WEAVER,
President, Local 628, UE-CIO.

Mr. Speaker, personally I am against the closed-shop proposition. I have no sympathy for jurisdictional strikes or so-called boycott strikes. I am not in sympathy with the portal-to-portal theory as enunciated in a recent judicial decision. It is my belief that the American workingman should not be compelled to join a union before he can secure a job with Uncle Sam on any kind of a project that the Government wants to construct or any enterprise it might engage which employs labor. A man should be given the privilege of determining within his own mind and conscience whether or not he wants to join and belong to a labor union. In my opinion, we are going far afield when we pass laws and set up and establish a labor board that influences every man in this country to join a union before he may work for the Government. It just does not seem to me that the Constitution of the United States countenances labor laws of that kind in a free country such as ours.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman does not differentiate, does he, as between the man who works for the Government and the man who works for a private employer?

Mr. RICH. I am talking about the contracts which the United States Government made during the war in most every field of enterprise. When the Government awarded contracts the contractors were not permitted to employ labor unless the employee first went to a labor union head or some labor boss, and paid from $50 to $1,300 for the privilege of working on Uncle Sam's job.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is no different than it is with many private employers in this country and the people who work for those employers.

Mr. RICH. That is right; that is exactly the same thing, and that is the thing I am complaining about. I do not think that it is right or just and I do not believe that the average member who belongs to a labor union wants conditions of that kind in this country. If you refer to these letters that I am placing in the RECORD from labor unions in Lock Haven, they say that the whole sum total number of employees in their unions were against that procedure of taking away the rights of the closed shop and the rights of jurisdictional strikes and the rights of sympathetic strikes, and so forth. I want, if possible, to have the newspapers in my county and the individuals who work in those plants, if they think otherwise, correspond with me, and I will keep their names secret, because I would just like to know whether the individual members of the unions in my district are all in favor of such procedure as these union officials who have requested me to keep from changing the Wagner Act.

Now, from other unions in my district I have received requests such as these, and I quote:

First I will state my standing. I am strictly a union man. I have been paying dues all my life, I commend you on your article in the House January 8, page 188, and I agree 100 percent with the letter you inserted from a workman for I am opposed to all those labor rackets that violate our Constitution and the bill of rights.

I believe that the other fellow should have the same right as I have and I fear that unless labor or the Government clear out Communist racketeers, they will take this country over.

Then I received a letter from another individual, and I quote:

I have worked at—

And he gave me the name of the company, but I am not going to reveal it—for 7 years and I like my work. But it looks like I will have to leave here. The union is trying to get a closed shop, and I refuse to pay tribute to John L. Lewis. I have three boys that enlisted in the service to keep this country free. Try to keep it so. Anyone has a right to work.

Then I received a petition from men in a labor union who were afraid to take it up with their own union, who write me as follows:

We, the undersigned members of Local Union —, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, wish to state that through a closed-shop agreement, negotiated between the above union and our employers, we were forced to join the union in order to keep our jobs.

Believing this to be contrary to the American way of life we are appealing to you, Honorable Sir, to exert your influence in our behalf in the legislation to be proposed in this session of Congress, to make the closed shop unlawful.

That was signed by quite a good many members of the union. So that I get requests for and requests against, and I think that we have gotten to the point in our national life where we have to judge what is best, and we have to vote for legislation that is coming up here from time to time. So, we must consider the fact that this is a free country and we do not want to force anybody to do anything against his own will, and we want to give men rights and give them justice.

There is just one other thing I would like to get into the RECORD at this time, and that is a statement that was made in Crow's Pacific Coast Lumber Digest, December 16, 1946, in reference to the closed shop. I only print part of this, however, as it is quite lengthy; see what they say regarding the closed shop:

AMERICA CALLS FOR AN END TO THE CLOSED SHOP

* * * * *

All tyrants come to the same end. Drunk from the collusion of a catering administration that sold the general public down the river, labor unions in their arrogance have not only built up adverse public sentiment but have given foundation to justifiable condemnation that unfortunately is going to deal all organized labor a blow in America, from which it will never recover.

Americans as a people hate bullies. Americans as a people, from the earliest days of our country, rebelled at being told "do it or else." Americans as a people are tolerant to a fault. Americans as a people can be taken for a ride once, maybe twice, or even three times but when they get a fill of anything their righteous indignation usually results in going to the bottom in their clean-up.

The Declaration of Independence says in part: "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it."

The people of the United States are on the eve of issuing another declaration of independence, independence from persecution and oppression within their own ranks by those suffering an obsession that they are bigger than the Government, independence from those who do not get their powers from the consent of the governed but by erecting barriers to God-given freedom and making the victims of their scheming pay toll to their self-appointed keepers.

Collective bargaining is sound in principle and, unselfishly carried out, could be equally beneficial to employer and employee alike. However, seized as a racket and operated as a dictatorship; used as a platform upon which to stand and preach class hatred; manipulated as an arm of subversive, political treachery; organized labor becomes a liability to the very foundation of the liberty for which our forefathers spilled their blood to hand down to us.

The closed shop is slavery and nothing else. Continuation of the closed shop means that the American people have become reconciled to surrendering their liberty and that we are throwing the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States overboard.

In my district we had Communists in unionized labor. That does not mean that all labor is communistic by any stretch of the imagination. But we had a leader of the fur and leather workers, who was secretary of the organization, by the name of George S. Pershing. He lived in Williamsport. For years he has been putting his communistic poison out to the laboring people of my district. Some time last December he came here with 8 or 10 men asking me to vote for such legislation as members of the CIO and PAC were endorsing. In discussing with them those features, right outside of this door, I could not agree that I should support much of that legislation. They wanted to know if they could not see me later on at my home. I said yes. They came to my office in my home town with a committee of 19.

During the time they were outside of the House of Representatives I questioned them as to what they were doing. At that time they said they were on relief. I asked why they did not get jobs in industry in Williamsport. They said they could not get jobs except for 35 or 40 cents an hour. I said, "That does not seem possible." I took the names of five or six of these gentlemen; and when they went back to the district I wrote back to the labor board and found out that they could get from 65 cents to $1.05 an hour for common labor. I then wrote those men and told them where they could get jobs making forty or fifty dollars a week rather than taking $18 of relief money. I also wrote the secretary of one of those CIO unions, but I never heard a word from any of them.

So when they came to see me at my home and wanted me to support a bill for $25 a week for 26 weeks, I told them they convinced me it was bad legislation. I put that question up to them—why they did not go out and get those jobs and why they lied to me when they were down here. Not one of them answered the question. They would rather draw $18 a week than work for $40 or $50. I was not for giving them $25 a week for loafing.

Finally I got to discussing the fact that we could not run the Government by going in the red, and asked anyone in the audience who thought that was the case to hold up his hand. So this George S. Pershing held his hand up. I listened to him for 4 or 5 minutes, and after I had listened to him that long I had to stop him. I told him I could not take any more time then; that I would talk to him later. I thought he sounded so much like a Communist I came back to Washington and investigated him through several branches of our Government and several of our committees, and I found out that he had been down in North Carolina stirring up trouble and listed as a Communist; that he went out into Oklahoma and stirred up trouble there; then he went up in Detroit, and then he went out to the State of Washington preaching communism. He had a dandy record, and he was the fellow that was telling the labor people up there in my district what they should do—a Communist leading labor astray by his doctrine.

Finally he got into the Army, and he was thrown out with a dishonorable discharge, and when the Army got through with him they gave him 4 years and 9 months at Alcatraz. When I unloosened on him up in my district, 3 weeks before November 5 last, in about 1 week George Pershing resigned his duties as secretary of the fur and leather workers, and he has gotten out of there, so I am informed. He is probably in some of your districts now. You want to watch for him. I want to drive him clear out of this country. I am going to drive every Communist out of this country that I possibly can. Let them go to Russia or some other place with such doctrines.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes. We have some more of them up there, so I am informed, and we will get them or they will get us.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This is what they did with them up in Michigan. They took the president of the CIO, John Gibson, and made him Assistant Secretary of Labor down here.

Mr. RICH. They are not going to do that if I have anything to do with it. We are going to clean them out of the district and out of Washington. We have no place for them in our country. We want to maintain our form of government. We want to see that freedom exists, that men have the right to liberty, as long as they obey the laws that are for the best interests of the American people. That is what I want. I want to help labor. I want to help labor do everything they can to get justice. I am going to do my part to see that they do get justice as long as I am here in Congress. We must be careful in our readjustment of laws, but we must change some laws or we will have a dictator and our Government will be overthrown. Look at the Philadelphia Record strike. The plant closed down yesterday. Dave Stern gone to Atlantic City—the workers out of a job. Also the jurisdictional strike in Philadelphia—employees refusing to unload fruit; the fruit, hundreds of cars, rotting on the siding. Who loses—the worker, the farmer, the public. Higher prices—loss of wages. Do we need to change our labor laws? I will say we do. It is only sensible and most desirable and absolutely necessary. Everybody knows it, so why argue any further. Strikes mean loss of wages, higher prices, and discontent. Let us be sensible and do the right thing—change the Wagner Act and do that which is best for our people and our country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HALLECK). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. May I say also, Mr. Speaker, that it is a great pleasure to see you in the Speaker's chair today. I think it is a fine tribute to a fine man—one who I honor and respect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

NATIONAL SECURITY AND OUR MILITARY POLICY

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, in the closing months of 1946 the President expressed a desire to see an early adoption of what he termed "a permanent American military policy." He did not at that time extend his remarks on the subject, nor attempt to define the term, but his position on subsequent legislative proposals relating to the armed forces has made it clear that he had in mind a long-range, realistic military policy, capable of laying the foundations of national security for years to come, and consistent with our obligations as the leading power of the world. Above all, he made it plain that this is to be a policy of strength rather than a policy of weakness.

It is my feeling that the President has properly placed the emphasis in this matter, and that his statement marks out for this Congress a clear goal, and provides an accurate criterion for judging the merits of all bills that may come before it relating to the national security.

For we of the Congress must set for ourselves the task of laying the foundations of a permanent American military policy at the earliest moment; and we must test the validity of each proposed measure by this simple question: Will enactment of this bill contribute to the adequate security of the United States, and to the consequent stability of the world? Already there has been damaging, unjustifiable delay. Prompt, conclusive action is needed.

No other considerations will be valid until the questions of security and stability can be answered with a clear affirmative. And regardless of the means ultimately found best to arrive at it, the goal must never be lost sight of. That goal must be the establishment of a farsighted, realistic policy which will indicate very clearly to any would-be aggressor that a war against the United States would be both futile and disastrous, and which proclaims America's determination to defend the institutions of individual right and human liberty throughout the world.

I stress the need for a long-range and farsighted policy. We are now entered upon a phase of our national life in which, because of our military power, our great economic weight, and our success as a democracy, many new responsibilities have been inescapably thrust upon us. I say inescapably thrust upon us and past events bear me out. Even when we willed it otherwise and hid our heads in the sands of isolation we could not escape our responsibility. Our very bigness, our strategic world position, forced us into the turmoil we might have helped prevent. In such a position, it is imperative that our strength be a known and dependable quantity in order that peaceful nations may be reassured, and potential outlaws not tempted to aggression by our vacillation. It is time that we put an end to the short-term and patch-work legislation that confronts us with a manpower crisis every few months, and causes serious reverberations in every capitol of the world. Let us determine that we shall be strong. Then let us select and forcefully establish the vehicles by which that strength will be maintained.

I emphasize the need for strength and there are compelling reasons to warrant the emphasis.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The greatest thing we can do to maintain and manifest that strength is to keep a large amount of atomic bombs on hand, and the strongest air force on earth, and let the world know we are not going to attack anybody, but if any one attacks us we will drop the second bomb and the majority from then on. If we want to protect America that is the way to do it.

Mr. SIKES. I am glad to endorse what the gentleman from Mississippi has said.

Twice in our lifetime we have been confronted by the inexorable dilemma to choose temporary peace or war; to fight alongside those nations that cherish the same ideals of human liberty as we, or to stand back and permit western civilization to perish. Both times we chose to fight, realizing with terrible clarity at the last hour, that there was no other choice, unless we were prepared to sacrifice our American institutions and the safety of our homeland.

But each time, we waited until our enemies were vastly superior in arms and strategic position, waited until the world situation had deteriorated to a point where we could save ourselves only by a frenzied and heroic effort. We waited because we were weak; because we had to wait until our military power could put blood and sinew into our correct moral judgments. We knew what was right, knew what we had to do, but we were not ready. We have never been ready for world emergency.

Events forced us into two world wars because we were not strong enough to guide those events into the ways of peace; because we were unwilling and unable to prevent the deterioration of international relations by prompt and vigorous intervention at the inception of the trouble. And I mean diplomatic intervention; but in the eyes of the unsettled world in which we live, diplomacy is measured so very often by the known strength of the nations behind it.

Through our fortunate geographic position and through the valiant stand of our allies, the genius and courage of the American people were twice granted the necessary time to turn disastrous failures into victories, but at a cost in human life and physical destruction from which the world will not recover for generations.

Can anyone, then, mistake the fundamental lesson of the twentieth century, that a weak United States can in no effective and forceful manner contribute to a stable world community; that a weak United States in the atomic age cannot insure even the security and defense of its own homeland? If we as a people would strive to carry forward the ideals of human liberty and justice, upon which this great country was founded, then we must ever be prepared to protect these values against usurpers and outlaws and alien philosophies. Experience, whose teachings come high and should last long, makes clear beyond all doubt that we can achieve this only so long as we remain strong.

This is not to disregard the United Nations, that institution upon which the world has pinned so much hope and which in recent months has given heartening signs of growth. Certainly it is our best long-time guaranty for peace, but our membership in the United Nations provides a further and equally important reason why we as a nation must remain strong. For that yet frail instrument, brought into the world less than 2 years ago and representing the world's best hope for the peaceable reconciliation of sharp international disputes, must be permitted a safe childhood within a framework of world stability if it is to grow to the maturity and strength of our fervent hopes.

If its decisions and its mandates are to have authority, the United Nations must possess the ultimate ability to enforce them. If international law is to be raised once more to a respectable state, from which the leaders of Germany, Italy, and Japan caused it to fall, then the nations willing to abide by an international code of ethics and behavior must have protection against the criminal element that unfortunately resides in every society, regardless of its scope.

For the achievement of these purposes, a strong United States is indispensable. For only as they are backed by strength will the words of our delegates be resonant and effective in the councils of the United Nations. And only as the world knows that this country has strength and will lend it in defense of law will the peoples of the world find any reality in their hopes for a durable peace.

There has been a great deal of talk in this Congress of economy. Much of it is sound and timely. But I earnestly warn against false economy, especially that economy which would be achieved by weakening the national defense. It has been aptly said that, in this twentieth century, the most expensive things in the world are a cheap army and a cheap navy, and who would deny that the first four and a half decades have rendered this statement a self-evident, near-axiomatic truth. In these years we have fought the world's two most widespread and savage wars, at a cost to civilization in blood and treasure that surpasses anything in history. These wars truly represent the cost to us of maintaining a cheap army and a cheap navy. They represent the cost of our weakness and our unpreparedness.

For can anyone seriously question the thesis that, had the United States been prepared, both wars might have been averted, or if not averted, then won at a fraction of the cost? Is it probable that, had this country been militarily strong and diplomatically determined, Hitler would have provoked France and Great Britain to war? Could the Japanese Empire have smashed Pearl Harbor, caused us for a whole year to fear for our very survival, and forced us to fight back from the very fringes of disaster? The answer to these questions is an unequivocal "No."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Had we followed the advice of Gen. Billy Mitchell, instead of destroying him, we would have had a real Air Force, and there would have been no Pearl Harbor. Now, if we are going to destroy our Air Force or reduce it to impotency and turn over the atomic bomb to the very ones who are undermining our country and our civilization, then we are merely heading for disaster.

If we had followed Gen. Billy Mitchell in the twenties when Frank Reid on the other side of the aisle and a few on our side were urging the Congress and the administration to stand by him, we might not have had this war, and we certainly would not have had the Pearl Harbor disaster.

Mr. SIKES. I thank the gentleman. I believe he knows of my work in the last session of Congress to secure more adequate recognition for General Mitchell's great work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we have learned anything from our tragic experience, we have learned that our weakness does in no way contribute to a stable and peaceful world, but in reality creates uncertainty and tempts aggression. Let no one doubt that in the present state of the world and in the world of the foreseeable future only the strong can be sure of freedom, and only the strong can insure the freedom of those others who now dimly sense its meaning and who cling desperately to the hope that this Nation will lead the way. We must understand this vital premise to any consideration of the national security. And we must be ready to act upon such an understanding.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FERNANDEZ asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a statement by Mr. Horace M. Albright on the subject of the potash industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HALLECK). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] is recognized for 1 hour.

REPORT ON CONDITIONS IN THE FAR EAST

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, on December 21, 1945, I completed an investigation trip, as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, with a subcommittee of the House Naval Affairs Committee, which covered the Far East and the Japanese mandates in the Pacific. During the month of our investigations we stopped at Pearl Harbor, Midway, Wake, Guam, Tokyo, and Yokosuke in Japan; Tsingtao, Tientsin, Peiping, and Shanghai in China; Yonabaru in the Ryukyus; Manila in the Philippines; Pelelieu, Anguar, Koror, and Babelthuap in the Palaus; Moen, Romulun, Dublon, Uman, and Udot in the Truk group; and Kwajalein in the Marshalls.

Every courtesy was extended to us by members of the Army and Navy in these areas and also by officials of the State Department with whom we came in contact in Tokyo, Tsingtao, Tientsin, Peiping, and Shanghai. To all of them personally and as a group I wish to extend my sincere thanks for their cooperation and helpfulness.

My purpose in making this report is to give to the Congress the results of my views on American policy in the areas covered. As many of you know, I undertook a 6-week survey of Burma and China for the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt in November and December 1944, and I would like to suggest that you check my remarks now regarding China with the report I made to Congress on January 16, 1945, which can be found in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

On my trip I covered approximately 25,000 miles over a 31-day period. During that time I kept a personal day-to-day diary, interviewed as many people as I could, both in official circles and on the street, and also made use of every bit of information which I thought would be of value in assessing my views and making them known to the Congress.

There were a number of questions in my mind which I tried to find answers to during the course of my trip, and, while I could reach no definite conclusions on some of them, I will set them down. They are as follows: Where are America's frontiers in the Pacific and the Far East? What are our interests in these areas? What is our present policy toward these areas? Are our present holdings there assets or liabilities? What is the future of Japan's mandates in the Pacific?

I left Washington on November 21 and arrived at Pearl Harbor on November 23 and Midway Island on the morning of the 26th. Midway, an island 1 mile by 1½ miles in area, housed 12,000 men during the war, but its present complement is down to around 800. This includes the personnel of 1 Marine airsquadron of 26 planes. In my opinion, Midway is one of the most important strategic islands in the North Pacific. It is only 1,600 miles from Adak in the Aleutians, 2,400 miles from Tokyo, and 1,500 miles from Pearl Harbor. A constant battle with the sea must be waged to keep the island together. Storms raise havoc with our main air field there, because the constant action of the waves is washing its underpinnings away. No matter what the expense may be, this island should be kept up because of its strategic position and importance. Probably the most decisive naval battle of the Pacific war—the Battle of Midway—was fought off its shores. At the present time Midway has fine airstrips, a good submarine base and harbor, and a roadstead big enough for cruisers and carriers if they draw no more than 28 feet.

Midway belongs to the Leeward Island group of the Hawaiian Archipelago. This group stretches away in a long line for 1,300 miles northwest of the inhabited Hawaiian Islands. All of them are very small and some are merely reefs. The ocean in their vicinity is notorious for uncertain and dangerous currents and for abrupt changes in the depth of the water. They were set aside as a bird reservation in 1909 and are now tenanted by thousands of seabirds of various kinds. Some fishing operations are now being carried on in this group, but they are seldom visited and, with the exception of Midway, have no inhabitants. Incidentally, Midway was discovered and claimed for the United States in 1859 when Hawaii was still an independent country.

From Midway I went to Wake, an atoll occupying an area 4½ by 2 miles. Its 3 islets, separated by shallow water, have a maximum altitude of about 20 feet. I left Wake on Thursday, November 28—Thanksgiving Day—and on our way to Guam we flew low and circled Saipan, Tinian, and Rota in the Marianas. These were a part of the former Japanese mandates. Saipan and Tinian were dotted with air strips and concentrations of material.

Guam is the southernmost, largest, and most populous of the 15 islands comprising the Mariana group. It is about 30 miles long, varies in width from 4 to 8 miles, and has a total area of 225 square miles. The island is the top of a great volcanic cone built up from the Pacific Ocean, and its highest elevation is 1,334 feet. Apra, on the west coast, has an excellent harbor, is well protected, and has a large enough anchorage at all seasons for almost all classes of ships.

Guam is an extremely important link in the east-west chain of islands belonging to the United States. On the present airplane route to the Orient the distance from Guam to Wake is 1,310 miles; to Manila, 1,384 miles; to Truk, 555 miles; to Peleliu, 690 miles; and to Kwajalein, 1,550 miles.

The work of the naval government in Guam since the Washington Conference of 1921–22 has resolved itself largely into carrying out a constructive program for the benefit of the Guamanians. During the 250 years that Spain had administered Guam, its population decreased tremendously. Under the Navy, it had become one of the cleanest and most wholesome islands in the Tropics. The population has more than doubled since 1898, proper sanitary and medical care has been provided, and a free public educational system has been instituted.

The loyalty and gratitude of the Guamanians to the United States is unquestioned. On a number of occasions they have petitioned for American citizenship—the latest in December 1946, when the Guamanian Congress passed such a resolution—but nothing as yet has been done. They do not want independence as they realize they lack experience and financial resources to continue their government without the support which comes to them directly and indirectly from Federal appropriations and from service personnel on the island.

There is still a small number of Japanese soldiers at large on the island. They live in the jungle and subsist on what nature provides or they can steal. However, the number is gradually being whittled down, and it will not be long before they will all be accounted for. The war trials of a number of captured and accused Japanese are being conducted there, and sentences are being meted out.

I visited the hospital and the school of tropical medicine which has extremely good equipment but very little in the way of personnel to carry on the medical work necessary in Guam and the other Pacific islands now under our control. I believe that it would be a good and necessary policy for us to appropriate sufficient funds to operate this school on a first-class basis, to provide sufficient personnel to man it, and to use it as a training school for native medical practitioners so that they could take care of the health needs in our islands. This has been done very successfully by the British who have established such a training center on Suva in the Fiji Island group and the results have been extremely gratifying. This type of education is necessary due to the fact that civilian American doctors will not go to the islands because of inadequate salaries and because very few of them would be willing to make a career of a life such as this would call for.

Guam, at the present time, is our real western line of defense. At present there are 12,000 Navy and Marine personnel and 18,000 Army personnel on the island. While this large number crowds the island now we had as many as 210,000 service personnel on Guam during the war.

From Guam I went to Tokyo. We had hoped to go to Marcus Island, but did not when we found out it had, in effect, been rolled up and that it had only the one airstrip with a sea-air rescue unit stationed there.

Tokyo is in a very dilapidated state but the Japanese are cooperating very well with the Americans and conditions are, on the whole, good. The economy of Japan is coming back gradually and most of the people seem to like the Americans. During a 3-hour luncheon with Gen. Douglas MacArthur, many pertinent questions were discussed. He stated that the occupation of Japan was going along very well and that in order to keep the situation under control he had about 80,000 American soldiers plus some New Zealanders, Australian, and Sikh troops to assist him. He stated that the Japanese people liked us. When asked about the U. S. S. R., he said that she was trying to make her influence felt in Japan, and that, while she had no troops there, she did have a mission numbering in excess of 500, which was entirely too many for the amount of work it had to do.

MacArthur stated that the Communist Party had little influence in Japan, that it was small but vocal and well-organized, that it had only 6 members in the Diet. Women have 38 of their sex as representatives in the Diet.

He pointed out that Japan will come back economically much sooner than the Philippines because of the way the Japanese will work. Tokyo and other ruined cities in Japan will not be too long getting rebuilt whereas Manila will take much longer.

MacArthur stated that the Japanese are now the world's greatest pacifists. They have gone from one extreme to the other because their aggressive, military system failed them.

In contrast to Germany, MacArthur said that the occupation of Japan has cost nothing to the United States except for the payment of wages to our service personnel and their clothes, medical attention, and food.

When questioned, MacArthur stated our stay in Japan is indeterminate. Much will depend on the action of Congress and the reparations issue. He expressed general agreement with Ed Pauley's report on reparations but was opposed to some of it because it was not based on the fact that Japan had been stripped by bombing of much of her industry and therefore was not in a position to pay what the report would require her to. In his opinion, Japan must be made self-sustaining, or it will cost the United States billions of dollars and millions of lives in the future.

He is introducing land reforms to make it possible for the peasants to buy and own their own farms. He has taken away pensions and honors from all retired Japanese Army and Navy officers, and he is determined to break the Japanese military caste. About 400 Japanese have already been tried and executed, and about 1,000 still remain to be tried. It is his contention that if he had not jailed the war criminals, the Japanese people would have killed them.

Relations between American service personnel and the Japanese people seem to be good. I am wondering, though, if our boys are not too young for the "police" type of duty which is their main job. While the Japanese women and youngsters seemed friendly, there was a certain surliness on the part of some of the men. The Japanese people look with distaste upon their returned soldiers. Japanese policemen, minus swords, seem to have a difficult time handling Koreans and Formosans who cause much trouble. It has become necessary for the Japanese police to call on American M. P.'s for assistance in some quarters of Tokyo because the Koreans and Formosans are so difficult to handle.

From Tokyo I went to Yokosuke, the great Japanese naval base 40 miles south of the capital. This base was a remarkable one with its floating and stationary cranes, its six large drydocks—one of which can accommodate the biggest ship afloat—its caves dug into the mountains which, as far as can be ascertained, run for more than 20 miles and were honeycombed with machine shops, radar equipment, chartrooms, munitions, etc. These caves are cut into the scapstone and they represent a well-thought-out job. One wonders at the Japanese mentality because I was informed on reliable authority that with the war they inducted their machine-tool operators into the army and replaced them with farmers who had to be forced to work by guards armed with machine guns.

Yokosuka navy yard used to be surrounded by a high fence and no foreigners were ever allowed inside. Seventy thousand Japanese were employed at this base. No American ship had visited Yokosuka—except for a brief stop of an American fleet on a round-the-world tour in 1908—until after VJ-day. It was as much of a secret base as it was humanly possible to achieve. Even today the old navy-yard workers and their townspeople are not too friendly but under the able administration of the United States Navy, much progress is being made and a major base for the repair of American ships in the far Pacific will soon be in the making.

On VJ-day the Japanese did not have a battleship afloat, although the Nagoya—riddled in the battle of Leyte—was being repaired. On that date, the Japanese had 3,000 planes left but they did not have the gas necessary to get them off the ground. From 1940 to 1945, Japan built 60,000 planes of all types compared with our yearly production of approximately that same number during each of the war years.

In Japan's schools we are changing the contents of their text books to coincide with our views, but we are doing nothing to further the health of the school children. The schools are cold, the students still wear uniforms, and girls are, even yet, not allowed to go to the universities.

At Hiroshima I saw the results of the first atom bomb—16 months after. The shells or outsides of some ten or twelve modern buildings were left standing and some wooden houses were going up in the devastated city. There was no sign of a garden in the 4-square-mile bombed area. The damage here was unbelievable, and the sight of what man's terrible destructive genius can accomplish is enough to make one shudder.

I believe that Japan must be allowed to maintain a self-sustaining economy; otherwise it will be necessary for us to export foodstuffs to her, and thereby create a kind of dependency which would bring disastrous consequences for us.

It is my strong belief that General MacArthur and his political adviser, George Atcheson, are doing a remarkably efficient job in carrying out the occupation of Japan and administering the affairs of its people. My recommendation is that we follow out their suggestions about policy, and that the Japanese people continue to be informed as to our aims in their behalf.

From Hiroshima I went to Tsingtao in Shantung Province in north China. We do not have a naval base here or anywhere else in China. The Russians have a base at Port Arthur based on the Sino-Soviet Treaty of 1945. Tsingtao is the logical place for the Chinese navy to build itself and we have furnished them with ships and, at present, are supplying them with American naval instructors.

Our policy in China, according to Admiral Cooke, commander of the United States Seventh Fleet, has been to assist the movement of Central Government armies to northwest China; to repatriate Japanese to their homeland; to help move supplies into famine districts; and to help repair damaged Chinese ports.

Our Marine Corps activities have been reduced so that marine guards have been taken off the coal trains from Tientsin to Chinwangtao. Marine personnel is being constantly cut down in numbers and their only duty now is to support executive headquarters in Peiping. Executive headquarters is composed of members of the Kuomintang, the Communists, and the United States Army and its main purpose seems to be to send out truce teams to help bring about a cessation of hostilities between the Kuomintang and the Communists. As a matter of fact, the United States Army is the real executive headquarters and the marines supply the logistics support. The marines have been used to protect the coal mines and the railroads, but these functions have now been taken over by the Nationalist troops.

During my China visit the Chinese National Assembly was in session at Nanking, but the Communists have refused to join it, stating they were not being given enough voice in the Government.

While in Tsingtao I saw some "volunteers" for the Central Government's Army. They were tied together with ropes and being driven to their barracks. This is really nothing new, as China's armies have been getting this type of recruit for many years past.

After leaving Tsingtao I went to Tientsin and Peiping. In the latter city I talked with General Gillam, the American Commissioner at executive headquarters. He stated that while the situation between the Communists and the Kuomintang was tense, that the door was not entirely closed to further negotiations. At that time there were very few truce teams out in the field and negotiations between the two opposing factions had developed into a stalemate.

The Chinese are beginning to indicate their dislike of foreigners of all kinds, and they are showing evidences of an anti-American spirit based, in large part, I believe, on the presence of our service personnel in their country.

In the Chinese cities I visited I noticed the beginnings of youth movements among boys and girls. They wear uniforms, march in step, and have distinctive slogans. These movements can be channeled into democratic lines like our Boy Scouts, or they can become vehicles for dictatorship as the youth movements in Italy and Germany were. Only time will tell what their ultimate effect will be.

From information I gathered in north China, the Russians did a very thorough job of looting Manchuria and pillaging that area and its people. Now, in retaliation, the Chinese are doing the same things to the Russians in the parts of Manchuria they control.

In their dealings with the Central Government the Russians have been, as far as I could find out, scrupulously correct. No Russian material as such is going to the Communists, but the Russians did leave captured Japanese war supplies as they withdrew from Manchuria where it would be convenient for the Chinese Communists to take it over. The Kuomintang armies are well equipped and supplied by us. The Communist armies steal or take whatever they can. The Communists are very anti-American, and they have put out very defamatory posters in Yenan and elsewhere showing American marines in a very unfavorable light.

The bitterness between the Kuomintang and the Communists is great and the groups in between—who do not trust the two main antagonists—are in a very weak position. The Kuomintang is organized from the top down while the Communists have organized the people in their areas from the bottom up. This does not mean that the Communist leadership is more democratic, but it does indicate that they are more aware of China's basic economic ills—high land rates, high taxes, high rates of interest—and are using reform in these lines to further their own interests. It must be borne in mind that the Communist leadership is, and always has been, dominated by the ideal of Marxian Socialism and that this is their ultimate and final goal. The democratic and needed reforms which they have promulgated have strengthened their position in the agrarian areas they occupy.

Secretary of State Marshall made an honest appraisal of the situation in his personal statement before assuming his present position. He pointed out that certain elements within the Kuomintang have counted on American support regardless of their actions and that the Communists, on the other hand, are counting on economic collapse, guerrilla warfare, and the cutting of communications to achieve their ends. He believes a middle course between these two extremes should be adopted so that a greater representation of the Chinese people in their government could be achieved and thereby a real basis for unity within the country established. He recommends that this be brought about under the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek, which I agree with, and which I think could be done if the Chinese leaders really set their hearts to it. Unity in China will never be achieved permanently by outside pressures but will have to come from the Chinese themselves.

At the present time our forces have been reduced from a peak of 113,000 men to less than 10,000. As I pointed out earlier in this speech, the tasks for which they had been sent to China have been accomplished and their only excuse for remaining in that country lies in the logistics support they furnish our executive headquarters in Peiping.

With the coming home of Marshall, his Nanking headquarters have been deactivated and executive headquarters are on the basis of the State Department's report, going out of business. The status of the United States Army advisory group at Nanking, numbering 750, is interesting, to say the least. This group has the job of training the Chinese Army and Navy in the use of lend-lease weapons and in modern military tactics. The American advisory group is not performing this service by congressional authorization, and it seems probable that if this is not granted, it likewise will be disbanded.

In view of the State Department's statement on January 29 that we are withdrawing from China, it appears that further negotiations will be carried on at the diplomatic and economic rather than the military level. This, I think, is the wisest procedure. I would suggest also that an international conference of interested powers be called by President Truman to consider some workable arrangement in China's behalf. I have in mind the Washington Conference of 1922, which was called primarily in China's interest, and from which much good resulted. A four-power conference, including the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, and Great Britain could consider the complicated Chinese picture and, perhaps, be able to work out a solution which would both strengthen and unify China and thus help her to assume her position as one of the great powers. The great powers should once again agree—as they did in the Nine Power Pact of 1922—"to respect the sovereignty, independence, and territorial and administrative integrity of China and to provide the fullest opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself a stable government." What we really need is teamwork in our international affairs so that we can discuss our problems with other nations across a conference table and not with our young men across battle lines.

Make no mistake about it, we face a dilemma in China which will have to be solved if the peace of the world is to be maintained. Both President Truman's and Secretary Marshall's statements give assurances that the United States will support Chiang Kai-shek if an agreement can be worked out which will achieve unity and strength for China and give to the Chinese people a voice in their own affairs. As long as we, or any other great power, will underwrite a victory for one side or the other, so long will civil war continue in China and so long will the peace of the world be imperiled.

Our policy in China is one based on national welfare. We want expanding opportunities for trade, we want to prevent China from becoming a political or military satellite of Russia, and we want to see China become the bastion for peace in the Far East.

It is my belief that in Secretary of State Marshall we have a man with profound understanding of the intricacies of the Chinese puzzle. His forthrightness, his honesty, and his lack of bias will give to our foreign affairs a guide steeped in knowledge of this particular situation. His statements and decisions to date bear out the trust and confidence the people of the United States have placed in him. He will—as he has already indicated—appraise the field of foreign affairs realistically and do what he can to achieve practical results in our dealings with other nations.

My greatest desire is to see peace maintained in a troubled world so that nations can live with one another; so that trade can be carried on in a mutually profitable manner; and so that peoples the world over will be able to live, not in fear and misery, but in hope and understanding.

From Peiping I went to Shanghai, and from there to Yonabaru on Okinawa. Okinawa is an island in the Ryukyus 67 miles long by 10 miles wide. Well over 100 ships of all types are beached or on their sides, mute evidence to the effectiveness of the great typhoon of last year.

At present Okinawa is manned by 12,000 American soldiers and around 1,000 sailors. From a naval point of view this base is in the caretaker status and opinion is very divided as to what its future disposition should be. Due to its vulnerability to severe types of weather plus the availability of a big modern base at Yokusuke it would appear that except for its use as an "eye" on our defense perimeter it would not be a worth-while permanent installation.

On December 10 I arrived at Peleliu in the Palaus and immediately went by seaplane to the island of Anguar to look into the disposition of the phosphate deposits there. We have a million tons of this valuable commodity in Anguar and a contract has been let to an American concern—the Pomeroy Co.—to get it out. It is being sent to Japan, in Japanese ships, to help rehabilitate the soil there and thus to make that country become more self-supporting. The natives are being paid 55 cents a day, and Japanese sent from Japan $3.50 a day. The American workers are paid at prevailing stateside wages. The phosphate is to be mined at the rate of 300,000 tons a year.

The phosphate at Anguar is extremely rich and valuable for medicinal purposes as well as for use as fertilizer. This phosphate could be used in Hawaii, where it is needed badly, or by nations like the Philippines and China allied with us in the war. There are approximately 200 American civil employees here and the contract is on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis which could bear looking into. Furthermore, according to the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune of December 19, 500,000 tons of Montana-Idaho phosphate have also been scheduled to go to Japan and Korea immediately.

From Anguar I went to Koror which used to be the seat of the Japanese South Seas government and which directly ruled all the Mandated Islands. There was much permanent building done here and all indications pointed to the Japanese being there to stay. In the back of the governor's mansion there was a grass inlaid map of the Palaus which was remarkable for its intricate detail. The Japanese had 35,000 troops on Koror but we never did attempt to take the island.

From Koror I went by boat to Babelthuap the largest island in the group and visited some native villages and schools. In the Palaus the children are being taught English which they have to learn from Japanese characters. They seem to be learning our language fairly rapidly.

We have a lot of surplus equipment in the Palaus which we might as well forget because it is either useless or will be soon. Many of our Pacific island holdings are now Quonset hut affairs. The United States Commercial Co., a subsidiary of the RFC, has a monopoly on trading with the natives in our newly acquired possessions. This organization encourages the native handicrafts and buys what the natives produce and then sends it to the United States for sale. Much that the natives produce is crude, but, with a market, their handicraft can be improved and their subsistence, in part at least, can be taken care of.

The Japanese built up strong defenses, not as complete as those at Truk, but more powerful than those normally built at an outlying base. The Palauan fortifications suffered the first attack when the Eighty-first Army Infantry Division stormed the shores of Anguar about a week previous to the assault on Peleliu by the First Marine Division (reinforced) on September 15, 1944. The Army supported the Peleliu invasion with artillery fire from Anguar during the early stages of the attack, and two weeks later the Army joined the marines on Peleliu to aid in the fight. By November 1944 Peleliu was secured.

No attempt was made to invade the major islands north of Peleliu, but, with the two bases, Peleliu and Anguar, being operated mainly as air bases, our planes were able to keep the other islands in the Palaus constantly harassed and subdued. These islands capitulated after VJ-day.

Palau has great military and commercial importance and has been for years the center of Japanese political control of all her Pacific mandated islands. In this island group the Japanese operated a major military base, a fleet anchorage and supply base, an airfield, and seaplane bases—near Koror.

Palau's location gives it considerable strategic importance. One thousand miles west of Truk and only 530 miles from Davao in the southern Philippines, it commands the sea and air routes from China and Japan to New Guinea and the western Dutch East Indies. For this reason it was an important transshipment point for movements of enemy ships, troops, planes, and supplies to the southwest Pacific theater of operations.

From the Palaus I went to the Truk group in the eastern Carolines. Our military government headquarters are located on Moen Island. This island—and all the others in this group—are beautiful. Moen has such things as waterfalls, dense vegetation, and a heavy precipitation. I also visited the islands of Romulum, Udot, Dublon, and Uman.

The people here are light brown in appearance, very docile, and easy to handle. We were entertained on all the islands by singing and dancing. There are about 10,000 inhabitants in the Truk group compared to 5,900 in the Palaus. Both the Trukese and the Palauans impressed me as a happy but bewildered people. They do not look upon us with enthusiasm, but only as the successors to the Spaniards, Germans, and Japanese—all of whom have ruled over them in the last 50 years.

The diseases of greatest prevalence in both groups are tuberculosis and intestinal parasites. Due to the use of penicillin, yaws—which used to be quite prevalent—have been cleared up; there is no indication of syphilis and very little gonorrhea. Sanitary habits are being introduced by the Navy and outdoor toilets are much in use.

Neither the Palauans or the Trukese care to work too much as they have all the necessities of life, except tobacco, and in this respect they are rationed at the rate of four cartons a month. The standard rate of pay in both groups is 40 cents a day.

Truk was not the Japanese "Pearl Harbor" which the American public had been led to believe. The Japanese had a battery of eight 8-inch guns on Moen and a system of caves on all the islands similar to those in use in Japan. Dublon Island was their headquarters and from there the movements of their Fourth Fleet and Thirty-first Army Division were directed. Fortifications were of a very weak character and kind. There was no sign of permanency here as was indicated at Koror in the Palaus. Truk lagoon is large enough to take care of the entire United States Fleet, but to make it practicable a great deal of blasting and dredging would be necessary.

From Truk I proceeded to Kwajalein in the Marshalls, where a good job is being done in administering the islands and their people. Here—as elsewhere in the mandates—there is a lack of personnel and of shipping. However, the situation in these respects is better in the Marshalls than elsewhere because of our earlier occupation. Soil conservation and revegetation programs are in effect, medical services are good and more than one-half of all able-bodied Marshallese are working for the military government or the USCC. The natives are a likable and cooperative people who, in time, can again become self-supporting.

A special word should be said about the natives removed from Bikini for the atom bomb tests. They are located on the island of Rongerik, number about 170, and 60 percent of them are women. They are very unhappy in their new location and desire to return to Bikini. Because of the infertility of Rongerik they will very likely have to be moved again to a more fertile island or, as an alternative, we must be prepared to subsidize them indefinitely.

Insofar as my own personal views on the mandates are concerned, I covered them in a speech on the floor of the House on April 18, 1945. I would prefer to have the United States assume complete and undisputed control of the mandates. We need these islands for our future defense, and they should be fortified wherever we deem it necessary. We have no concealed motives because we want these islands for one purpose only and that is national security. Economically they will be a liability, socially they will present problems, and politically we will have to work out a policy of administration. No other nation has any kind of a claim to the mandates. No other nation has paid the price we have. These views of mine are not new nor are they the results only of my recent investigative trip to the Pacific. Rather, my stand has been accentuated by what I have seen and I am more firmly convinced than ever of our great need for control of the mandates.

If, however, it does become necessary to create a trusteeship for these islands, I would favor the proposals made by our State Department and President Truman which would place the mandates under the United Nations with the consideration that they should be cataloged as a strategic area outside the control of the Trusteeship Council. On this basis, supervision would be exercised by the Security Council which has jurisdiction over such strategic areas in the interests of collective security. But, and this is important, the United States has a veto over the Security Council should it ever want to assert effective control.

If the Security Council blocked acceptance of America's terms for taking over the mandates as a strategic area, the islands then would remain under our control. It is worth remembering also, that until a treaty of peace is signed with Japan we have no legal title to the mandates.

The question of government is bound to be an important consideration. For a long time I have studied the possibility of civil government for the mandates, but, desirable though that would be, I have come to the conclusion that the only way they could be governed for the present would be by the Navy on the same basis as Guam and Samoa are administered. Personally, I would rather have a civil administration over the mandates, but, in view of practical and realistic considerations, I am forced to the conclusion that the Navy would be the best administrator. It would have the best and only means of maintaining liaison between the various islands and it would have the only trained personnel to carry out the job of administration. Stanford University, which has the task of training military government men for administration of the islands, has done an outstanding job in this respect, and both it and the Navy are to be complimented for the initiative shown and the progress already made. I should suggest, though, that the Navy give to its military government personnel a special status apart from its regular seagoing personnel so that they could be given the recognition they deserve and so that they could develop the esprit de corps necessary to carry out the functions assigned to them. This, I think, would do away with the dissatisfaction I noted on my trip and give to these specialists the status they are entitled to.

I should like to repeat, in conclusion, that my own personal opinion is that civil administration would be best for the mandates. This, however, is impractical at this time, due to the circumstances mentioned. It is necessary, though, that the eventual change over to civilian control be given a thorough study by the Navy Department so that recommendations can be made at the appropriate time to achieve this goal.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in my remarks the results of an investigation dealing with the present and future status of trusteeships for the mandates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

PRESENT AND FUTURE STATUS OF TRUSTEESHIPS FOR THE MARIANA, CAROLINE, AND MARSHALL ISLANDS

After Japan gave notice in 1933 of her withdrawal from the League of Nations, effective in 1935, she still continued to act as mandatory for all the former German islands north of the equator (the Marshall, Caroline, and Mariana Islands). The Japanese Foreign Minister said on February 22, 1934, "The Japanese Government believes that Japan has acquired the status as mandatory through a decision reached among the principal allied and associated powers and that her status * * * will not be affected in any way by Japan's withdrawal from the League." The last report made by Japan to the Permanent Mandates Commission was for the year 1938. Legally speaking, Japan at the present time is still the mandatory for the islands.[1]

During World War II, however, the mandated islands came under military occupation of the United States, and, as the end of the conflict approached, demands that the United States retain the islands after the war were increasingly raised. The Navy in particular seemed anxious to hold on to the islands for strategic reasons of defense. Since under the Atlantic Charter we had renounced all territorial aggrandizement, annexation seemed out of the question. To solve this problem the American delegation at the San Francisco Conference, convened to draw up the United Nations Charter, sponsored a plan of trusteeship for dependent areas which protected the security interests of the administering power as well as the welfare of the inhabitants and the interests of world peace.[3]

As finally formulated by the conference, the United Nations trusteeship system had for its purpose the furtherance of international peace, the advancement of the dependent peoples, and respect of their human rights and freedoms. Those territories eligible for trusteeship are former League of Nations mandates, territory detached from enemy states in the recent war, or any other dependent territories voluntarily offered. The placing of any territory under trusteeship is strictly voluntary and is to be agreed upon by the states directly concerned. The General Assembly will ordinarily supervise the execution of the trusteeship by the administering power through the medium of a trusteeship council. Strategic areas may be designated in a trusteeship agreement and these areas will be supervised by the Security Council, which may allow fortification in these areas.[3]

No discussion of specific territories was made at the conference. The implications of the special strategic areas, however, in relation to American desires in the Pacific islands was fairly obvious.

In August 1945 the Subcommittee on Pacific Bases of the House Committee on Naval Affairs made a report on the disposition of the Pacific islands which said, "from a legal viewpoint, Japan has forfeited all rights to her mandated islands by breaching the trust with respect to that mandate. It is our belief that the United States should take outright the Japanese mandated islands * * * there are those who favor trusteeship of these islands. Regardless of which view prevails, the United States should have the dominating control over these islands."[4]

Whether the United States would annex or place under trusteeship the occupied islands was the topic of a Presidential press conference on January 15, 1946. President Truman said that those islands we did not need would be placed under UNO trusteeship, and those that we needed we would keep under individual trusteeship, for which we would have to ask UNO's authority. He also said that some islands would be under individual trusteeships as well as collective trusteeship, but that policy would have to be worked out by the United Nations as it went along. He said that we had not demanded any of the islands we need.[5]

Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson at a press conference on January 22, 1946, gave his interpretation of the trusteeship system and its application to the Pacific islands. First, the nation initiating the trusteeship negotiation decides whether the area is strategic (which can be fortified) or nonstrategic. If the former is decided, then negotiations are conducted with the Security Council, where unanimous agreement of the Big Five is necessary. If the trusteeship negotiation is vetoed, then the situation reverts to what it was, that is, the nation in control of the area in question still retains control. If the negotiation is approved, the arrangement cannot be changed later by the Security Council without the consent of all of the Big Five, including the United States.[6]

This interpretation seemed to guarantee American control, under the terms America would desire, of the Japanese islands, even though placed under trusteeship.

Hanson W. Baldwin reported in the New York Times in September[7] 1946, that the Army and the Navy, speaking through the Joint Chiefs of Staff wanted to retain complete United States sovereignty over the mandated islands, whereas the State Department wanted to place them under a United Nations trusteeship with the United States as sole trustee. A suggested compromise plan, put forward by some State Department advisers, would exclude United Nations authority over, or access to, certain strategic areas in the islands which the United States required for bases.

The United States finally, on November 6 revealed its intentions regarding the Japanese mandated islands. On that date President Truman released the text of a draft strategic area trusteeship agreement for these islands. The President said that the United States was prepared to place under trusteeship not only the Japanese mandated islands but any Japanese islands for which the United States assumed responsibility as a result of World War II. The draft was to be transmitted for information only to the other members of the Security Council of the United Nations (Australia, Brazil, China, Egypt, France, Mexico, the Netherlands, Poland, the U. S. S. R., and the United Kingdom) and to New Zealand and the Philippines. At an early date, the President declared, the plan would be submitted formally to the Security Council for approval.

Since the plan called for a strategic trusteeship rather than an ordinary trusteeship, according to the terms of the charter it would have to be approved and later supervised by the Security Council rather than the General Assembly of the United Nations. In a strategic trusteeship the Security Council might avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations in regard to supervision of political, economic, social, and educational matters.[8]

The main points of the draft plan may be summarized as follows:[9]

1. The United States would be the administering authority of the trust territory consisting of the former Japanese-mandated islands.

2. The territory would be administered as an integral part of the United States.

3. The United States would apply the trusteeship objectives of the UN Charter.

4. The United States would be entitled to have military bases and armed forces in the territory and employ native volunteer forces in carrying out obligations toward the Security Council as well as for purposes of local order and defense.

5. The United States would foster the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the territory toward self-government.

6. The administering authority would guarantee to the inhabitants freedom of speech, press, religion, etc.

7. Nationals and companies of members of the United Nations, except those of the United States, would all be given equally favorable treatment in the territory. Equal treatment was also promised to members of the United Nations in the administration of justice. Air-traffic rights would be subject to special agreement.

8. The United States might incorporate the trust territory into a customs, fiscal, or administrative union with other United States territory.

9. The United States would take the necessary steps to provide the status of citizenship of the trust territory for the inhabitants of the trust territory, and give diplomatic and consular protection to the inhabitants abroad.

10. The United States might, for security reasons, determine the extent of the applicability of those articles of the Charter, relating to the supervisory functions of the Trusteeship Council, in certain specified areas. These areas are sometimes referred to as closed areas.

11. The United States would apply to the trust territory appropriate international conventions.

This plan of the United States, which up to the present is the only strategic-area trusteeship proposed, has been criticized as constituting virtual annexation.[10] Perhaps the most important clause of the plan is that providing for closed areas. By means of it the United States could greatly limit any interference of the United Nations in the trust territory.[11]

At the present time the draft-trusteeship agreement has not formally been presented to the Security Council, nor is it known when it will be. There it will be subject to a veto. However, as John Foster Dulles pointed out to the Trusteeship Committee of the General Assembly on November 7, 1946, if a trusteeship agreement is rejected by the United Nations, the dependent territory still continues under the present controlling power. This would mean that the Pacific islands would still be under direct United States control, even if the Security Council rejected the American draft plan.[12]

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. The gentleman is well qualified to speak on this far-eastern situation. I regret I did not hear all of the gentleman's remarks. I wonder if the gentleman has an opinion as to the advisability of withdrawing our troops from China at this time and if so would he please express that opinion.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin I am entirely in accord with General Marshall's policy as it affects China. When I was in China in November and December last year I visited executive headquarters at Peiping and I was informed by General Gillam, the American commissioner, that practically nothing was being done in the way of achieving effective results by the truce teams that were being sent out. These teams were composed of one American officer, one Communist, and one member of the Central Government. There was no reason I could see for the continuation of the approximately 12,000 marines who were there at that time, because all the tasks assigned to them had been completed. There was a great deal of anti-American feeling, which I thought was based primarily on the presence of our service personnel there. As long as they remained, not being able to accomplish anything, neither we nor the Chinese were getting any benefit.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Did their presence, however, not have a considerable psychological effect upon the situation? I am thinking in terms of the action that Russia might perhaps take.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I do not think so, because they were so few in number and so scattered. If the gentleman is thinking of the effect that armed might might have as a threat or a potential threat in that part of the world, I would suggest to him that on Okinawa we have approximately 14,000 service personnel of the Army and Navy; that in Japan proper, which is being administered exclusive of Okinawa, we have approximately 80,000 American service personnel; that in Korea we must have around 40,000, and on Guam, our great western bastion in the Pacific, we have approximately 30,000. Those are real concentrations outside of the rim of China itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER DEFERRED

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, because I have a committee in session which I must attend now, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted me for today may be deferred until after the completion of business on the Speaker's desk on next Wednesday, and that at that time I be given 30 minutes to speak on the Republican fiscal and taxation policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SESSION OF THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. SEELY-BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may sit during the session of the House on Thursday, this week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

LIMITED TENURE FOR FEDERAL JUDGES

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in a republic public officers should be compelled, from time to time, to return to the people for acceptance or rejection. Such a practice would be good for the officials, as well as the public. Under democratic processes all elected officials return to their constituents for reelection and it is a good thing for them. Our founding fathers wrote into the Constitution at least one exception to this practice when they provided that "The Judges, both of the Supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their offices during good behaviour," and so forth—article III, section 1. This provision has been construed as vesting in Federal judges, upon appointment and confirmation, a life term on the bench, subject to be removed for cause only. Historians have referred to the establishment of the judicial branch, under the Constitution, as "an independent and coequal department of the Government." A reading of the record of the Constitutional Convention clearly shows that it was the intention of framers of the Constitution to make the judges of the Federal courts absolutely independent of the legislative or executive departments. That is the reason for providing that appointees to these courts should hold office during good behavior and that they have a fixed salary which could not be increased or diminished so as to affect the persons actually in office at the time.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Federal judiciary was designed to be free and independent of the other branches of government. In the past decade, or more, we have seen the intrusion of the executive department in the judicial contrary to the expressed intent of the Constitution. Both the Supreme Court and the inferior courts are packed with New Deal appointees who have furthered the cause of New Deal legislation. To a considerable degree they have assumed legislative functions.

Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling that the American people do not realize that these same New Deal appointees will be called upon to decide the legality of laws passed by a Republican Congress. My mail indicates that the people think that economic and political order will flow from the acts of this Congress alone, but as Mr. Dooley would say, "It ain't so," and certainly it is not with the present partisan make-up of these courts. Mr. David Lawrence has well said "the truth is the New Deal lives on in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the justices are appointed for life." Again, Mr. Speaker, I quote Mr. Lawrence from a recent editorial:

> This is the Court which insists on writing legislation by employing the fiction that it is merely interpreting legislation.
> This is the Court which has brought upon the Nation an economic crisis by an ambiguously worded and irresponsible decision in the portal-to-portal case.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that one way to cure existing abuses is to fix a definite term of office for each Federal judge. Let us get back to fundamentals. These appointees should be required to return periodically for confirmation by representatives of the people, which is the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution and to carry out the ideas expressed herein.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I insert at this point a copy of my resolution:

> Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the terms of office of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and inferior courts
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:
> "SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall be appointed for a term of 10 years. The judges shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.
> "SEC. 2. The term of each judge holding office on the date of ratification of this article shall expire December 31, 1948, or 10 years after the date of his taking the oath of office, whichever date is the later.
> "SEC. 3. Sections 1 and 2 of this article shall not affect the term of any judge retired prior to the date of ratification of this article.
> "SEC. 4. Section 1 of this article shall be in lieu of section 1 of article III.
> "SEC. 5. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission."

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in my remarks a pertinent editorial which appeared in one of my fine daily newspapers, the Kenosha Evening News, of January 24, 1947. It covers the subject matter of my resolution and the writer was not aware that my resolution was being prepared.

POWERFUL JUDGES

There is some talk in Washington, stirred up by David Lawrence, of a term limit for Federal judges, including those of the Supreme Court. It is believed by some lawyers and legislators that recent decisions in a few courts reflect an irresponsible spirit which may be laid to the fact that too great a sense of security is felt by the judges, and that the passage of legislation designed to set a definite term, with possible reappointment by the President, might be one way of improving this situation.

It is necessary for the people to have confidence in their courts, and to believe that decisions are governed by a strict interpretation of the law, rather than by political expediency. This is true of all courts, but perhaps it shows more plainly in the case of the highest ones.

The theory of security of tenure is that, by removing from a judge the necessity of running for election he is set free from all considerations save those of interpreting law. But all human institutions need to be reconsidered at intervals. Perhaps people should think about judicial tenure a little.

Mr. Speaker, if my resolution is adopted and the Constitution amended it will result eventually in a strengthened Federal judiciary. Judges are human beings and when called upon for a report of their stewardships will more readily meet the full responsibilities of their offices. Certainly members of these courts realize the value of the human touch. Mr. Justice Brewer once said:

> It is a mistake to suppose that the Supreme Court is either honored or helped by being spoken of as beyond criticism. On the contrary, the life and character of its justices should be the objects of constant watchfulness by all, and its judgments subject to the freest criticism. The time is past in the history of the world when any living man or body can be set on a pedestal and decorated with a halo. True, criticisms may be, like their authors, devoid of good taste, but better all sorts of criticism than no criticism at all. The moving waters are full of life and health; only in the still waters is stagnation and death.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this Nation expect and demand that our courts be free from prejudice, bias, and political influence. There is need for correction of abuses in our Federal court system. Yes, indeed, "all human institutions need to be reconsidered at intervals." My resolution is a step in that direction.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include as a part of my remarks a pertinent editorial that appeared in the Washington Post, on last Saturday, February 1, 1947, entitled "To Correct the Court":

TO CORRECT THE COURT

Congress is tearing its hair over the portal-to-portal pay issue without seeming to get much nearer to a solution. One reason, we think, is the indirectness of the approaches about which most of the discussion centers. Congress is trying to find means of overcoming the disastrous effects of a fait accompli instead of challenging the fait accompli itself. Its reason for doing so is the fact that this fait accompli is a decision of the Supreme Court. Ordinarily that would be a sound and conclusive reason. But in the present instance we cannot help thinking that correction of the court's blunder by a simple and direct act of Congress would be justifiable.

The nub of the situation is this: Congress passed the Fair Labor Standards Act without carefully defining the word "workweek." By a series of decisions, each going further than the previous one, the Court has given "workweek" a ridiculous legal meaning which no Congress at any time would have written into the law. How ridiculous that meaning is may be seen from the proceedings out in Detroit where Judge Picard is trying to apply it to the working hours of the employees of the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. One of the issues with which the judge is wrestling is how many feet a workman can walk in a minute. Another is whether it takes 6, 7, or 8 seconds to put a cot on a finger. Such are the imponderable trivia that the Supreme Court wove into its concept of the "workweek."

This foolish effort to account for every minute that workmen spend in changing their clothes, walking into factories, and otherwise preparing to work, flies in the face of all experience. Such time has not been included in the workweek, as the term has been heretofore understood by both employers and employees, because of the infeasibility of measuring it and of supervising employees before they are actually at their work stations. Assistant Attorney General Sonnett made a telling point when he argued before Judge Picard that "the keeping of records of short periods of time would require close and distasteful surveillance of the activities of workmen," thus creating friction and disrupting industrial peace contrary to the basic purpose of the act. We have only to rely upon common sense to see that if Congress had intended thus to change the meaning of "workweek" it would have said so specifically.

The obvious remedy, then, is to give "workweek," as used in the statute, the meaning it originally had in each industry. In the case of industries where employees are organized, "workweek" would mean what the employer and union had agreed upon in their contracts. In the unorganized industries, custom would govern, unless there was evidence that employers were abusing custom as a means of evading the payment of overtime for hours of work in excess of 40 per week. The amazing thing is that the Supreme Court has ignored customs and upset bargained contracts to write its own arbitrary view of "workweek" into the law.

Some have objected to this direct remedy on the ground that it retroactively undercuts claims for back pay that have already accrued. But those claims exist only in the minds of judges who have made a travesty of the law. Certainly those claims had no prior reality in the minds of employees, for the avalanche of suits for back pay was unloosed only after the Court embodied its reckless pronouncement in the Mount Clemens opinion. Incidentally, that far-fetched pronouncement was not necessary to support the actual decision handed down.

Must Congress accept this distorted view of its language as the last word? It seems to us that reason and justice leave to Congress an undeniable right to say for itself what it meant by "workweek" in the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Supreme Court made a bad guess. Congress can correct that guess. It could not do so, of course, if a constitutional issue were at stake. But this is simply a question of carrying out the will of Congress, and on that question we think Congress itself is the best authority.

It is true that the Court might hold an act of correcting its blunder to be unconstitutional. But any such arbitrary exercise of power would be a further blow to its prestige, and the confusion resulting from such a decision would scarcely be worse than the present mess. We think there would be a moral advantage, moreover, in having the Court's abuse of power rebuked in a direct and forthright fashion. Substitution of judicial policies for the will of Congress has become all too common. If, in this flagrant case, Congress should reassert its original intent, as recognized and stated on the floor of the Senate at the time by Mr. Justice (then Senator) Black, who piloted the bill to enactment, the majority faction in the Court would probably think twice before garbling legislative acts in the future.

(Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks, and include therein a newspaper editorial and a resolution.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH] is recognized for 20 minutes.

OUR NATIONAL FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, last week the Chief of the United States Forest Service issued his annual report, the first few sentences of which read as follows:

Our forests today are not supplying enough timber products. While thousands search desperately for places to live, construction of urgently needed dwellings is hampered by lack of building materials. Lumber is perhaps the No. 1 bottleneck.

The report which began with those words was released January 29. However, released at almost the same time was a statement on the housing program for 1947 issued by Frank R. Creedon, Housing Expediter, and Raymond M. Foley, National Housing Administrator. The last paragraph on page 8 of that statement contains the following:

A balance, near balance, or surplus between over-all supply and demand has been achieved for such materials as lumber, kitchen sinks.

Thus we find two agencies of our gigantic Federal Government making statements on almost the same day which are diametrically opposed to one another. Whose statement shall we accept as the fact?

I question the complete objectivity of both statements because each is made to support a purpose or a point of view. Obviously the Housing Expediter and the head of the National Housing Administration would like the people to feel that things are going well in the field of housing, and that many of the difficulties have been overcome. The motive behind the statement made by the Chief Forester is not quite so obvious, although a careful reading of his annual report leads me to the conclusion that the Forester would frighten us into placing in the hands of the Forest Service the complete regulation of all growing trees, whether they stand on privately owned lands, or in the public domain. The two statements I have just quoted are plain and simple statements. Neither is surrounded by any qualifying language. One says lumber supply has reached or exceeded the demand for lumber. The other statement says the shortage of lumber is number one bottleneck in the housing program. Therefore, one statement must be correct, and the other one incorrect.

The question of lumber supply is of considerable national interest right now. The question is also of immediate concern to me, since I represent a district in which the lumber manufacturing business is our most important industry. I have therefore devoted some study to the question and I have reached the conclusion that the statements made by Mr. Creedon and Mr. Foley are correct, and that the statement of Mr. Lyle Watts, Chief Forester, is incorrect. Lumber production is apparently in adequate volume. Such shortages as still exist are chargeable to the recent severe car shortages and strikes in the shipping industry.

Having discovered what I consider an inaccuracy in the very beginning of the Chief Forester's annual report, I then did some checking on his further statement that—

Sufficient manpower, equipment, and sawmill capacity, no doubt, will be available in the next few years for a much larger output of lumber, but the increasing scarcity of good timber will continue to limit the level of production.

Supporting that statement, he says:

In 36 years the Nation's woodpile has been reduced by 44 percent.

To arrive at that figure, Mr. Watts uses an estimate made by the Bureau of Corporations, in 1909, that the total inventory of standing timber in the United States at that time was 2,826,000,000,000 board feet. I find, however, that there were several other authoritative timber-inventory estimates made along about that time. The Bureau of the Census in 1900 estimated the timber supply at 1,390,000,000,000 board feet. The American Lumberman, the national magazine devoted to the lumber industry, estimated the total standing supply as being 1,970,000,000,000 board feet in 1905. Perhaps the best and most reasonable estimate made shortly after the turn of the century was that by a forest authority by the name of Fernow, in 1902, who placed the standing timber supply at 2,000,000,000,000 board feet. Had the Chief Forester used one of those estimates, the percentage figure would have been much smaller, and the case in support of his premise, that our forests are rapidly vanishing, would have been very much weaker.

As a matter of fact, if we use Forest Service figures alone, we find that the Nation's supply of standing sawtimber has been steadily increasing for the past 13 years in every region of the United States except the far West, where losses in overmature, virgin timber have largely offset new growth. In the well-known Copeland report submitted to the Seventy-third Congress, we have the following Forest Service estimates of our standing sawtimber, which I have compared with the basic forest statistics released by the Forest Service in July 1946. The 1946 report shows the status on January 1, 1945:

Region	Saw-timber volume, million board feet, 1933	Saw-timber volume, million board feet, 1945
New England	57,875	58,197
Middle Atlantic	26,150	62,045
Lake	35,887	50,710
Central	34,662	43,747
Plains		5,780
South	199,297	337,987
West coast	1,041,628	858,459
North Rocky Mountains	146,388	127,229
South Rocky Mountains	125,956	56,868
Total	1,667,803	1,600,972

These figures certainly do not bear out the contention of the Forest Service that our saw-timber supply is being depleted rapidly. As a matter of fact, if I were to use the Forest Service figures for 1936, the picture would be even more confusing.

At that time the Forest Service said we had 1,763,651,000,000 board feet—95,848,000,000 feet more than in 1923.

A third of a century ago, the then Chief Forester of the United States, referring to the relatively short time that this well-forested continent had been occupied by our people, asserted:

> We have all but reached the end of these forests * * *. We have reached the point where the growth of our forests is but one-third of the annual cut, while we have in store timber enough for only 20 or 30 years at our present rate of use.

On the basis of such premises, he prophesied an inevitable timber famine which would touch every man.

Again, as recently as 1920, a Senate select committee, with the advice of the United States Forest Service, published a prophecy of exhaustion of the southern pineries within 15 or 20 years. The years themselves have been fulfilled, but not these visions of necessity and want. In fact, the South is contributing to the Nation's urgent needs today a greater total volume of lumber and timber products than is any other region of the United States, and there is no indication that the South will ever cease to be a major source of supply of forest products.

I expect in the not-too-distant future to see a national saw-timber growth in this country which will substantially exceed the present prevailing national saw-timber use. In the last 10 years, by Forest Service estimate, it has increased from 32,033,000,000,000 board feet to 35,301,000,000,000 board-feet annually. Cubic foot growth and drain are already nearly in balance. I expect to see a substantial reduction in our excessive losses of forests by fire, insects, and disease; and a gradual restoration and improvement of our so-called forest capital; and I expect to see this accomplished in the woods, and not in Congress. This expectation, if realized, will be the result of more effective forest protection and improved forest practices, sustained by the production of an adequate supply of forest products. A prospect of the beneficent cycle of increasing production and increasing use is in sharp contrast with the old and stagnant doctrine of retrenchment and conservation by nonuse of forest products. To a generation instructed in agricultural conservation to be achieved by benefit payments for nonproduction or nonuse, conservation through liberal production and liberal use may seem paradoxical.

My faith in this prophecy is supported on the one hand by the constant flow of new uses for wood and cellulose, to supplement, rather than supplant, present uses; and on the other hand by the safe assumption that, given a reasonable chance, trees will grow, will reproduce themselves, and need only simple and inexpensive encouragement to provide continuous timber crops.

As long as this Nation had vast uncut forests into which man had scarcely penetrated, there was little chance for the small wood-lot owner to market his logs with profit. Today that situation has changed. The small wood-lot owner is becoming a major source for our forest products.

Twenty years ago, it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to point out to such owners that there was money in growing trees. Consequently, most of the spasmodic educational programs that have been attempted have talked much about national and social values in growing trees. They have been strong on generalities, but weak on appealing to the profit motive that lies deep in every one of us.

Today we can teach practical forestry by telling landowners, truthfully, that here is an opportunity for them. There is money to be made by growing a tree crop. Today there is this personal motive which will give point and purpose to mass education in forest practices. Indeed, something new has been added. That something new is the product of economics, not of coercion.

There are strong forces in industry and in agriculture which support this point of view. I am glad to note that the Chief Forester's report offers some proof of it. The influence and resources of our Government should support a major program to see to it that every woodland owner learns of this opportunity, and how best to take advantage of it.

We will never have unified action in solving our forest problems if we constantly have the specter of Federal regulation dividing our strength. Industry is opposed to regulation. So, I am convinced, is agriculture. So is the majority of all private woodland owners. They need, and should have, the understanding assistance of our splendid Forest Service.

As I have said, the forces of economics are with us, while yesterday they were against us. We have at last come upon a time when the forests of this country may be operated as they should always have been operated, as a continuous and perpetual national resource of our 140,000,000 people. We can now make common effort between public and private ownership in a program that will benefit both the private timber owner and operator and all the people who may be said to be the owners of that timber, title to which is in the Government. Cooperative effort is the watchword of today in forestry and forest management.

I am not in accord with the proposition that it is necessary for the Government of the United States to assume a domination, regulation, and control over the privately owned timberlands which in the last analysis is tantamount to ownership. I believe it is unnecessary.

But we can have cooperative effort. There is no reason today why we should not have it. We have it out in my State of Oregon to a great degree at the present time. We have out there today two contending agencies of the Government, and they get along pretty well. We have the Interior Department on one side and the Department of Agriculture on the other. And, in all truth, I am strongly inclined to believe that a little competition in government is just as valuable as a little competition in private industry. I do not like monopoly anywhere; and that goes for inside of government as well as outside. With continuing departmental competition out there, and with big ownership and little ownership, State ownership and county ownership, we are doing a pretty good job of working out our problems of cooperative management in the field of fire prevention and suppression, in the field of sustained yield, although, as elsewhere, those words have not yet wholly become reality.

We do have, however, the first major requisite. We have a public opinion that believes in sustained-yield management. And we have Government officials who believe in it and seek to practice it, and we have private forest owners and operators who join wholeheartedly in that belief. You cannot beat that kind of an aggregation, and you can leave the problem where it belongs, in the cooperative hands of all.

I hope that in the days to come there will be a more intense study of the problems incident to forest growing, cutting, and regrowing; a more intensive study of how to control that great enemy, the fire demon. I hope, as studies progress, there will be a free exchange of opinions and conclusions and experience. That is a field where we must not be selfish.

I like to think that our States are still sovereign units of this country. I like to believe that self-government can remain a fact and that it need not be by remote control. I like to think that the people of this country are, each of them, independent entities, and that they can understand and do understand what is best for themselves. And I like to think that the problems arising within a State can be solved within that State, by the people thereof.

Even if that solution be perhaps not quite as coldly efficient as it would be if we had one general Federal law, I still believe that the welfare of the people as a whole will be better served by that kind of a solution. It means that the people are doing the governing themselves. I would rather see mistakes made by the people governing themselves than to have them submit to the control of those who have set themselves up as being the guardians of, and the thinkers for, the people under that "savior complex" that we find abroad today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] is recognized for 15 minutes.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, as the Members of Congress well know, the hearings before the Committee for Reciprocity Information are ended.

Agriculture, business, and labor have been given a final chance, a death-bed opportunity, to voice their protest against certain contemplated cuts in tariff duties. These cuts may be deep, as great as 50 percent of the tariff standards as of this day.

It was all a part of the mumbo-jumbo of the so-called reciprocal trade agreements program.

Beautiful word, "reciprocity." But it doesn't mean what the public has been deceived into thinking it does. It now means, under State Department interpretations, that we grant concessions to the fifty-odd nations of the world and none of them grant us anything in return, save one—and from that one hardly anything, since it gets nothing from us it does not have to share with all of the rest of the world.

So these international covenants are really give-away agreements. That is what they really should be called. In the 27 or 28 agreements now in effect, our State Department has consistently cut tariffs for everybody—without compensating cuts in our favor from any other nation save one. Silly, you say, but it is nevertheless true.

In view of this anomalous situation, a peek at the inner workings of this absurd tariff-slashing procedure is in order. Let us pull the curtain aside and take a look at that which is there occurring, or rather at what has just occurred, in the hearing rooms of the so-called Committee on Reciprocity Information.

And what we see there is, indeed, a melancholy march of nearly 1,000 representatives of American agriculture, business, and labor—a pitiful parade of the condemned. For these good American citizens, it was a sort of a "last mile."

But it is not in Washington where the ax will finally fall. It is at Geneva, Switzerland, where, later on in the year, the actual guillotining will occur. These preceding hearings constitute but a scenery-setting preliminary. That these people, and the hundreds of thousands of Americans they represent, march so docilely to slaughter is proof positive of what a carefully planned 13-year propaganda build-up can accomplish; a propaganda build-up which has misled millions of American people into believing that there is something magically good, incomprehensively wonderful, about it all.

I intend to ask for a sweeping investigation of this propaganda, for, indeed, the American people are entitled to know the truth.

This propaganda emanates from the State Department and it is intended to be and is the cover-up of the entire give-away trade-agreements program. To date, it has succeeded beyond the wildest dreams of those who contrived it.

These artful architects of manufactured opinion have built a towering edifice, a monument to their propaganda methods. But no structure can be sounder than the foundation upon which it is builded—and the foundation of this one is false and the superstructure is spurious.

When the truth is told and the facts become known, the trade-agreements program will be revealed as something more than a sham and a failure; it is no less than a plot to merge American economy with that of the world. This, despite an inevitable destruction of our standard of living, our high wage scales, and our most favorable working conditions, in all of which is inextricably involved the American way of life.

This monstrosity of managed propaganda is a threat to the welfare and prosperity of every man, woman, and child in America. Its effectiveness must be checked—or this magnificent American economy which we have spent 150 years in building may be destroyed in a day.

No wonder that fear was the prevailing emotion of the representatives of agriculture, business, and labor as they shuffled in and out of the subcommittee hearing rooms of this so-called Committee for Reciprocity Information, committeemen who "front" for smarter men who do not bother to attend.

Now that these highly dramatized so-called hearings of the Committee on Reciprocity Information are over, a heavy velvet curtain has descended upon the State Department's conference rooms to shield from public gaze the feverish activity which is now being carried on there in preparation for the Geneva Convention.

The American people will not know what is to be dished out to them until these masters of the cuisine ring the dinner bell. Labor and business and agriculture will learn the worst—only after the die has been cast.

And the worst can happen at Geneva when "the boys" of our State Department sit down with representatives of some 18 other nations and begin to barter—in secrecy—the economy of these United States, cloaked, as they hope to be, in their pursuit of their planned objectives by the most successfully designed blackout of public information the world has ever known.

Are we going to stand idly by and permit this cunningly conceived, super-duper propaganda campaign to achieve its objective—the lulling of the American people into quiescence as the last vestige of the American protective-tariff system is wiped from our statute books?

Congress should be fully informed in respect to the scope and intensity, yes, the deceit and duplicity of this 13-year propaganda build-up by the State Department.

The countless press releases.

The officially arranged speeches.

The cleverly contrived radio broadcasts, over Nation-wide hook-ups and local stations.

The pamphlets and booklets, reprints of speeches, "canned" editorials, radio platters, and transcriptions.

All these are but a part of a master plan to sanctify a program, the full implications of which are as yet unknown to the American public.

So successful has all this been that today, to question an aspect of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is, in the estimation of thousands, a sacrilege, no less.

Thus have we witnessed the creation of a cult, the doctrinaires of which, secure behind their facade of propaganda, think they are effectively insulated against what is a rapidly rising tide of protesting opinion.

Because the public must be informed of what is going on—as well as of what may happen—it is our duty to dispel the clouds of propaganda and reveal the truth.

When the full truth is made manifest, it will be revealed that the fundamental issue which has been successfully obscured to date is that of free trade versus protectionism, an issue which the people have never been permitted to pass on since the enactment of the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

The danger at Geneva is in a reckless disregard of America's welfare, a disposition to ignore American public opinion, a determination to substitute international control for domestic control of the flow of goods into and out of the United States.

This threat is imminent and real.

I submit that the economy of the United States is too vital a matter to be permitted to rest in the unrestrained hands of officials who are wedded to such ideas.

That the Department's Economic Division has grown by leaps and bounds in preparation for its jaunt to Geneva is no secret. Scores of economists have been recruited from other governmental agencies and divisions, which, as a result of partial postwar diminution of activities, are reducing personnel. The Economic Division has become a cherished haven of refuge for those who should be headed for private life.

Business and labor and agriculture have every reason for their fears, for the Federal Government in the so-called Reciprocity Information Committee hearings has, in effect, said to them: "All right, Mr. Businessman, or Mr. Farmer, or Mr. Worker, you and your organization have had a chance to file a brief and we have given you a few additional minutes to orally supplement that brief, but from now on we do not need you any more. Go on home now, and we will do the rest."

That is the papa-knows-best doctrine at its worst.

Secrecy always begets fear. Why should there be any secrecy in respect to things that have to do with the bread and butter of life? Why should this sense of impending disaster be permitted to develop in the hearts of the job makers and the job holders of America, the active partners in the building of our American way of life?

The American people are alarmed when they see all of America's eggs in one basket and that basket in hands alien to the plow, hands uncalloused by toil at the workbench, hands which were never held to foreheads that throb with pay-roll obligations and production responsibilities.

Yet those are the types of hands which have wrought the greatness which is America's. Those are the hands which have created the highest standard of living in the world, paid the highest wages the world has ever known, developed the best working conditions on this earth.

Those hands and the good commonsense minds that actuate them are no longer important in the calculations of the State Department's tariff slashers. Theirs is the larger, the bigger world viewpoint. It gives no consideration to the little factory in Wichita, the little shop in Keokuk, or the rose-clad motel in Merced, the farm in Fresno, the orchards in Oregon.

Only an incredible bureaucracy could conceive such a plan of action as this gigantic trade-agreements operation and dare to carry it into execution—yet it is an international control of the flow of goods into and out of the United States of which they continue to dream.

No wonder the toilers and builders of these United States constituted a melancholy procession as they passed in review before these subcommittees, grasping at the final few minutes which were doled out to them, as drowning men grasp at straws.

They see the welfare of the American people hanging in the balance, yet the people themselves remain quite ignorant of the peril that is theirs. Lulled into a false sense of security by this pitiless propaganda, the American people pursue their mirth and their employments quite unmindful of the disaster which stalks them.

But the American agriculturist, businessman, and worker—the melancholy marchers—visualize the departure—Geneva bound—of a boatload—maybe many boatloads—of smug diplomats, allwise economists, of experts, theorists, specialists, and what-nots, sailing gayly from our shores to barter away our economy, not in the interest of American prosperity, our standard of living, the welfare of our people, but in the interest of world uplift, of international "do-gooding," of something quite different from anything we have ever known before.

I do not like the atmosphere of this kind of international conference. I fear their objectives. I do not trust the ones who are to represent us there. There is too much secrecy and intrigue. If there is any good in it, why cannot it be done in sight of all—in recognition of the principle of the open covenant openly arrived at.

I do not want the welfare of America to be bartered away on foreign soil in between a round of cocktail parties, diplomatic receptions, teas, and state dinners. The power of the pen may be mightier than the sword—but the napkin at a state dinner puts them both to shame.

Many Members of this Congress remember how, after World War I, when we were caught with our tariff guards down, American markets were flooded with foreign goods. We called it dumping then. Unemployment and idleness resulted with such swiftness that the President was compelled to call a special session of Congress to enact an emergency tariff law. Only by this and the enactment of antidumping acts were we able to preserve the American standard of living and protect our economy against the then threatened disaster.

Yet today—and this is a fact and not a bit of fancy—the cumulative effect of the existing trade agreements has been to reduce our present-day tariffs to levels lower than those of the Underwood tariff-for-revenue-only act of 1913. And, let it be remembered, it was the low-tariff schedules of the Underwood Act which produced the disastrous economic conditions following World War I which I have just recalled to you.

With these lessons before us, should we rush to cut our tariffs an additional 50 percent—without waiting to see what the effect of the cuts already made is to be when normal international trading is again the vogue? Does not simple common sense require us to take a look before we cut again?

Let us suspend this orgy of tariff slashing which this silk-hatted diplomatic brigade of the State Department hopes to accomplish at Geneva until we can ascertain what is going to happen in America under our already badly battered down tariff laws when the world gets back into its production stride.

Now, as a part of this present propaganda build-up, a most alluring picture of an international trade organization, painted in the most brilliant of colors, is held up for us to gaze upon—as the answer to all of that which we fear. If it is to an international organization, in the counsels of which we will be accorded but one vote, to which we must turn for protection against dumping and kindred trade evils, the price, the sacrifice of the domestic control over imports, is too great.

No international organization, in which the United States would have but one vote, can be expected to react quickly enough to save us from the consequences of our folly as our economic house comes crashing down upon us.

Neither could we be sure that a majority of such a council would be deeply concerned over any economic disaster which might overtake us. The risk would be too great.

No, I want the American producers—the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant, and the worker—to know what is going on.

I want him present, either personally or by representation, at any conference where his fate is at stake. I want him in the confidence of his Government, not held at arm's length. I want him continuously at hand to give constant counsel and advice. I want him free, untrammeled and vocal to tell the rest of us about it if he thinks anything is being done which may result in harm to him, to the American people of whom he is a part, for, indeed is this not his Government? His country?

I want an end to secrecy.

I want the American people to know the facts so that the truth can make them free.

COPPER

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the afternoon when the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON] was addressing the House, I raised a few questions concerning the bill which the gentleman said he was introducing. His time was limited and he was unable to give a full explanation of the plans he had to relieve the copper shortage in our country. I was distressed when he suggested that a repeal of the 4-cents-per-pound duty on copper would be one of the solutions he would offer. I regret very much to see that offered as a solution and certainly would greatly regret to see that step taken.

I found myself agreeing with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PATTERSON] in the opening sentences of his remarks today, wherein he indicated the importance of copper, both in our war and peacetime economy. He has certainly appraised this strategically important metal correctly. I can well understand what it means to his district and to all the manufacturing East. I was alarmed, however, to hear the one solution to our present copper shortage problem which the gentleman had time to announce on the floor. When I questioned him, thus helping to deprive him of the time necessary to complete his speech, he said he had another solution to offer, which will be contained in the extension of his remarks. I might possibly agree with him in that other solution, if I knew precisely what it is.

Yes; I am aware that there is a shortage of copper right now of home production, and I am willing to take some steps to relieve the situation, but not the extreme measure of repealing the 4-cents-per-pound duty which the gentleman from Connecticut proposes. When asked whether he had considered what the removal of the 4-cents-per-pound duty on copper would mean to the copper camps of the West, he said he had taken that into consideration. I wonder if he has taken it fully into consideration?

Arizona has a copper star in the heart of the State flag. Arizona leads all the States of the Union in the production of the red metal. Arizona strained her mineral resources to the limit and produced for war, not only the recent war but the First World War, and let it be remembered that all the great volume of copper produced in Arizona for World War II, which equaled in volume the pre-war production, cost Uncle Sam only 12 cents per pound, as that was the pegged price of copper during the war period. Oh, yes, I know—there was a copper subsidy paid during the war ranging from 1 to 5 cents per pound, but the great bulk of the war copper cost the Government only 12 cents a pound. That was the copper that won the war.

There was not quite enough of the 12 cents per pound copper to serve the war, so a production subsidy of as much as 5 cents extra per pound brought out additional supplies of copper from our high-cost mines. I had hoped the gentleman might propose relieving the domestic shortage in somewhat the same way we relieved the wartime shortage, and I hope that such is that alternate plan of which we have not had explanation. There is a way to do it without his drastic proposal.

I have lived in the State of Arizona a third of a century. I know to what great extent the economy and the prosperity of that State depends upon our copper production, which in turn depends upon the price of copper. During the 35 years of statehood for the youngest State in the Union, Arizona's revenues for State and local government have been derived largely from the mining industry, of which copper is the chief. Wages of copper miners have been in general fairly good, but relatively not so good now. Mining wages vary according to the price of copper, by a sliding scale. As the price of copper goes up, wages are increased accordingly. If the price of copper drops, wages fall correspondingly. I traveled over the State of Arizona during the first half of the thirties—during the depression—and my heart was saddened by the ghost towns to be seen on every hand, which towns had been prosperous mining camps a few years earlier. Almost the entire population of some of those mining camps were on relief about 1932 and 1933. The cost to this Government for supporting those populations was enormous. Such is one reason why I never want to see that happen again.

As I explained to the gentleman from Connecticut very briefly, I believe that the removal of the 4-cents-per-pound duty on copper would close every copper camp in America, for I know none that can produce copper as cheaply as it can be produced in South America with peon labor. That 4-cents-per-pound duty marks the difference between prosperous western cities buying eagerly every manufactured article and stagnant communities with people on relief.

The gentleman speaks touchingly of furnishing employment to GI's. Yes; I am interested in furnishing employment to GI's in mining camps of the West and manufacturing centers of the East.

In a strong brief submitted by the Arizona Copper Tariff Board opposing any reduction in the existing 4-cents-per-pound excise tax on foreign copper, the opposing argument was summarized as follows:

1. We oppose any reduction in the existing import duty on copper for the same basic reasons that impelled Congress to impose the excise tax in 1932, and thereafter to extend its effective period several times (in 1933, 1935, 1937, 1939).

The same facts which were presented to the Seventy-sixth Congress on this subject are pertinent today, plus the additional and very grave ones we have learned from World War II.

2. The Nation must not be without an adequate metal supply. Copper is the most vital of such metals because of its inherent properties and varied uses. Secretary of War Patterson has stated:

"An army without copper would be an army without speed, maneuverability, fire power or communications. It would not last a day in battle."

3. To assure national security and safety is the paramount duty of every Government official. It is also the concern of every citizen.

World War II has taught us that the nation best fitted to survive in this machine age is the one best supplied with metals.

4. To a great degree World War II was a metal war. Metals in enormous quantities were an absolute necessity. Copper played a very vital role, particularly in electrically controlled mechanisms, in communications, in the manufacture of shells, etc.

5. We can supply our own domestic copper requirements if the price permits:

A. Full operation of our mines.

B. Development of new ore bodies.

(NOTE.—Within the past year the existence of a new copper-ore body in this State has been proved by drilling to contain upwards of 100,000,000 tons of recoverable ore.)

C. Mining of fringe or marginal ores.

D. Production of copper from ores of below-average grade through advanced mining and metallurgical practices.

6. Copper production is a primary industry in Arizona. That industry cannot exist in this State, nor, indeed, in the United States, if the tariff on foreign copper is removed because of:

A. Much lower production costs abroad resulting from:

(a) Higher-grade ores.

(b) Greater ore reserves.

(c) Low-cost peon labor.

(d) Lower taxes and overhead.

(e) Less workmen's compensation, social security, etc.

(f) Lower standards of living.

7. No injury is done our Nation by development of its mineral resources, and the steady employment of American workmen, especially when the commodity (copper) is absolutely indispensable in wartimes—and vitally important in peace.

8. The Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act directs the stock-pile board to purchase, where possible, "to encourage the conservation and development of sources of these materials within the United States * * *" and "it is the policy of the Congress and the purpose and intent of this act to provide for the acquisition and retention of stocks of these materials within the United States."

Obviously, this mandate cannot be followed if the excise tax is removed because:

A. Recent wage increases, plus higher materials costs, have added about 6 cents per pound to production costs of copper in Arizona.

B. Any reduction in the tariff will have the effect of further increases in costs.

C, A and B above, plus lower efficiency of the scarce mining labor, will result in prohibitive costs with their resultant shut-down of copper properties.

9. Practically all of Arizona's copper-producing communities are one-industry towns. They are solely dependent upon copper mining. The shut-down of the mines means disaster, not only to the miners and businessmen of the community, but in varying degrees to the State and Nation.

10. Duty-free copper means curtailed domestic production. This, in turn, retards recovery and reconversion, and endangers our national security.

11. Excise tax does not necessarily increase copper prices.

12. Excise tax is not a barrier to reciprocal trade.

13. It is our understanding that the Trade Agreement Act requires a positive finding of fact that the existing duty is unduly burdensome upon, or restricts the foreign trade of the United States. We submit that no such finding can in good conscience be made with respect to the excise tax on imported copper.

14. The United States is completely self-contained with respect to its copper resources, production and needs, provided its own copper mines are safeguarded from ruinous undercutting of prices through the duty-free importation of cheap-labor copper.

15. Finally, to whom do we owe assistance or allegiance, foreign governments and peoples, or our own Nation and the returned veterans?

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, in the midst of the complicated situations of life and the unsolved problems of the world, deliver Thy servants from any sense of futility. Let them feel the support of the prayers of hosts of true patriots throughout this land and, above all, the uplift of the everlasting arms. Cause them to understand that God's power has never been obstructed by difficulties, nor His love limited by the confusion of human plans. May the very failure of man's best resources impel us toward the resources of God Cleanse our hearts of selfishness. Grant that all questions immediately before us may be made so plain that we shall have no forebodings as we make our decision, nor vain regrets after it is made. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION PROGRAM—PETITION

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter in the nature of a petition from members of the Mountrail Electric Cooperative, Inc., relating to the rural electrification program.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You have doubtless read the recent statements of Congressman TABER with regard to the rural electrification program. He is quoted as saying the REA program has been getting three or four times too much money, that it ought to be put on a "business basis," and that he sees no need for continuing the Government agency.

This project has 420 miles of line under construction, which will serve approximately 700 members. We have 1,300 applicants who want service at once. With the least encouragement we could have 1,600 applicants, for we will ultimately serve some 2,000 farm families. All farmers now want electric service.

REA is cutting down our loan applications because of insufficient loan authorizations. Our request for an allotment for 1947 has not yet been approved. We have never had too much money. There is always a lag between the time you vote the authorization and the time we get it spent, but we can't turn a tap until we get the authorization.

As to the program being put on a business basis, less than one-half of 1 percent of all REA loans are delinquent, and they are paid ahead several million dollars. The Government is making enough clear profit on the money loaned to us over cost to the Government to more than cover the cost of administration. What could be a better "business basis"?

Barely half of the American farms have electricity today. If the agency were eliminated, the program would be wrecked. The biggest bottleneck today is the lack of enough REA personnel to keep the accelerated work moving.

One more thing. We don't want the right of the projects to generate and transmit their own power destroyed. This right helps us get better rates. Also, where power is available from the dams, we want the lines built to deliver it to us and others.

We extend to you an invitation to come out and visit us at your earliest convenience and see our problems first-hand.

We thank you for the splendid support you have given REA in the past, and we are going to count on you more than ever before to take the lead in carrying our program forward.

Yours truly,

Mountrail Electric Cooperative, Inc.,
Forreuf N. Peterson, M. B. Bien,
E. L. Dekker, Selmer M. Gandrud,
Henry Strobeck, Leonard Texel,
Harold J. Nahr, Edna Hermanson.

RESOLUTIONS OF SENIOR CITIZENS PENSION LEAGUE OF IDAHO

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to two resolutions which have been adopted and addressed to this body by the Senior Citizens Pension League of Idaho. They have been transmitted to me by Mr. C. E. Page, of Boise, Idaho, an official of that league. The resolutions are very brief, and I shall read them. They consist of one sentence each.

No. 1. We respectfully ask both the House and the Senate to pass a law to tax unearned income.

No. 2. We respectfully ask the Senate to establish a luncheon period so the Senate Members will not miss important legislation by being absent in the dining room.

Mr. President, I recall that on various occasions different Members of this body have mentioned the question of a luncheon period, and it would seem to me that when, as the result of discussion, a group in Boise, Idaho—and, I assure my colleagues, without any urging from me—have seen fit to address a resolution to the Senate asking that arrangements be made for a luncheon period, it is a matter of concern, and must be, throughout the country generally.

I subscribe to the idea, Mr. President, that arrangements should be made for a definite luncheon period, with the Senate possibly convening earlier in the morning, and having a definite time to eat, so that Senators may not be necessarily absent from the floor for that purpose.

Matters which come before this body are of too grave a nature to receive the consideration of only a small number of the Senators, as is too often the case during the period from 12 o'clock to 1:30.

TECHNOLOGICAL AND SCIENTIFIC INFORMATION

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the coordination of agencies disseminating technological and scientific information, and for the more efficient and orderly administration of a program to make the discoveries of engineers, inventors, scientists, and technicians more readily available to American industry and business. I ask unanimous consent that a joint release by myself and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] in connection with the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas (for himself and Mr. AIKEN) will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the joint release will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 493) to provide for the coordination of agencies disseminating technological and scientific information, and for the more efficient and orderly administration of a program to make the discoveries of engineers, inventors, scientists, and technicians more readily available to American industry and business, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT (for himself and Mr. AIKEN) was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The joint release presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT (for himself and Mr. AIKEN) is as follows:

Senators J. W. FULBRIGHT and GEORGE D. AIKEN today introduced a bill providing for the orderly administration of a program to make the discoveries of engineers, inventors, scientists, and technicians more readily available to American industry and business, particularly to small enterprise. It provides a peacetime charter for a businessmen's clearinghouse of technical information, by authorizing the Department of Commerce to continue certain services which have been tested by wartime and postwar experience and found to be needed and demanded by American business.

More than ever before, leadership in industry and business depends upon leadership in technology and, with rising prices, the preservation of the American standards of living depends upon the ability of industry to reduce its cost through the application of technological development, and the development of new techniques. Yet, perhaps, never has it been so difficult as now for the average small manufacturer to keep pace with technology. The bill is designed to meet this situation, molding existing Government facilities into a technical service to business, and providing small business in particular with access to the latest technological developments.

Through channels which the businessman has long used in securing data on foreign and domestic markets, he will obtain, with minimum effort and confusion, technical information originating in all Government departments. In addition to providing for utilization of current Government-sponsored technology, the bill authorizes the continued coordination and dissemination of the backlog of information concerning wartime developments both at home and abroad, as military security permits. Despite the relatively insignificant research directed toward civilian industrial problems, all phases of governmental research, including purely military development, have resulted in products and processes which should be made readily available to industry, bringing about wider public use with fuller commercial exploitation. Especially during the war, Government commitments for research increased rapidly and unless some means is found to effect a broad dissemination of such technical knowledge as can be released to the public this wealth of technological data will be lost, the average businessman denied the opportunity to use the results of research for which he pays the bill as a taxpayer.

Other sections of the bill provide for basic technical aids and services to businessmen and inventors, extends the present authorization of certain funds for research and development, and establishes regulations whereby activities under the bill should be self-sustaining, at least in part. The bill, however, contains adequate safeguards against Government competition with private enterprise, and provides that authority under the act "shall generally be exercised in a manner which will foster the development of scientific and technical services by private persons and by State and local institutions."

The basic purpose of the bill is to bring Government-sponsored research and development to contemplated projects where Government assistance or participation is essential to speedily bridging the gap between previous development and widespread public benefit.

A similar measure was introduced in the last Congress by Senator Fulbright (S. 1248). Invitations to testify or comment on the provisions of the bill at that time were submitted to interested research and trade associations, publications, patent attorneys, chambers of commerce, and other business, farm, and veterans' organizations. The testimony was generally favorable as regards both the bill's general objectives and its special provisions as incorporated by the committee after hearings. The bill was reported to the Senate during the last Congress by a unanimous vote (Senate Report 908). The bill has been further revised to conform to existing practices within the Department of Commerce with a view to utilizing all available technical information and coordinate agency activities in a program for the benefit of American industry.

CREATION OR CHARTERING OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which would establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes.

The purpose of the bill is to establish a congressional policy with respect to the creation or chartering of a private corporation by act of Congress, and to provide for the effectuation of the policy so established.

Corporations wholly owned or controlled, or to be wholly owned or controlled, by the United States or a department or agency thereof, are specifically exempt from the operation of the bill.

A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary held extensive hearings on this matter during the Seventy-ninth Congress, and upon a favorable report by the subcommittee, the full committee made an intensive study of the purposes of the bill, and reported it favorably to the Senate, with the result that it passed the Senate unanimously on June 14, 1946. Since that was so near the close of the session, the House of Representatives was unable to take any action.

The similar bill on which hearings were held in the Seventy-ninth Congress was introduced by the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB and Mr. KILGORE]. I had hoped that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] would be on the floor at this time so I could ask him to join in the introduction of the bill. I think it is important that the bill I now introduce be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary at this time.

The bill (S. 503) to establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY (for himself and Mr. REVERCOMB), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRIBUTION AND PRICING OF SUGAR

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to permit the extension of sugar rationing and allocations until March 31, 1948.

I do not have to tell the Senate that I am as anxious as anyone to see the end of all controls—particularly on foodstuff—and I am satisfied when there is a normal supply that a continuation of controls is harmful and definitely a restraint to trade. However, in the case of sugar it is different.

In World War I when controls were taken off, the price of sugar increased four times the normal amount, and this high price brought in great shipments of sugar from all over the world. But today, this cannot happen, and there is no comparison between our present sugar situation and the events I have just mentioned. Today there is no sugar anywhere in the world that is not already earmarked, allocated, and sold. No matter how high the price of sugar might go, it would not bring us any more sugar because there is no more sugar to come into this country from any place in the world. Lack of Government control would only cause higher prices and great confusion with the small users losing.

The joint resolution I am introducing continues the control of allocating and pricing of sugar until March 31, 1948, under the Secretary of Agriculture, who, however, has the privilege of taking off any part or all of these controls at any time in his judgment when the supplies of sugar are sufficient to provide for orderly marketing.

This resolution does away with all OPA and executive department controls, placing the responsibility in the Department of Agriculture without creating any new positions or employees.

In a few weeks the War Control Acts will expire and this legislation must be passed quickly to prevent the confusion I have indicated. It is my sincere hope that the controls on sugar can be taken off before the end of 1947, but in the meantime, I believe the legislation I am now proposing is absolutely necessary.

Practically all elements in the sugar field are favoring this extension.

Unless some such legislation as this is enacted, sugar rationing will end with the termination of the Second War Powers Act on March 31, 1947. With the existing world shortage, which cannot be relieved until another sugar crop is harvested, the housewife would have to bid competitively for her sugar against all industrial consumers as well as other nations of the world, and prices might well rise to very great heights.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

POSTHUMOUS AWARD TO THE LATE LT. GEN. ROY STANLEY GEIGER

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, I also introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution requesting that the President issue posthumously to the late Lt. Gen. Roy S. Geiger, of the Marine Corps, a commission as general.

General Geiger, who had served for approximately 40 years in the Marine Corps, died 2 weeks ago—7 days before he would have been placed on the retired list. Being placed on the retired list would have advanced this fine marine officer to the rank of full general under existing law which requires such advance for having been commended in combat with the enemy.

General Geiger was a career aviator in the Marine Corps, being the fourth marine officer designated as an aviator. He actively commanded an aviation group in France in World War I and commanded aviation forces on Guadalcanal and other areas in the Pacific during World War II. Later General Geiger commanded ground forces and after the death, in action, of Lieutenant General Buckner of the Army on Okinawa, General Geiger took command of the Tenth Army and completed the conquest of the island.

Few men, even in the glorious history of the fighting Marine Corps, can equal the splendid combat record of this grand old fighter.

His record through the years has been a shining example to young and old alike of this Nation, and his untimely death has been mourned in every branch of the service.

Mr. President, I wish to point out that, if made, the advancement requested in this joint resolution would involve no additional expense to the Government.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59), authorizing the President to issue posthumously to the late Roy Stanley Geiger, lieutenant general, United States Marine Corps, a commission as general, United States Marine Corps, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN WAR EXCISE TAX RATES—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senators from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY and Mr. MCCARTHY], I submit for appropriate reference an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] submitted an amendment proposing an amendment to section 2401 of the Internal Revenue Code. The Senator from Nebraska submitted the amendment at the request of myself and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY]. The amendment is very brief. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and that following it there may be printed a joint statement prepared by the junior Senator from Wisconsin and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment submitted by Mr. WHERRY for Mr. WILEY and Mr. MCCARTHY is as follows:

Amendment submitted by Mr. WILEY and Mr. MCCARTHY to the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes, viz: At the end of the bill insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) Section 2401 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended (relating to tax on furs), is hereby amended by striking out the words 'and articles of which such fur is the component material of chief value' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'and articles of which such fur is the component material comprising more than 80 percent of the value.'

"(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the 15th day following the date of enactment of this act."

The joint statement presented by Mr. WILEY (for himself and Mr. MCCARTHY) is as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT BY MR. WILEY AND MR. M'CARTHY

Section 2401 of the Revenue Act of 1941 as amended by the Revenue Act of 1943, has brought about a discrimination against the use of better quality furs for trimming of cloth garments. This factor is forcing a liquidation of the fur-farming industry.

Our high-quality furs are produced on fur farms, our main products being silver fox and mink. The entire production of silver fox and 70 percent of all mink are raised on farms. The market for these articles is confined to two sources. Approximately 65 percent of all silver foxes and 20 percent of all mink are only suitable for use as trimming on cloth garments. The balance is used in the manufacture of fur garments.

The discriminatory provision of the present tax against the use of better quality fur for trimming purposes has closed this market for our product.

Evidence of the critical condition the fur-farming industry is in today is substantiated by the fact that a large part of the 1945 crop and all of the 1946 crop is unsold. Besides the cost of production, stored furs depreciate very rapidly. Financial losses to fur farmers are far above any previous year, and our industry is operating on a credit basis.

Something can be done to correct the discrimination in the present excise taxes.

Briefly, here is what is taking place: Section 2401 of the Revenue Act of 1941 reads as follows:

"There is hereby imposed upon the following articles sold at retail a tax equivalent to 10 percent of the price for which so sold; articles made of fur on the hide or pelt, and articles of which such fur is the component material of chief value."

Section 1650 of the Revenue Act increased the rate to 20 percent. Interpretation by the Treasury Department, Office of Internal Revenue, as set forth in their regulation for determining the taxability of fur-trimmed garments is as follows:

"The material components of fur-trimmed garments recognized for tax purposes by the Treasury Department are the fur set, the cloth shell, the lining shell, and the findings. Since the cost of the cloth shell is greater than that of the lining shell or of the findings, the taxability of a fur-trimmed garment will be determined by a comparison of the cost of the fur with the cost of the cloth shell. When the cost of the fur set exceeds the cost of the cloth shell, the garment is taxable, and conversely when the cost of the cloth shell is greater, the garment is not taxable."

In actual practice and operation, here is how it works (the example used represents one of the largest fur trim volume lines on the market today. The cloth used is the finest material obtainable):

Manufacturer to consumer

	Fur-trimmed coat
	Tax-free	Subject to tax
Material value:
Cloth shell	$20	$20.00
Lining shell	7	7.00
Findings	3	3.00
Fur set	19	24.00
Cost of materials	49	54.00
Labor, overhead, and manufacturers' mark-up	41	42.00
Wholesale price paid by retailer	90	96.00
Retailers' mark-up, average 33⅓ percent	30	32.00
Retail price paid by consumer	120	128.00
Plus 20 percent tax	------	25.60
Price paid by consumer, including tax	------	153.60

Here we have exactly the same cost, except for a $5 better fur set costing the consumer $33.60 more. In fact, the tax amounts to more than the cost of the fur set. It is obvious why the consumers are not interested in this article.

But that is not the only discriminatory factor. By reason of the tax differential, the retailer is taking a higher mark-up on untaxable garments, and therefore is not interested in buying or handling taxable merchandise.

The net result of the excise tax on fur-trimmed coats is:

(a) The consumer is paying more for a cheap article.

(b) The Government is collecting little, if any tax.

(c) The fur farmer has no market for a large percent of his product and is being forced to liquidate his business.

The reason something must be done at once is very obvious. Fur-trimmed coats are seasonable articles. Manufacturers are now beginning to make new designs and styles for manufacture during the summer months to go on the market next fall and winter. The matter cannot be left to be corrected by later legislation.

The proposed amendment will correct the situation without any effect on other articles or establishing a precedent or reason for further amendments to the bill.

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN WAR EXCISE TAX RATES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BUTLER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ON THE SURVIVAL OF A FREE, COMPETITIVE PRESS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I am submitting a resolution for which I had intended to ask immediate consideration. However, after discussion with the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who heads the new Small Business Committee, I ask that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

The resolution provides for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the report submitted by the chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], on Survival of a Free, Competitive Press—The Small Newspaper: Democracy's Grassroots. The resolution is offered because of the exhaustion of the limited supply of 2,000 provided the committee and the demand for copies coming into my own office and the offices of other Senators.

This report is amongst the last acts performed by the retiring chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee. It is in keeping with the high standard of work he had done on important and timely problems during the 6 years of his leadership on this Senate committee in behalf of independent business. It focuses attention on one of the most serious threats to our domestic prosperity and democratic institutions, the weakening or disappearance of independent newspapers all over the country. As the Senator from Montana well says in the report: "With each disappearance of a competitive local newspaper some vital part of democracy is lost."

The report gives figures showing that a tenth of all our newspapers have gone out of business during the past 15 years and that the crisis in newsprint is reducing to a mere trickle the supply available to small newspapers still in existence.

The Murray report directly concerns every one of our local newspapers. There are some 15,000 of them scattered over this broad country, playing their vital role in the formation of public opinion, disseminating news, assisting in the sale and distribution of goods, and developing civic welfare in their communities. Nothing is more important than that they know the results of this unbiased, carefully prepared report, for much of it is based on an analysis of the very problems they brought to the attention of the chairman.

Speaking for myself—and I am sure for other Senators as well—I wish to place a copy of this invaluable report in the hands of every publisher in my State. No better use could be made of the taxpayers' money than to bring to light the problems now threatening the very life of our American free press as a first step in their solution. This report of the former chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee does just that, and for that reason I urge approval of my resolution for the printing of additional copies.

The report submitted by the Senator from Montana analyzes the newsprint situation as it affects the small newspapers of the country. They are having a worse time now getting newsprint than they had during the period of rationing while the war was in progress. I think it is important that the country know this, and that additional copies of this report be printed. As I have said, the report is indicative of the excellent work done by the former distinguished chairman of the committee. The new chairman, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, is somewhat familiar with the situation, but I think perhaps the committee should review the subject in the light of the report. I hope the resolution can be taken up and considered by the Senate on Friday or Monday.

The resolution (S. Res. 80), submitted by Mr. MAGNUSON, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Committee Print No. 17, Eightieth Congress, first session, being the report entitled "Survival of a Free, Competitive Press," which was printed for the use of the Special Committee To Study Problems of American Small Business created pursuant to Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to October 8, 1940. Such additional copies shall be for the use of the Senate Document Room.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Washington, let me say that I am not objecting, as chairman of the Small Business Committee, to the printing of additional copies of the report. However, because an expenditure is involved, the resolution should be considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Rules and Administration. I am simply asking that the resolution be referred to the appropriate committee and that that committee consider the resolution. Of course, if the resolution meets with the approval of the committee, additional copies of the report will be printed. Instead of granting unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, I am merely asking that it be referred to the appropriate committee. I will guarantee, as a member of the committee, that it will be acted upon immediately, and that the committee will decide what to do about the printing of additional copies of the report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not wish to have it understood that the Senator from Nebraska is objecting to the printing of additional copies of the report. He merely wishes to follow the proper procedure.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN DATA RELATING TO FARM PRICE-SUPPORT PROGRAM (S. DOC. NO. 9)

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on January 23 the Honorable Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture, appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and gave valuable information relative to the Department's farm program for the next 2 years, 1947 and 1948.

A portion of the Secretary's statement was in explanation of the Agriculture Department's program for price supports.

Inasmuch as all farmers are interested in the price-support program it is well to make such information available to them. I have, therefore, selected certain data relative to the Government's farm price-support program and ask unanimous consent that the data thus compiled be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter presented by the Senator from Kansas will be printed as a Senate document.

DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS BY THE NATIONAL CATHOLIC WELFARE CONFERENCE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the New York Times of yesterday published the text of the Declaration of Human Rights submitted by the National Catholic Welfare Conference to the United Nations Committee on Human Rights. The statement, I understand, was drafted by a committee comprising bishops, priests, theologians, and laymen chosen by the conference. The statement, according to the New York Times, was intended to give expression on Catholic policy in America for the hierarchy.

The declaration is one of the most integrated and comprehensive, although concise, statements of the principles and objectives of a truly humanistic and democratic program that I have seen in recent years. It should serve as a framework for all progressive-minded people regardless of their religious faith. I congratulate the National Catholic Welfare Conference for its statesmanlike declaration, and I recommend its perusal, especially by all Members of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the declaration be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the declaration was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

GENERAL PREAMBLE

God, the Creator of the human race, has charged man with obligations arising from his personal dignity, from his immortal destiny, and from his relationships as a social being. These obligations are in reference to the Creator, to himself, to his family and fellow men, to the state, and to the community of states. For the fulfillment of these obligations man is endowed with certain natural, inalienable rights. These obligations and rights form the substance of the natural moral law which can be known by reason.

Obligations and rights are correlative. At all times the obligation to respect the rights of others operates against the arbitrary use of rights.

Suitable opportunity to discharge fundamental obligations in the various and separate situations of life is a right which cannot be justly denied. For man's use God has provided the basic resources of this world.

The unity of the human race under God is not broken by geographical distance or by diversity of civilization, culture, and economy, and the adequate use of the world's resources by all peoples is not to be denied because of these factors.

Weakness resulting from conquest or imperfection in governmental organization should not be used as a pretext to reject the fundamental rights of man or to impede their legitimate exercise.

The order of rights outlined below progresses through the individual, the family, the state, and the community of states.

PART I. THE RIGHTS OF THE HUMAN PERSON

The dignity of man, created in the image of God, obligates him to live in accordance with law imposed by God. Consequently, he is endowed as an individual and as a member of society with rights which are inalienable.

Among these rights are:

1. The right to life and bodily integrity from the moment of conception, regardless of physical or mental condition, except in just punishment for crime.

2. The right to serve and worship God in private and in public.

3. The right to religious formation through education and association.

4. The right to personal liberty under just law.

5. The right to the equal protection of just law regardless of sex, nationality, color, or creed.

6. The right to freedom of expression, of information, and of communication in accordance with truth and justice.

7. The right to choose and freely to maintain a state of life, married or single, lay or religious.

8. The right to education suitable for the maintenance and development of man's dignity as a human person.

9. The right to petition the government for redress of grievances.

10. The right to a nationality.

11. The right of access to the means of livelihood by migration when necessary.

12. The right of association and peaceable assembly.

13. The right to work and choose one's occupation.

14. The right to personal ownership, use, and disposal of property subject to the rights of others and to limitations in the interest of the general welfare.

15. The right to a living wage.

16. The right to collective bargaining.

17. The right to associate by industries and professions to obtain economic justice and the general welfare.

18. The right to assistance from society, if necessary from the state, in distress of person or family.

PART II. THE RIGHTS PERTAINING TO THE FAMILY

The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is endowed by the Creator with inalienable rights antecedent to all positive law. The family does not exist for the state, but on the other hand is not independent.

Among these rights are:

1. The right to marry, to establish a home and beget children.

2. The right to economic security sufficient for the stability and independence of the family.

3. The right to the protection of maternity.

4. The right to educate the children.

5. The right to maintain, if necessary by public protection and assistance, adequate standards of child welfare within the family circle.

6. The right to assistance, through community services in the education and care of the children.

7. The right to housing adapted to the needs and functions of family life.

8. The right to immunity of the home from search and trespass.

9. The right to protection against immoral conditions in the community.

PART III. THE DOMESTIC RIGHTS OF STATES

Political authority is entrusted by God to nations, which are endowed with rights and charged with the obligation of establishing justice, of promoting the general welfare of their citizens, and of cooperating with other nations in furthering the universal welfare of mankind.

It is the right of all peoples that are capable of self-government to organize politically and to function as states upon equal terms with other states.

Among these rights are:

1. The right to enact just laws binding in conscience.

2. The right to establish courts of justice and to enforce the observance of law with adequate sanctions.

3. The right to demand of its citizens respect for the rights of minorities.

4. The rights to tax by adequate and equitable means in order to carry out its proper functions.

5. The right to exercise eminent domain when demanded by the common welfare.

6. The right to require that its people receive an education suitable for citizenship.

7. The right to defend itself against domestic violence.

8. The right to watch over, stimulate, restrain, and order the private activities of individuals and groups in the degree that is necessary for the common good.

9. The right to regulate operations of international economic groups functioning within its own boundaries.

10. The right to adopt in time of emergency special measures necessary for the common good.

PART IV. THE RIGHTS OF STATES IN THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY

The human family constitutes an organic unity or a world society.

The states of the world have the right and the duty to associate and to organize in the international community for their common welfare.

The indispensable foundation of all peaceful intercourse among nations and an essential condition of juridical relations among them are common trust and respect for the plighted word. Treaties and agreements must not be considered subject to arbitrary unilateral repudiation.

Every state has certain fundamental rights in the international community.

Among these rights are:

1. The right to exist as a member of the international community and to be protected in its national life and integrity against acts of aggression by any other state or states.

2. The right to independence in the determination of its own domestic and foreign policies in accordance with the principles of morality, and subject to the obligations of international law.

3. The right to juridical equality with other states in the family of nations.

4. The right to membership in the organized international community and to the benefit of international cooperation.

5. The right to the assistance of the international community in securing the fulfillment of the terms of a just treaty or agreement

6. The right to obtain from the international community redress of grievances arising from unjust treaties imposed by force.

7. The right to the revision of treaties which are no longer in accord with fundamental justice.

8. The right to recourse to the procedures of pacific settlement established by the international community for disputes which diplomatic negotiations have failed to settle.

9. The right to maintain political, economic, and social intercourse with other States upon equal terms.

10. The right of access, upon equal terms, to the markets and raw materials of the world necessary for its own life as a people.

11. The right to protect its own natural resources and economic life from unjust exploitation.

12. The right to the assistance of the international community in time of economic or social distress.

13. The right to grant asylum to refugees from injustice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is concluded.

REPORT OF PRESIDENT ON ACTIVITIES OF UNITED NATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 803.)

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 5, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
President of the Senate pro tempore, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On June 19, 1945, I sent a message to the Congress of the United States suggesting that the Congress should give its consideration to the question of the Presidential succession.

In that message, it was pointed out that under the existing statute governing the succession to the office of President, members of the Cabinet successively fill the office in the event of the death of the elected President and Vice President. It was further pointed out that, in effect, the present law gives to me the power to nominate my immediate successor in the event of my own death or inability to act.

I said then, and I repeat now, that in a democracy, this power should not rest with the Chief Executive. I believe that, insofar as possible, the office of the President should be filled by an elective officer.

In the message of June 19, 1945, I recommended that the Congress enact legislation placing the Speaker of the House of Representatives first in order of succession, and if there were no Speaker, or if he failed to qualify, that the President pro tempore of the Senate should act until a duly qualified Speaker was elected.

A bill (H. R. 3587) providing for this succession was introduced in the House of Representatives and was passed by the House on June 29, 1945. It failed, however, to pass the Senate.

The same need, for a revision of the law of succession, that existed when I sent the message to the Congress on June 19, 1945, still exists today.

I see no reason to change or amend the suggestion which I previously made to the Congress, but if the Congress is not disposed to pass the type of bill previously passed by the House, then I recommend that some other plan of succession be devised so that the office of the President would be filled by an officer who holds his position as a result of the expression of the will of the voters of this country.

It is my belief that the present line of succession as provided by the existing statute, which was enacted in 1886, is not in accord with our basic concept of government by elected representatives of the people.

I again urge the Congress to give its attention to this subject.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

NOMINATIONS TO THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Atomic Energy Commission is so important that not only the American Government's very existence as a nation but that of the American people as individuals depends upon the secret and careful use and unhampered American development of atomic energy. It is vital, therefore, that those appointed as members of the Commission be the safest, wisest, and most genuine Americans in the Nation, wholly unaffected with any foreign likes or dislikes, and uninfluenced by any sympathy for any foreign government or foreign ideas or ideals. I firmly urge that if any Senator, certainly any member of the committee who has heard the evidence in the case, has any doubt regarding the fitness of any individual appointed to the Commission, and objects to his appointment, then the person so appointed must not be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. President, the appointments to membership on this Commission are probably the most important that have come to the Senate of the United States at any time in its history. If Senators have a doubt as to the Americanism or the good faith or the sincerity or patriotism of anyone appointed to be a member of the Commission, he should not be confirmed.

I should like to have Senators give these thoughts most careful consideration in deliberating on the membership of this Commission.

It seems to me that every Senator ought to realize that involved in this matter is a fight between Russian communism on one side and pure, unadulterated Americanism on the other. Those who believe in Russian communism over pure Americanism will no doubt vote for these nominees. Those of us who believe that any of these nominees are tinctured with communism will vote against the confirmation of such nominees.

REVENUE ESTIMATES UNDER TAX-REDUCTION PROPOSALS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that tax reduction may become an issue at this session of the Congress, I have requested Mr. Stam, chief of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, to furnish certain information, and I ask that his letter may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

I invite attention to the following information contained in the letter:

In accordance with your recent request, I am submitting the following revenue estimates as to various tax plans:

Increase per capita exemptions from $500 to $600.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 2,917,000.

Loss in revenue, $1,500,000,000.

Increase per capita exemption from $500 to $700.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 9,860,000.

Loss in revenue, $3,000,000,000.

Increase per capita exemption from $500 to $800.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 10,000,000.

Loss in revenue, $3,900,000,000.

Increase exemptions as follows:

Married persons from $1,000 to $2,000.

Single persons from $500 to $1,000.

Leave dependency credit at $500.

Loss in revenue, $5,022,000,000.

Number of taxpayers removed from the rolls, 18,319,000.

Increase exemptions as follows:

Single persons, $750.

Married persons, $750.

Dependents, $375.

Loss in revenue, $3,084,000,000.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 9,000,000.

Mr. President, it may be recalled that at the time of the passage of the 1945 act, which actually occurred early in 1946, there were on the rolls more than 50,000,000 taxpayers. Twelve million were removed from the rolls by that act. At the present time the number of taxpayers on the rolls is roughly 45,000,000. So if any one of the methods discussed by Mr. Stam in his letter should be used, it is easy to see to what extent the tax base would be narrowed.

I ask unanimous consent to have the entire letter printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION,
Washington, January 29, 1947.

Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GEORGE: In accordance with your recent request, I am submitting the following revenue estimates as to various tax plans:

Increase per capita exemptions from $500 to $600.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 2,917,000.

Loss in revenue, $1,500,000,000.

Increase per capita exemption from $500 to $700.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 9,860,000.

Loss in revenue, $3,000,000,000.

Increase per capita exemption from $500 to $800.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 10,000,000.

Loss in revenue, $3,900,000,000.

Increase exemptions as follows:

Married persons from $1,000 to $2,000.

Single persons from $500 to $1,000.

Leave dependency credit at $500.

Loss in revenue, $5,022,000,000.

Number of taxpayers removed from the rolls, 18,319,000.

Increase exemptions as follows:

Single persons, $750.

Married persons, $750.

Dependents, $375.

Loss in revenue, $3,084,000,000.

Number of taxpayers removed from rolls, 9,000,000.

Aside from the revenue problems involved, any change from the per capita system would necessarily complicate the forms, instructions, and the withholding tables. With the continuation of a broad base, which is now around 45,000,000 taxpayers, it is necessary that the tax computations be made simple, and, under the present law, the taxes of the wage earners in the lower groups are computed by the collector. Under any new system, the collector would be required to check the exemption values to see whether proper values were assigned single persons, married persons, or dependents. Additional computations would also be required of the taxpayer with greater possibility of error. Now, that the taxpayer has become familiar with the per capita system, and the system in the collectors' offices is now geared to that system, it would cause added confusion to change over to another system.

Respectfully yours,

COLIN F. STAM,
Chief of Staff.

THE CLOSED SHOP—EDITORIAL FROM MEDFORD (OREG.) MAIL-TRIBUNE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks—because I wish to be associated with the contents of the editorial—an editorial entitled "More About the Closed Shop" published in the Medford (Oreg.) Mail-Tribune of January 29, 1947. The editorial is written by a distinguished editor, Robert W. Ruhl.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORE ABOUT THE CLOSED SHOP

In a very long and thoughtful editorial regarding the closed shop the Portland Oregonian concludes, among other things, that it cannot—we quote:

"With good moral or political conscience endorse the principle of the closed shop, for it believes that the right to work is at least as sacred as the right to strike * * *. The closed shop is morally incompatible with a system of government which guarantees the freedom of the individual."

Well, that is a pretty strong argument against the closed shop, and from the standpoint of theory might be termed quite convincing.

But just what does it add up to from a practical, coldly realistic standpoint?

Is it really true, for example, that, under conditions as they exist today, the right of the individual to work is denied by the closed shop? We think not.

He can't work in a closed shop unless he joins the union. But he can work in an open shop. And according to the latest statistics, there is not a trade in existence which is 100 percent unionized.

So that statement that the right of work is denied is not factually correct.

As long as there are "closed" and "open" shops operating in this country—as long as the former is not mandatory and the latter not prohibited—it can't truthfully be said an individual has to join a union to get work.

There are over 50,000,000 workers in the United States today, and almost all of them are now employed. Yet only a comparatively small percentage belong to unions. Which means literally millions of nonunion men and women must be gainfully employed today.

That is the situation as it actually exists.

We don't deny labor leaders want all the workers and shops unionized, and are striving toward that end. But until that is accomplished it can't be claimed the sacred right to work for those who wish to work is denied. It may be harder for a nonunion worker to get work, but it certainly is not impossible.

Now as to the freedom of the individual.

Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, John Doe takes a job and buys a suburban lot at the same time. For the latter he gives money; for the former, skill and training.

Soon after he takes the job he is asked to join the union and pay dues; and about the same time his suburban lot is taken into the city, and he is asked to pay city taxes and perhaps certain special assessments for improvements.

There is no doubt of this.

The union has raised the standards of labor immeasurably, the benefits that labor enjoys, and therefore the value of the job John Doe has taken.

There is also no doubt the improvements involved in becoming a part of the city—sewer, paving, lights, fire and police protection, etc.—have greatly increased the value of John's suburban property.

But let us assume further that John Doe doesn't like either idea.

He is, let us say, a rugged individualist. He wants to preserve his sacred freedom both as far as joining a union and paying city taxes are concerned. Why should he be forced to join a union and pay union dues if he doesn't wish to? Why, by the same token, should he be forced to become a city resident and pay city taxes, if he doesn't wish to?

Well, the answer in both instances is he can't be.

No city can force a property owner to pay taxes, no union can force a worker to join a union and pay dues.

But in both instances John can't have his cake and eat it, too. He can't enjoy the benefits of union membership, nor the benefits of a city residence unless he shares the expenses and responsibilities of them.

If he wants neither, then he will have to find a place to work outside of a union and a place to live—or hold property—outside of a city.

We are not trying, however, to uphold the "closed shop" on principle. We are merely trying to give a picture of this problem as we see it today rather than as it is so often portrayed by those who oppose it.

As far as the Mail-Tribune is concerned—as has been stated before—we are against both prohibition and compulsion as far as the closed shop is concerned. When labor and management want a closed shop we believe there should be no law preventing it. And when they both want an open shop there should be no law preventing that.

Until some system of labor courts are established there should be no compulsory or prohibitory labor laws whatever.

Labor and management should be entirely free to bargain as they wish and select any system of shop control they may consider mutually satisfactory.

When, however, in a vital industry where the welfare of the country becomes involved, just what management or just what labor prefers should not then we believe be the first consideration.

The first consideration should be the public welfare, and maintaining it.

And there should be some authority—we don't care precisely how it might be organized or what it might be called—but some authority which could step in when the two interested parties cannot agree, and a tie-up is threatened, and tell both sides what to do, so that the vital industry may continue to function and the people of the country need not suffer.

ACTIVITIES OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM — EDITORIAL FROM NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial entitled "Witch Hunt or Inquiry?" published in the New York Times of February 3, 1947. The editorial deals with the activities of the Senate Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WITCH HUNT OR INQUIRY?

The Senate War Investigating Committee, reconstituted by an almost solid party vote, is settling down for what promises to be a prolonged inquiry into excessive profits, fraud, corruption, waste, extravagance, mismanagement, incompetence, and inefficiency, in the home-front conduct of the Second World War. Its first session, in Washington on Friday, emphasized its partisan character. Its Republican majority on that day met and heard the first witness nearly an hour before floor leader BARKLEY, according to his own statement, knew "who was going to compose the minority membership of the committee." There was an explanation. The witness in question, Brig. Gen. Maurice Hirsch, Chairman of the War Contracts Price Adjustment Board, was in a hurry. He was retiring from the Army Friday night and going on a honeymoon trip. Still, this was not an auspicious beginning for an inquiry which can be of value only if it is judicial.

The Republican majority did not go out of its way even to seem judicial. If it had followed the spirit, if not the letter, of the Congressional Reorganization Act, it would have referred the investigation to the regular Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Senator AIKEN, of Vermont, chairman of this committee, voted with three other Republicans that this be done. But Senator AIKEN is apparently under suspicion as being almost too judicial. Senator BREWSTER, of Maine, who seems not to be similarly suspect, is the chairman of the special committee.

The Democrats may be pardoned if they fear that this investigation has some connection with next year's Presidential campaign. It will have such a connection, no matter what happens. But if the Republicans wish to make political capital with fair-minded people they will not go on a witch hunt; they will conduct a scrupulously fair-minded inquiry.

DISPLACED PERSONS—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON POST

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial entitled "DP's," published in the Washington Post of February 4, 1947. I urge Members of the Senate to read the editorial. It very largely confirms my own observations during the months of November and December of a number of DP camps in Germany.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DP'S

Secretary Marshall has told the Jewish Labor Committee that he has a special concern for the million displaced persons in the western zones of Germany. It is no reflection upon our new Secretary of State to say that these people have been almost buried in such sentiments. Action has become the only test of special concern. By the end of June UNRRA will be withdrawn from the job of supervising the DP camps. In its place there will be the new International Refugee Organization set up 3 months ago by the United Nations Assembly. But the task of getting the IRO under way is proceeding at a snail's pace. Even Great Britain, which has been in the van in championing the cause of the refugee, has not yet seen fit to sign the IRO constitution. To be sure, there are enough signers to enable the United Nations to set up an interim organization, but the laggardliness of some of the nations does not augur well for the success of the undertaking.

The displaced persons in Germany are of all nationalities, including even American. In numerical strength the Balts and the Poles are first and second, respectively. The Jews, with almost 200,000, are third. A misconception to which Secretary Marshall unwittingly lent countenance when he expressed his special concern to the Jewish Labor Committee is that the DP's are all Jews. The only common denominator among them is their objection to life under totalitarian rule, Fascist or Communist. All they ask is that they may be permitted to start life anew in a free country. It was out of this material that the New World was created. Surely this love of freedom should warm our hearts to these unfortunate folk.

It is untrue to suggest that they all want to come to America. None of the Jews have any such desire. They all want to go to Palestine, and 100,000 of them could have been accommodated if the British had accepted, without the fatal equivocation that encouraged the Arabs, the recommendation of the Anglo-American Committee on Palestine set up at the instance of the British Government. The others are ready to go anywhere except to despot lands.

It is a sign of moral decline that the conscience that these people display is regarded with suspicion. The fear is that maybe they would turn out to be agitators. No investigation warrants any feeling that agitation is their stock in trade. The fact is that in these displaced camps all the skills and crafts in the calendar are represented. If a new country wants doctors and dentists, it will find them among these folk. If an old country is lacking farm workers and miners, the camps are a source of supply. And they are all eager to work. If, of course, they are left idle for too long a period, they may turn out to be unemployable, though we doubt this in the case of these sturdy and independent people, for the camps (as we have seen for ourselves) are run by the DP's themselves, and the first rule is that no drones are tolerated. It is one of the ironies of the times that Britain and other countries of western Europe are complaining of a labor shortage when there is this reservoir of labor at hand in the DP camps.

The special concern of the United States should be expressed in action in conformity with our traditions and our necessities. This is still the land of the free, where men have built a great country on the ideals that these DP's cherish. This land of ours is short of certain types of labor. Nobody asks that we abolish our restrictions on immigration in helping to solve the DP problem. But we could so adjust the quotas as to see they are all used up and that refugees are included. The existing law would permit an annual immigration of 153,879, yet we are now receiving quota immigrants at the rate of about 80,000 a year. The President has indicated his wholehearted support of such an adjustment as would enable us to give hospitality to 39,000 refugees a year. But only a sixth of that number had been received in the year just ended. It would be a demonstration of our special concern if we stopped viewing the refugee problem as merely an abstraction in a vacuum and eased the way for at least the handful that the President had in mind.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY—NOMINATION OF DILLON S. MYER

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRICKER in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business has been concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. And has the Senator from Florida been recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida was recognized and yielded to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report favorably the nomination of Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority in the National Housing Agency. The nomination was favorably reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency yesterday. In view of the delay which has occurred with respect to this nomination I now ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority be immediately considered, and the nomination confirmed forthwith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I understand, this nomination had previously been placed on the calendar, and had then been recommitted to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. TOBEY. I will explain the matter if the Senator will permit.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation.

Mr. TOBEY. The nomination of Mr. Dillon S. Myer was submitted by the President 2 weeks ago or more. It came to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, which considered the nomination, after having held a hearing on it for an hour and a half. Then on motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] the nomination was reported unanimously by the committee.

Subsequent thereto some gentlemen appeared at the office of the Senator from Indiana and told him they wanted to object to the nomination and to present certain charges to the committee. He brought them to my office. They spent an hour and a half with me a week ago Saturday. They asked for an opportunity to appear before the committee and give their evidence as to the nomination of Mr. Myer. Yesterday was the day on which they were to appear before the committee. Before the committee convened they withdrew their opposition and did not appear. There was no testimony presented in opposition to Mr. Myer. Two committee members, however, voted against reporting his nomination favorably. Eight committee members voted to report the nomination favorably.

Mr. President, in view of the delay in making the appointment and in view of the fact that Mr. Myer's nomination was overwhelmingly voted out of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and in justice to him, I ask unanimous consent that his nomination be considered immediately and that he be confirmed forthwith, instead of the nomination having to go to the calendar and action upon it wait until Friday next when I cannot be present.

I renew my request for immediate consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

TREND OF FOREIGN POLICY UNDER REPUBLICAN AUSPICES

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, upon the very eve of the all-important Foreign Ministers' Conference at Moscow, to determine the future of Germany and therefore, in the light of history, the future of war in the world, we have from Mr. John Foster Dulles, famed Republican adviser on foreign policy, speaking to the National Publishers' Association on the 17th day of January past, the latest declaration of Republican policy on Germany and the forces making for peace or war.

I rise to discuss this important pronouncement of Republican foreign policy by Mr. Dulles not in the mechanical terms of a soft peace or a hard peace for Germany. My concern is a just peace, and a lasting peace, a peace that will insure that the next generation of Americans will not have to slog through the muddy fields of another Flanders, as did their grandfathers in 1918, or dive into the same foxholes in Normandy which sheltered their fathers in 1944.

It is then from the standpoint of a just and lasting peace that I must take issue with this new proposal of Mr. Dulles, which so clearly and unmistakably would smash the terms of the Potsdam agreement and replace it with the dangerous and discredited doctrine of a western bloc and the rebuilding of a powerful Germany.

This statement from Mr. Dulles comes on the heels of a series of declarations by Republican leaders on the political and economic aspects of our foreign policy. The able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, speaking recently at Cleveland, ignored the announced recommendation of General Marshall and threw his full weight, without qualification or reservation, behind the Chinese faction which General Marshall had found corrupt, incompetent, and, in a large measure, antidemocratic.

In the same Cleveland address the Senator from Michigan would have us lead our sister American Republics into a common hemispheric defense pact with Argentina, in the face of the stern declaration by the then Secretary of State, Hon. James F. Byrnes, that Argentina had not purged itself of its fifth column of Nazis or its Nazi confederates.

Within the past few weeks leading Republican House Members have introduced legislation to suspend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act; and on this floor the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] has denounced the Trade Agreements Act as a gigantic hoax, provoking the New York Times to inquire in a recent editorial, "Which way for Republicans?"

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks the editorial referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Nebraska said that he spoke for himself, but at the same time, according to the press, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and other leading Republicans advised the Under Secretary of State, Mr. William L. Clayton—and I quote their words—"not to go too far"; that is, not to exercise his full authority under the Trade Agreements Act.

During the past week, Republican Senators HICKENLOOPER, KNOWLAND, and VANDENBERG insisted, in hearings on the confirmation of the Atomic Energy Commissioners, that the military be allowed to sit in on every session of the Commission in such a way that it would virtually become an integral part of the Commission. Their insistence suggests the reversal of the decision duly made by the President and the Congress that, true to the traditions of our Government, the civil authority shall always be superior to the military. Such suggestions moved the Washington Post, in a recent editorial, to say:

It is an issue which ought never to have arisen in a free society. The very consideration of it suggests a condition of panic. For the subordination of the military to civil authority is the cornerstone of the concept of government by consent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Post editorial referred to be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. PEPPER. So now, in the short space of a few weeks, in a series of declarations supporting reaction in China and Argentina, trying to reverse our trade-agreements program for international economic collaboration, and repudiating Potsdam, the Republican Party has emerged from the cloak of a bipartisan foreign policy and is causing more and more concern to people who ask whether it is the same Republican Party with the same policy which undermined the foundations of peace and prosperity after the First World War.

Mr. Dulles, its chief spokesman, speaking on the 25th of January to a Republican women's organization, has served notice on the people of the United States and of the world in unmistakable words that the only bipartisan foreign policy his party will agree to must be their policy. I quote from his address, as reported in the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, January 26, 1947:

A Democratic President and his Secretary of State can propose, but a Republican Congress can dispose. Foreign diplomats know that, and they suspect what we know—that 2 years from now, a Republican will be in the White House. So these foreign governments will not take very seriously American proposals which are backed only by the Democratic Party.

Like many other Americans, I have sensed a steady and growing Republican pressure to force our foreign policy away from the policy of firm international collaboration for peace so carefully built by President Roosevelt. At times I have felt that the administration has been called upon to pay too high a price, under those circumstances, for bipartisanship in our foreign policy.

But now, in his speech of January 17, which goes to the very core of the peace problem, the chief Republican spokesman on foreign policy, Mr. Dulles, so completely ignores the Potsdam agreement, solemnly entered into by this Government, and all that has been done under it, including territorial changes and the moving of millions of people from or to distant homes, that I wonder if he is meaning to suggest not only that the Republican Party will be decisive in all future agreements entered into by this Government but also that any agreements entered into in the past without Republican representation are not to be regarded by the world as binding. Surely those powers which have been concerned that the United States has already been whittling away at the integrity of the Potsdam agreement, solemnly entered into by our Government, will not have their confidence in the integrity of the Potsdam agreement enhanced by any such declaration on the part of so eminent a Republican spokesman as Mr. Dulles, especially when he presumes to speak with the authority of both the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the titular head of the Republican Party. For in his address Mr. Dulles declared that he had cleared his speech with the Senator from Michigan and Governor Dewey.

In order to understand clearly how far Mr. Dulles and the Republican Party propose to thrust this Nation and the world along a new path in foreign policy by subverting the Potsdam agreement—and lest it be obscured by those cunning interpreters who seek to obliterate great differences by small words—let us examine what Britain, the Soviet Union, and the United States sought to accomplish at Potsdam. It was the industrial and military disarmament of Germany, the sterilization of Germany as a war-making power which they sought at Potsdam. The problem the Allies faced at Potsdam and the importance of the solution were brilliantly formulated by America's distinguished elder statesman, Mr. Bernard Baruch, in his testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee:

No more important question ever will come before you than this one—of how to prevent the revival of Germany's war-making might. It is the heart of the making of the peace; it is the heart of the keeping of the peace. What is done with Germany holds the key to whether Russia, Britain, and the United States can continue to get along. It will affect profoundly the jobs and livelihoods of everyone, everywhere, for none of the economic problems of the peace can be solved except in the light of German reparations policy and the measures taken to demilitarize Germany's traditional war economy.

It was against the Prussian-dominated, conquest-mad, inhumanly savage Germany, which had made criminal war upon France three times and upon Europe and the world twice in 70 years, that the agreement was drawn at Potsdam in the summer of 1945, by the nations that had borne the anguish of Germany's two wars of conquest in a quarter of a century. Churchill, Attlee, Stalin, Roosevelt, Truman, Byrnes, Marshall, Harriman, and many more helped fashion the instrument to remove the claws from this war maker.

The Potsdam agreement, hailed throughout the world not as the savage, but as the solemn, resolve of her victims at long last to stop Germany's war making, strove relentlessly to cut out the very war-making organs from the German body. It provided for the prosecution of German war criminals of all kinds; for getting the Nazis out of any sphere of leadership in German life; for the eradication of Germany's military machine, including the general staff; for the industrial disarmament of Germany by the removal of the industrial equipment with which Germany prepared for and waged war, and such tight control over the German economy that while it would produce for the German people a standard of living equal to the average of European nations it would provide no margin for war making. Under the agreement, a dual purpose was served in the detachment from Germany of a portion of her eastern territory, namely, the partial compensation of Poland for territory awarded to the Soviet Union in line with the Curzon Commission award, and putting Polish and Soviet power in those areas, notably Prussia, where in the past German offensives have been conceived, mounted, and launched.

Potsdam did not destroy the German Nation or the German people, nor did it condemn the German people to poverty. On the contrary, let me repeat that it allowed the German people a level of living equal to the average living level of their neighbors in Europe. It contemplated that they could and would enjoy the blessings of democratic government and continued unity as a nation and people. But, if carried out, Potsdam did mean that Germany would never again be able to wage war upon the world, and Potsdam did mean that Germany should continue to be the common concern of those nations who had been her major victims, and not the shameless ally of any of her victims against the others in any future plans or any future war. I declare that nothing has been said by President Truman or Secretary Byrnes or, so far as I know, until Mr. Dulles spoke, by any American representative for foreign affairs which has altered this basic concept of our duty to American dead who lie all over the world today, victims of criminal German wars.

The architects of Potsdam knew the German and the European economies. They knew that Germany's war weapons were forged in the German industrial areas of the Ruhr and the Rhineland, and that in this area lay not only the threat of another war but the cruel mastery of the whole European economic system as well. Rather than rely upon the cooperation of many hands to restrain a new German giant in the future, the men at Potsdam wisely chose to keep Germany from becoming a giant again. In short, they proposed by the removal of industrial equipment from the Ruhr and the Rhineland, along with the alienation of the industrial area of Upper Silesia, to shear the hair of the German industrial Samson and to keep it shorn. German war-making plants were to be removed to countries in western and eastern Europe which had been the victims of the German war, as partial reparations for the devastation wrought.

Now Mr. Dulles, making a major foreign-policy speech dealing with the future of Germany—a speech which he says has the approval of Senator VANDENBERG and Governor Dewey—upon the very eve of the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers, turns his back upon the Potsdam agreement. What does Mr. Dulles propose in its place?

First. He proposes that the Rhineland and the Ruhr, with their vast industrial resources, shall not be industrially disarmed, but that instead their power be revived—a power whose only justification in the past was warfare, military and economic.

Second. Mr. Dulles proposes that this revived industrial heart of Europe be integrated in some unspecified fashion into the economy of three western European countries—France, Belgium, and Holland.

Third. He proposes a federal form of government for Germany.

Using the loose analogy of the American form of government, Mr. Dulles says that—

> Such precedents suggest that it is not beyond human resourcefulness to find a form of joint control which will make it possible to develop the industrial potential of western Germany in the interest of the economic life of western Europe, including Germany.

I deliberately emphasize the last words, for these are the heart of his proposals.

Mr. Dulles obviously proposes to nullify the spirit and letter of the Potsdam agreement. His proposals would restore to Germany the power to wage war upon the United States and the world and to dominate the economies of western and eastern Europe, all of necessity, of course, with American capital. They would continue the rule of cartels in world trade; they would create a blood clot in the arteries of the United Nations by setting up a western bloc based upon a restored Germany and directed against the assumed threat of eastern Europe. Here is a blind repetition of the criminal folly committed after the last war, when Germany was rearmed, allegedly against eastern Europe; but in fact a monster was created, destined to devour tens of millions of men, women, and children of the world, including half a million Americans.

To see more clearly the threat to the peace of the United States and of the world contained in Mr. Dulles' proposal to rearm Germany industrially and to create a western bloc, let us go back to the tragic era between the last two wars. France, bled and battered by two German invasions in 44 years, protested to the limit of her ability against adding strength to a Germany which, though defeated, emerged from World War I potentially the strongest nation in Europe. But the powers did not heed France's entreaty. Ostensibly frightened by the bogey of the new Soviet Union, the powers, step by step, restored and rearmed Germany; yes, they even armed Hitler.

Mr. Dulles himself, in his book, War, Peace, and Change, published in 1939, justifies this policy. Said he:

> Far from being sacred, it would be iniquitous, even if it were practicable, to put shackles on the dynamic peoples (the new Fascist regimes) and condemn them forever to acceptance of conditions which might become intolerable.

Even as late as 1939, Mr. Dulles could not see a rearmed, Nazi, Hitler-led Germany as any threat to us, for he said:

> Only hysteria entertains the idea that Germany, Italy, or Japan contemplates war upon us.

To build her war weapons, with which she nearly conquered the world, Germany had steadily altered and expanded her economy until nearly 50 percent of it was directly devoted to war-making purposes. In building up that economy, she had designedly, but deviously, come to dominate the trade of the nations of Europe. It was this German economy, organized and expanded as it was, which was the real war-making power of Germany. Its coming to fruition was the death sentence, Mr. President, to 50,000,000 men, women, and children, including nearly half a million Americans, in the space of 6 years.

It was the unspeakable crime which this Germany perpetrated upon mankind which moved Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, testifying before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on June 22, 1945, to warn:

> Economically, this settlement (referring to the peace settlement) must break once and for all Germany's dominance of Europe. Her war-making potential must be eliminated; many of her plants and factories shifted east and west to friendly countries; all other heavy industry destroyed; the Junkers estates broken up; her exports and imports strictly controlled; German assets and business organizations all over the world routed out.

Those who studied Germany, after the end of the war, discovered that all the damage inflicted upon Germany during the war had not destroyed her war-making power. In December 1945, the Foreign Economic Administration of our Government stated:

> Although today Germany is militarily defeated, and its economic life is temporarily at a standstill, the industrial base of its aggression—the base which it built up over the last 25 years, and which enabled it nearly to conquer the world—is virtually untouched. With industrial capacity, technological and scientific organization, and economic assets owned outside Germany, and an integrated control of a highly centralized economy, Germany is still a potential threat to the safety of the world.

It is known that neither the German people nor the German economy suffered so much in the war as did their victim neighbors in Europe. In fact, it was a calculated part of Hitler's sinister strategy that if Germany should lose the war, it would still win it by emerging stronger than its neighbors whom he, with fiendish design and efficiency, murdered, tortured, diseased, starved, and plundered. Five million Jews alone in Europe he butchered. Generations cannot repair the strength of the peoples of Europe which he sapped, and for decades Europe will suffer from the economic debility and chaos into which he thrust it.

Perhaps the peace of the world would better be served if the newspapers were to publish each day a small box on their front pages showing the diets and standards of living of the countries of Europe. Let me read you from a New York Times story of Monday last, headed, "World Food Survey Shows Where Aid Still Is Needed. War's Hunger Aftermath Hitting Hardest at China, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Yugoslavia. End of UNRRA a Blow." The story is a round-up from New York Times correspondents all over the world. The story from Belgium is headed "Belgium's status good"—and points out that the basic ration in Belgium provides 1,503 calories. The story from Germany, on the other hand, is headed, "Germans pull in belts"—and what is the basic ration in Germany? It is higher than the basic ration in Belgium—1,550 daily calory ration—and the authorities are planning to raise it to 1,800 calories. So powerful is the reactionary propaganda today looking to the rebuilding of Germany that the higher rations of the aggressor are bewailed, while the lower rations of the nation she overran are considered good. I had not expected to see international policy based on the maudlin sentiment of those who weep over the sad plight of the convicted criminal while ignoring the victims he maimed or killed.

To realize the full force of Mr. Dulles' proposals to rebuild Germany, let us contrast them for a moment with Mr. Baruch's advice on the eve of Potsdam:

Mr. Baruch says: "Economically, this [German] settlement must break once and for all Germany's domination of Europe." But Mr. Dulles would restore Germany's domination of Europe.

Mr. Baruch warns: "[Germany's] war-making potential must be eliminated." But Mr. Dulles would rebuild that war-making potential.

Mr. Baruch says the method of disarming must be removal—"Many of [Germany's] plants and factories shifted east and west to friendly countries." But Mr. Dulles would halt the transfer of German plants and factories—few would go to the west, and none to the east.

Mr. Baruch says, "All other [German] heavy industry must be destroyed." But Mr. Dulles would keep German heavy industry working at high levels. He would destroy none of the heavy industries that provide the sinews of war, and would even rebuild those that are destroyed or damaged.

Now this proposal of Mr. Dulles is not basically new, although it wears a new guise. It is the dangerous doctrine of all those who have been seeking for almost 30 years to pit west against east, to use Germany as the industrial and military wedge to split the world in two. It was the doctrine that motivated the loan of billions of dollars for rebuilding Germany after World War I. It is the doctrine which animated Tory appeasement of Germany under Baldwin and Chamberlain. It was the doctrine that brought the closest collaboration of British, French, and American monopolists with their German counterparts. And it was the doctrine of Churchill's Fulton, Mo., speech, which the American people generally repudiated. It is a doctrine not of the millions of American voters who supported the Republican Party but rather of a handful of American monopolists, bankers, and banker-generals, who have dominated its policies since the War Between the States.

Mr. Dulles knows that his proposal would nullify the spirit and purpose of the Potsdam agreement. He knows that the restoration of the industrial strength of the Ruhr and the Rhineland under German ownership in alliance with a western bloc will deprive the nations in other parts of Europe of the benefits of German production; will keep the economies of other nations in Europe hobbled in relation to Germany; will keep eastern Europe, which needs industrialization more than any other part of Europe, a continued prey to German domination; will retain Germany's economic mastery over Europe; will lead, of necessity, to demand for American capital to restore the industrial capacity he envisages; will lead inevitably to new cartel agreements to fit Germany into world trade; and, finally, that it means that Germany is again prepared for war, not only upon eastern Europe, but upon western Europe, the United States, and the world.

Mr. Dulles knows that his plan is designed to ally a reborn Germany with the west of Europe against the east of Europe. He knows the effect of such a proposal is permanently to divide the wartime allies, to give provocation to those forces in east and west who are already disposed to distrust each other.

Mr. Dulles knows that what has moved him in drawing his plan is his hatred for the Soviet Union and that, in the hope that Germany would use it again against eastern Europe and especially the Soviet Union, he has been willing to propose to put in Germany's hands another sword like unto that with which she was armed by the short-sighted such a few years ago and with which she has drawn rivers of blood from suffering mankind not only in the Soviet Union but in America and over the world.

I declare, Mr. President, that Mr. Dulles by proposing to rearm Germany for any reason threatens war to his own country and his own kind. He is opening again the shameless doors of another Munich leading to what will be the world's worst war.

It must be a matter of great concern not only to the powers of eastern Europe and the Balkans, but no less to France, Belgium, and Holland, as well as the United Kingdom and the Scandinavian countries, to hear Mr. Dulles' proposal for the restoration of Germany's industrial war-making power. Let me emphasize that France does not propose control of the Rhineland exclusively by the Western powers. Those nations, I believe, have learned from sad experience—which in some cases has brought back to them the harvest of their own tragic errors—a lesson Mr. Dulles appears not to have learned, namely, that Germany, by history written in blood, is public enemy No. 1 among the nations and peoples of the world.

I say such a proposal coming from Mr. Dulles must be of great concern to all the nations of Europe because of Mr. Dulles' known position and his announcement that he speaks with the approval of the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and the titular head of the Republican Party, dominant in the American Congress.

I will not anticipate what will be the influence of Mr. Dulles' declaration, so authenticated, upon the course of Secretary Marshall at Moscow.

For my part, I can only hope and believe that Secretary Marshall—having personally fought German militarism in two wars, and knowing the price of both victories, having been at Potsdam and being sustained by the President, and by the people of this country who fight and pay the price of wars—will go on in the spirit of Potsdam, and, before God and mankind, solemnly covenant and cooperate with all peace-loving nations to save the world from another war.

I believe and hope:

That we shall speed up the prosecution of war criminals in Germany, whether militarists, industrialists, or officials;

That we shall continue the purge of Nazis from all leadership in German life;

That we shall stamp out all forms of militarism in Germany, and particularly the devilish German staff, which has thrice fomented German war;

That we shall effectively disarm Germany industrially so that she shall not have the power to wage war, removing as reparations for the countries which suffered from German devastation all the German plant capacity not necessary to maintain an average European level of living for the German people.

Mr. President, we may have different opinions in America about the policy of Generalissimo Joseph Stalin, but I believe all Americans generally will agree with one remark he made to me in an interview in Moscow in 1945, when, with the utmost solemnity, he pressed his fist against the table and said, "Never again must Germany and Japan be permitted to become able to wage war upon the world."

Mr. President, further I believe and hope:

That German exports and imports shall be properly controlled;

That neither German militarists nor industrialists shall be allowed to plan another war or to conceal their war-making power in any part of the world, including Spain and Argentina;

That German education and German life will be infused with democracy and that only democratic elements, parties, and forces, in Germany will be recognized or assisted by any of the Allied Powers;

That the program shall be administered by an international authority based on the Big Three and the other countries most concerned.

Such a policy, Mr. President, can and will, I submit, lead the world to peace through the United Nations. Such a policy will avoid the road to war through the gates of a cartel internationale to the strains of a hymn of hate.

I shall say no more in criticism of Mr. Dulles' proposal, but since Mr. Dulles is chairman of an honored church committee, speaks inevitably with the prestige conferred by that high office, I shall leave it to an organ of the Episcopal Church to sum up the case against Mr. Dulles' proposal. In its issue of January 30, the weekly magazine, the Witness, on whose board of editors sit some of the most influential clergymen of that church, we find the following judgment:

> It is the obligation of the people of those churches to inquire whether his (Mr. Dulles') proposal moves in the direction of the just and durable peace they have commissioned him to seek, also whether it is in harmony with the principles set forth in what is popularly called the social creed of the churches. * * *
> What pagan logic of geopolitics is it that wants "to find a form of joint control which will make it possible to develop the industrial potential of western Germany in the interest of the economic life of western Europe * * *"? Does the sacredness of personality stop at that line? Are the people of eastern Europe to be denied the equal rights to all available opportunities for development, which has been a basic principle in all versions of the church's social creed from the first draft? * * *
>
> The road to moral influence is the same as the road to peace. It is the cooperative use of economic power for the development of all the peoples of the earth according to those principles which were set forth by our churches long before they were ever embodied in the Atlantic and United Nations Charters.
> Since Mr. Dulles' plan is contrary to these principles, he should be asked to resign as chairman of the commission of a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches and from his positions of leadership in the World Council of Churches.

Mr. President, while Mr. Dulles works to rebuild the industrial mastery enjoyed by western Germany, other Republicans complete the tragic picture by urging the return to eastern Germany of those provinces now occupied by Poland under the Potsdam agreement. I shall not argue the historical and ethnic claims of Poland to that territory, valid as they are. I point now only to the incalculable mischief such a proposal involves—the deepening of distrust and suspicion between East and West, the encouragement of the always dangerous German supernationalism, the misery, privation, and despair of millions of Poles who are now permanently settled—at least they believe so—in those provinces. A Polish industry has been painfully built up there; Polish farms are now beginning to flourish there; and historic Polish institutions of learning, having been laboriously transplanted from the East to Silesia, hundreds of miles, are now creating a new Polish culture in those very same provinces which once gave birth to that culture.

In the light of the recent Republican declarations with respect to China, Argentina, the reciprocal-trade agreements program, and the military control of atomic energy and now capped by the open repudiation of Potsdam, as many believe, and the proposal to set up a western bloc incorporating an industrially rearmed Germany—I say, Mr. President, in the light of these pronouncements, let us ask the question which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] once asked about the policy of one of our allies: What is the Republican Party up to?

We cannot tell, after 1 month of Republican domination in the Congress what will be the ultimate destination of the party, but we are beginning to be able to tell at least the direction in which it is going. Enough points put down in sequence will begin to form a line.

If what has been said by Republican leaders is a clear indication of the direction of the Republican Party, it only remains to determine how far the line will reach and with what speed it will be continued. The Republican Party is convicted before history of leading this country in the period between two wars through the gates of alleged collaboration to the treacherous path of isolation in the political and economic affairs of the world. In that period this policy of isolation generally took the negative form. It kept us out of the League of Nations, the World Court, and economic collaboration. But it gave us also in world politics and world economics the strategy of dollar diplomacy. The Government was not used on behalf of the people for peace, but, too often, on behalf of the corporations for profit.

We saw American policy under Republican leadership relieve Germany from paying her due reparations, and instead, American loans, billions of dollars of them, were given to Germany, making us, knowing or unknowing, collaborators in the policy embraced by some European nations of building up a strong Germany as a buffer state against eastern Europe.

We saw a majority of the Republican Party prior to the war oppose the effort of the Government first to throw its weight against Hitler aggression; second, to rearm this country for its own security; and third, to assist the victims of Hitler's aggression, even with economic aid. We know now how dangerously near the brink of disaster those policies brought America and the rest of the world. I will add with pleasure that with the outbreak of war, and through the war, and in many instances since the war, the Republican Party, acting through the able senior Senator from Michigan, reversed its old policy and rendered a valuable contribution not only in winning the war but in laying the foundations of a stable peace in an orderly world.

But, Mr. President, what many people of America feared when the Republican Party came to power after the last war was whether it would carry through with its promised collaboration. It did not do so last time. Many voters in the election of 1920 considered the Republican Party the best vehicle to achieve United States entry into the League of Nations, and many Republican leaders of great stature, such as Ex-President Taft and Mr. Elihu Root, campaigned upon such a platform, but after his election President Harding declared, "The League is dead."

The question today in the minds of every nation in the world—yes, the question in the minds of the ordinary man and woman in America who wants peace through international working together, is, Will America this time move forward upon a high course or will it go back to the tragic road it followed after the last war? It was the Republican Party which gave America direction at the end of the last war and took us down into the abyss that led eventually to depression and war. The Republican Party is again in control of Congress. Again it must assume the responsibility of giving direction to America's course in the world. If the Republican Party fails America it will make America fail the world again.

If these statements of Republican leaders—and they are not all I could name—are any sign, if they are a sign in the political sky, even though no larger than a man's hand, of the direction of the Republican Party, the course it is following is ominous to the future of America and to the future of the world.

That is the reason, Mr. President, I now call attention to it, with the candor and directness which the gravity of the situation warrants. I raise this issue that this question as to where we are headed can be asked of their party by the rank and file Republicans of this country—by all people who want peace, who want international prosperity, with full employment and well-being at home. It is in the early stages of a disease when care and treatment may prevent long illness or death itself.

If these declarations of responsible Republican leaders are not in the direction that the rank and file of the Republican Party and, indeed, the rank and file of the American people want and so earnestly pray for, it is time that the leaders reexamine their declarations and their steps and, before it is too late, turn about to the course which will be in accord with the ancient democratic, nonimperialistic traditions of America, which will bring us into cooperation with the truly democratic forces and peoples of the world, which will make American leadership the way to, not of war and poverty, but of peace and plenty for mankind.

WHICH WAY FOR REPUBLICANS?

In his attack on the Hull reciprocal-trade-agreement program as "a gigantic hoax on the American people," Senator BUTLER, of Nebraska, says that he is speaking for himself alone and not for the new Republican majority in Congress. We hope that on this issue he will continue to speak for himself alone, or at most for a small company of like-minded colleagues, and that this first blast in the new Senate against the Hull program does not forecast a breaking (on economic grounds) of the present bipartisan front on questions of foreign policy and a return by the Senate Republicans to their prewar position of economic isolation.

What is this gigantic hoax about which Mr. BUTLER is aroused? It is a 12-year-old plan, carefully worked out in theory and in practice, to reduce tariff rates moderately and gradually, in return for equivalent reductions by other nations, in order to widen the area within which goods can be profitably exchanged. The plan is strongly supported, on the basis of experience, by many of our most important, and certainly our most far-sighted business, financial, and farm interests. Its advantages are many-sided. It opens markets for American products. It brings foreign products within reach of the American consumer, who is precisely the same person as the American producer, and thereby serves as a check on an inflationary rise of prices. It strengthens the economy of those nations which believe with us in the merits of the free-enterprise system. It strengthens the free-enterprise system here at home, because it encourages the expansion of production; and the alternative to an expansion of production, as we have seen from fairly recent experience, is curtailment of crops and industrial output on the Government's initiative (AAA and NRA) and an inevitable increase of that very governmental regimentation which the Republicans themselves profess to abhor. Finally, this Hull program corresponds with the realities of our creditor position as a nation.

Here is the United States, with about $11,000,000,000 of its privately owned capital invested abroad and with more billions of public funds outstanding in foreign countries in the form of the lend-lease settlements, the new credit to Britain and constantly increasing loans (for essential and commendable purposes) being made by the Export-Import Bank from day to day. How are interest and principal on this huge public and private investment to be paid? It cannot be paid in gold, for we have already cornered most of the world's monetary gold and we could not put any more gold to good use even if we got it. It cannot be paid in silver, for we have enough silver mines of our own. It cannot be paid in foreign paper money, for we will not accept paper money in such transactions, and the paper would be of no value to us if we did, unless we converted it into foreign goods. Foreign goods, in short—goods we need and can use and will buy if they become available without the penalty of too high tariffs—provide the only medium through which international obligations can be settled. Any proposal to increase the difficulties in the way of such settlement is sheer folly from the point of view of a creditor nation like the United States.

There is an immensely practical political consideration in all this, as well as the considerations which arise from a sound view of public policy. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the Republican Party has benefited greatly, in a political way, from the broad bipartisan agreement which has been achieved on such questions as the United Nations, on Russia, and on the atomic bomb. The existence of this broad agreement on foreign policy has made it possible for the Republican Party to rid itself, in the eyes of the independent voters of the country, of much of the old and unfortunately well-earned charge of prewar isolationism, and enabled it to focus the attention of the voters, and particularly of the independent voters, on the domestic, and more vulnerable, record of the Democratic Party during the long period of its present ascendancy in Washington. This advantage will be lost, and the Republican Party will find itself once more in the position of having to convince the independent voters that it is not the party of isolation, if Senator BUTLER, of Nebraska, is permitted to lead a Republican crusade against the Hull trade program.

EXHIBIT 2

[From the Washington Post of January 29, 1947]

ATOMIC HEARINGS

The old issue of civilian versus military control of atomic energy, threshed out and seemingly settled in the long debate last summer over establishment of the Atomic Energy Commission, has been raised again in Senate hearings on the confirmation of David E. Lilienthal. It is an issue which ought never to have arisen in a free society. The very consideration of it suggests a condition of panic. For the subordination of the military to civil authority is a cornerstone of the concept of government by consent. It is astounding to find this principle called into question by men of Senator VANDENBERG's or Senator MILLIKIN's caliber.

Senator MILLIKIN asked Mr. Lilienthal on Monday: "Why shouldn't the military liaison board sit in on all Atomic Energy Commission meetings? What would be the difficulty?" It is a testimonial, we think, to Mr. Lilienthal's self-control and tact that he was able to treat this query as a rational one. The answer, of course, is that this would put the Army precisely in the position from which the Senate with so much difficulty ousted it last summer—on the Commission itself. The long contention between the House and Senate, between the May-Johnson bill and the McMahon bill, was whether the military, as such, should have Commission membership. Senator VANDENBERG, out of a regard, we suppose, for the principle of civilian supremacy, was one of the sponsors of a settlement which denied membership to the military while providing for a due recognition of their interest and importance through a military liaison board. It is indeed paradoxical to find him now "underscoring" a proposal that would put the Army back in the saddle.

Still more strange is the fantasy entertained by Senator KNOWLAND that all meetings of the Atomic Energy Commission should be attended by members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. This would amount, patently, to a direct violation of the separation of powers enjoined by the Constitution. It is not the business of the legislature in our political system to engage in the day-to-day details of administration. Senator KNOWLAND'S proposal, also "underscored" by Senator VANDENBERG, would leave the development of atomic energy to a committee of Congress instead of to the Atomic Energy Commission created by Congress for this express purpose. Nothing like such an invasion of the executive domain has been suggested since Civil War days when Ben Wade and some of his congressional colleagues sought to take over from President Lincoln and his Cabinet the management of the war effort. And, in their behalf, it could at least be said that they were trying to prevent, not to promote, military domination.

In the present position of international relations, it cannot be doubted that the military aspects of atomic energy are of prime importance. David Lilienthal understands this as well as any Senator. He can be counted upon to be as zealous as any general for the maintenance of American superiority in the atomic field. Patriotism is not an attribute peculiar to men in uniform. And nothing, indeed, could be more inimical to the safety of the Nation than the idea, born of hysteria, that only the Army can keep a secret, only the Army can shape policies for our defense. The Army has already demonstrated its incompetence in the development of atomic energy. In peacetime, scientists will not, because they cannot, work under its sterile domination. From the viewpoint of expediency, therefore, military control is self-defeating. From the viewpoint of principle, it is thoroughly abhorrent.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. H. Calvin Knock, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Scottsbluff, Nebr., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the source of knowledge and truth and in Thy hand is the destinw of mankind. Thou hast endowed men with many rights, privileges, and opportunities. Thou hast blest our land abundantly and beyond our comprehension. The freedom we enjoy comes from Thee.

We confess that we have not always been good stewards of these sacred trusts. Our eyes have been blinded by selfishness in our search for truth and our hearts have been enslaved by indifference and prejudice when Thou hast sought to lead us. Liberate us from the shackles which prevent us from doing Thy will.

Each new day is a symbol of Thy eagerness to forgive our shortcomings and our failures and affords us an opportunity to renew our search for the virtues of the Christlike life. Our hearts are filled with gratitude for Thy many blessings.

We ask Thy benediction upon the three branches of our Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. We pray for the citizens of our land that they may realize their responsibilities as loyal members of this Nation. We pray for the people of other nations and lands that they, too, may have the blessings rightfully belonging to them.

In the name of Christ we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 3, 1947, was read and approved.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mr. MUHLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUHLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, as an example of bureaucratic autocracy at its worst and as showing how defense of large appropriations for clerk hire can be built up, I invite to the attention of the Congress the substance of a letter recently received by the Department of Labor and the consequent action of this Department. Some few days ago it received a letter signed by the national secretary of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, alleging that disputes between the union and employers existed as per an appended list; not as you might reasonably expect at a few plants, but at 1,500 separate establishments. Then the Department of Labor, taking the list as gospel—which they say is based on a ruling by the former Attorney General—sent out 1,500 letters over the signature of a Bernard Greenberg, docket officer, to 1,500 employers telling them that a dispute existed at their plants and that therefore a 30-day conciliation period was in effect, during which they were expected to adjust the dispute. Yes, 1,500 letters to 1,500 manufacturers telling them that in their plant a dispute existed; which must have been a shock to a lot of them. True or not, and I cannot imagine that 1,500 disputes in one industry—nonbasic steel—suddenly existed—and in the case of my constituent, and certainly many others, it is just not true—can you believe it sound procedure to send out 1,500 letters, at a cost of say, a dollar each, on the say-so of some labor leader without questioning the accuracy of his allegations? But there was no such question in the minds of the Department, action was automatic and instantaneous. Is this merely an example of a silly ruling by the former Attorney General based on a misconception of activities of the business world; and which ought to be changed by an application of common sense; is it on the other hand perhaps a flagrant exhibition of the cowed attitude of one of our bureaus in dealing with an aspect of labor relations; is it merely an example of the automatic service we desire from our clerical help for which we must set up money in our budget, or is it another example of a bureau flushed with power demonstrating their authority over helpless—and sometimes almost hopeless—manufacturers? Was it silly, or was it sinister—and shall we continue such procedure? I ask it, but the Congress must answer it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 36, Rept. 14), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

The committee shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of its studies, inquiries, and investigations, with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 90, Rept. 15), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee, or of any subcommittee, or by any member designated by any such chairman, and may be served by any person designated by any such chairman or member."

WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM CHINA

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I present herewith a privileged resolution (H. Res. 80) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish the House of Representatives full information in his possession relative to the withdrawal of our troops from China and to give full information in his possession relative to the basis of said decisions and of the withdrawal from the committee of three which was seeking a unified China and cessation of civil war.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 80) requesting the Secretary of State to furnish the House of Representatives full information relative to the withdrawal of troops from China, having considered the same, reports thereon without amendment, and recommends that the resolution do not pass.

In making this adverse report on House Resolution 80, the Committee on Foreign Affairs wishes to call attention of the House to action already being taken by the committee. On January 29, 1947, the chairman inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (page A344) the text of a preorganization subcommittee report and a committee resolution outlining the purpose of the committee to make a detailed study of the organization, the personnel, and the policies of the Department of State.

An invitation has already been extended, pursuant to this committee resolution, to the Secretary of State "to cooperate with the committee in such study and to furnish all necessary information" and the committee has agreed "to safeguard such information against any disclosure which is incompatible with the public interest."

Inasmuch as the Committee on Foreign Affairs has received a cordial response from the Secretary of State, and has initiated action to make a detailed study of the policies of the Department of State, including the subject matter of House Resolution 80, it is felt that no useful purpose would be served by its adoption.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I am happy to yield to our former colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is apparently an adverse report from the committee because the committee feels that it is going to take up the subject matter of the resolution which I introduced asking why practically all of our troops were removed from China. Of course, I feel that if the committee does that promptly, and gives us all of the information, which I am sure it will, it will not be incompatible with the public safety. There is really nothing more that I can say. I do urge speed upon the committee. I remember when General Marshall was Chief of Staff he was very eager to have the War Department answer every possible question asked it by a Member of Congress, pledging himself to secrecy, if necessary. So I have confidence that General Marshall and the Committee on Foreign Affairs will give us the information. And may I ask the gentleman if they will act promptly upon the withdrawal of troops from China?

Mr. VORYS. Answering the question of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, as the report shows, the committee has already launched upon a study of this and other matters and has received assurance of full cooperation from General Marshall. I think we all know how pressed the general himself is for time now. But the committee, making due allowance for that situation, is going forward with the study immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I think it might be helpful to have General Marshall's recent statement on the Chinese situation appear in full at this point in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that this be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and, of course, I shall not, I assume the Committee on Foreign Affairs expects to get all the information that is in the public interest but not make public any that it is not in the public interest to make known.

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman is perfectly correct in his assumption.

Mr. RAYBURN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEFAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if a request has been made in another body for the same information?

Mr. VORYS. I do not know the facts as to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY GENERAL MARSHALL, JANUARY 7, 1947

The following is a personal statement by General Marshall on the situation in China:

"The President has recently given a summary of the developments in China during the past year and the position of the American Government toward China. Circumstances now dictate that I should supplement this with impressions gained at first hand.

"In this intricate and confused situation, I shall merely endeavor here to touch on some of the more important considerations—as they appeared to me—during my connection with the negotiations to bring about peace in China and a stable democratic form of government.

"In the first place, the greatest obstacle to peace has been the complete, almost overwhelming suspicion with which the Chinese Communist Party and the Kuomintang regard each other.

"On the one hand, the leaders of the government are strongly opposed to a communistic form of government. On the other, the Communists frankly state that they are Marxists and intend to work toward establishing a communistic form of government in China, though first advancing through the medium of a democratic form of government of the American or British type.

"The leaders of the government are convinced in their minds that the Communist-expressed desire to participate in a government of the type endorsed by the political consultative conference last January had for its purpose only a destructive intention. The Communists felt, I believe, that the government was insincere in its apparent acceptance of the PCC resolutions for the formation of the new government and intended by coercion of military force and the action of secret police to obliterate the Communist Party. Combined with this mutual deep distrust was the conspicuous error by both parties of ignoring the effect of the fears and suspicions of the other party in estimating the reason for proposals or opposition regarding the settlement of various matters under negotiation. They each sought only to take counsel of their own fears. They both, therefore, to that extent, took a rather lopsided view of each situation and were susceptible to every evil suggestion or possibility. This complication was exaggerated to an explosive degree by the confused reports of fighting on the distant and tremendous fronts of hostile military contact. Patrol clashes were deliberately magnified into large offensive actions. The distortion of the facts was utilized by both sides to heap condemnation on the other. It was only through the reports of American officers in the field teams from executive headquarters that I could get even a partial idea of what was actually happening and the incidents were too numerous and the distances too great for the American personnel to cover all of the ground. I must comment here on the superb courage of the officers of our Army and marines in struggling against almost insurmountable and maddening obstacles to bring some measure of peace to China.

"I think the most important factors involved in the recent break-down of negotiations are these: On the side of the National Government, which is in effect the Kuomintang Party, there is a dominant group of reactionaries who have been opposed, in my opinion, to almost every effort I have made to influence the formation of a genuine coalition government. This has usually been under the cover of political or party action, but since the party was the government, this action, though subtle or indirect, has been devastating in its effect. They were quite frank in publicly stating their belief that cooperation by the Chinese Communist Party in the government was inconceivable and that only a policy of force could definitely settle the issue. This group includes military as well as political leaders.

"On the side of the Chinese Communist Party there are, I believe, liberals as well as radicals, though this view is vigorously opposed by many who believe that the Chinese Communist Party discipline is too rigidly enforced to admit of such differences of viewpoint. Nevertheless, it has appeared to me that there is a definite liberal group among the Communists, especially of young men who have turned to the Communists in disgust at the corruption evident in the local governments—men who would put the interest of the Chinese people above ruthless measures to establish a Communist ideology in the immediate future. The dyed-in-the-wool Communists do not hesitate at the most drastic measures to gain their end as, for instance, the destruction of communications in order to wreck the economy of China and produce a situation that would facilitate the overthrow or collapse of the government, without any regard to the immediate suffering of the people involved. They completely distrust the leaders of the Kuomintang Party and appear convinced that every government proposal is designed to crush the Chinese Communist Party. I must say that the quite evidently inspired mob actions of last February and March, some within a few blocks of where I was then engaged in completing negotiations, gave the Communists good excuse for such suspicions.

"However, a very harmful and immensely provocative phase of the Chinese Communist Party procedure has been in the character of its propaganda. I wish to state to the American people that in the deliberate misrepresentation and abuse of the action, policies, and purposes of our Government, this propaganda has been without regard for the truth, without any regard whatsoever for the facts, and has given plain evidence of a determined purpose to mislead the Chinese people and the world and to arouse a bitter hatred of Americans. It has been difficult to remain silent in the midst of such public abuse and wholesale disregard of facts, but a denial would merely lead to the necessity of daily denials; an intolerable course of action for an American official. In the interest of fairness, I must state that the Nationalist Government publicity agency has made numerous misrepresentations, though not of the vicious nature of the Communist propaganda. Incidentally, the Communist statements regarding the Anping incident which resulted in the death of 3 marines and the wounding of 12 others were almost pure fabrication, deliberately representing a carefully arranged ambuscade of a marine convoy with supplies for the maintenance of executive headquarters and some UNRRA supplies as a defense against a marine assault. The investigation of this incident was a tortuous procedure of delays and maneuvers to disguise the true and privately admitted facts of the case.

"Sincere efforts to achieve settlement have been frustrated time and again by extremist elements of both sides. The agreements reached by the Political Consultative Conference a year ago were a liberal and forward-looking charter which then offered China a basis for peace and reconstruction. However, irreconcilable groups within the Kuomintang Party, interested in the preservation of their own feudal control of China, evidently had no real intention of implementing them. Though I speak as a soldier, I must here also deplore the dominating influence of the military. Their dominance accentuates the weakness of civil government in China. At the same time, in pondering the situation in China, one must have clearly in mind not the workings of small Communist groups or committees to which we are accustomed in America, but, rather, of millions of people and an army of more than a million men.

"I have never been in a position to be certain of the development of attitudes in the innermost Chinese Communist circles. Most certainly, the course which the Chinese Communist Party has pursued in recent months indicated an unwillingness to make a fair compromise. It has been impossible even to get them to sit down at a conference table with Government representatives to discuss given issues. Now the Communists have broken off negotiations by their last offer which demanded the dissolution of the National Assembly and a return to the military positions of January 13 which the Government could not be expected to accept.

"Between this dominant reactionary group in the Government and the irreconcilable Communists who, I must state, did not so appear last February, lies the problem of how peace and well being are to be brought to the long-suffering and presently inarticulate mass of the people of China. The reactionaries in the Government have evidently counted on substantial American support regardless of their actions. The Communists by their unwillingness to compromise in the national interest are evidently counting on an economic collapse to bring about the fall of the Government, accelerated by extensive guerrilla action against the long lines of rail communications—regardless of the cost in suffering to the Chinese people.

"The salvation of the situation, as I see it, would be the assumption of leadership by the liberals in the Government and in the minority parties, a splendid group of men, but who as yet lack the political power to exercise a controlling influence. Successful action on their part under the leadership of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek would, I believe, lead to unity through good government.

"In fact, the National Assembly has adopted a democratic constitution which in all major respects is in accordance with the principles laid down by the all-party Political Consultative Conference of last January. It is unfortunate that the Communists did not see fit to participate in the assembly, since the constitution that has been adopted seems to include every major point that they wanted.

"Soon the Government in China will undergo major reorganization pending the coming into force of the constitution following elections to be completed before Christmas Day 1947. Now that the form for a Democratic China has been laid down by the newly adopted constitution, practical measures will be the best. It remains to be seen to what extent the Government will give substance to the form by a genuine welcome of all groups actively to share in the responsibility of government.

"The first step will be the reorganization of the state council and the executive branch of government to carry on administration pending the enforcement of the constitution. The manner in which this is done and the amount of representation accorded to Liberals and to non-Kuomintang members will be significant. It is also to be hoped that during this interim period the door will remain open for Communists or other groups to participate if they see fit to assume their share of responsibility for the future of China.

"It has been stated officially and categorically that the period of political tutelage under the Kuomintang is at an end. If the termination of one-party rule is to be a reality, the Kuomintang should cease to receive financial support from the Government.

"I have spoken very frankly because in no other way can I hope to bring the people of the United States to even a partial understanding of this complex problem. I have expressed all these views privately in the course of negotiations; they are well known, I think, to most of the individuals concerned. I express them now publicly, as it is my duty to present my estimate of the situation and its possibilities to the American people who have a deep interest in the development of conditions in the Far East promising an enduring peace in the Pacific."

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, in 1915 when the trumpets of war agony were sounding over the earth, Booker Taliaferro Washington died of overwork at the age of 59.

Theodore Roosevelt said of him that more than any person he ever knew, Booker T. Washington lived the faith of Micah to do justice, love, mercy, and walk humbly with God.

Thousands of Tuskegee graduates testify to the vision of Booker Taliaferro Washington and the 100 buildings there are a monument to his zeal. Degrees from Harvard and Dartmouth testify to the beneficence of his work. His amazing progress from slavery to leadership is a shining symbol of hope and assurance. His endeavors in the education field speak eloquently of the rightness of his philosophy to advance his race by instruction in a useful calling.

This work must go forward. No prayer is more effective than the prayer of work. No shrine is more ennobling than one which diffuses knowledge.

The Seventy-ninth Congress authorized the striking of memorial coins in honor of the achievements of Booker T. Washington and his contribution to the Nation. These will be sold at a premium and the proceeds used for the establishment of a school and shrine at the birthplace of this great yet humble man.

How fitting that in the month of February 1947—the month of Lincoln's birth anniversary—a drive should begin to market these coins and provide the funds with which to advance the work of a just man who came up from slavery. Surely this is a worthy cause.

THE BRITISH LOAN

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, last year, as a private citizen, I was opposed to the $3,750,000,000 loan to Great Britain. Most of the people in my section of the country were opposed to it. The GI could not understand why his terminal-leave pay had to be bonds while this loan to England was being passed. With the passage of the Loan Act, we all accepted it with good faith and expected, as we were told, that it would promote free trade and world peace. We still hope that it will be paid back in spite of the fact that England has been notorious in default of its obligations to this country in past years.

The real point I wish to bring to the attention of this Congress and to the American people is the amazing revelation that Great Britain is not adhering to the letter of this agreement. It is my understanding, from reliable sources of the press as carried in our leading papers, that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Snyder, wrote Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, last week protesting to him what this country considered a violation of the loan agreement as regards British trade with Argentina. The astounding thing about this revelation is that it is the second note dispatched to England in 4 months protesting a violation of the principles of the loan agreement. All of this coming so soon after the passage of the act, when a large part of the American people were led to believe that England was only interested in adjusting her economy and promoting world trade and better economic relations throughout the world, is disappointing to the people of this country who sympathized with the supposed objectives of this loan.

Under the present trade agreement between Britain and Argentina, in the years during which the British sell more goods to Argentina than they buy from her, Argentina can get part of the money owed her by Britain but can spend it only within the British Empire. This is a violation of the principles of the loan agreement which emphasized a free flow of trade. It is feared that England will pursue this same policy in trade agreements with other countries and lead to a monopolistic and selfish flow of world trade in favor of the British Isles.

I am most sympathetic toward the postwar problems of Great Britain and can fully appreciate her contribution to the Allied cause during World War II, as I served in that country as an enlisted man in our Air Forces.

I wish to remind this Congress of the fact that during the depression of the early 1930's, the United States was hardest hit of all the great world powers. The main cause for such a severe depression in America was the falling off of our export market. After a few years, when our production has filled domestic demands, it will again become necessary for us to export the products of our industry to prevent unemployment and another depression. The Bretton Woods proposals and this recent loan to England were supposed to promote free trade and help forestall another world-wide depression. I believe America should vigorously oppose any violation of the principles of any loan agreement to any foreign country, not only to protect our interest but the interest and economy of all nations. This Congress is the guardian of the tax money of the people, and we should make sure it is not loaned or given around the world to nations that violate the principles of sacred agreements.

The national debt of the United States today is nearly as large as the combined debts of all the nations of the world, and much larger than the combined debt of all the Allied Nations. It might be well for us to bear in mind these facts when considering any future loans to foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to hear these indirect attacks made upon England because I think I know that in the family of nations England is the only substantial friend we have. I think I also know that if the Empire should go to pieces, we would be in a position most difficult to defend.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, in one to include a magazine article and in the others to include copies of bills he expects to introduce today.

Mr. CELLER (at the request of Mr. O'TOOLE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of an amendment to the Civil Service Retirement Act and to extend his remarks in the RECORD in another instance and to include an article which appeared in the Infantry Journal.

A VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION CENTER FOR BOSTON

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, Massachusetts veterans, seeking advice or help under the GI bill of rights, are often required to trudge to seven separate and scattered buildings in the city of Boston, before they can find a solution to their individual problems.

This is a wasteful and demoralizing state of affairs which can be remedied only by support of the bill which I am introducing, providing for the erection of a Veterans' Administration building in downtown Boston at a cost of $5,000,000.

This will not only insure a consolidation of the present patchwork of veteran agencies making for more efficient and convenient service to the veterans, but will, in fact, be a saving to the Government.

At present, in Boston, we are paying high rentals for seven individual facilities. If this decentralized policy continues much longer, we will have paid out in rentals alone a sum approximately the cost of a permanent Government building.

This is not good service, and it is not good business.

Veterans are confused and disgusted. The physical separateness of the various branches of the Veterans' Administration has resulted in a deplorable lack of coordination. In too many cases, checks for authorized allowances to veterans have been held up for months because an agency in one part of the city does not know what another agency is doing. Under one roof, these dislocations would be minimized.

More than a year and a half ago, 20,000 signatures were forwarded from Boston to Washington, calling for the building of a new Veterans' Administration center for Boston, without any remedial action being taken.

In the meantime, the snarl has become worse, and public opinion is insistent that delay is no longer excusable.

To the proponents of economy, I suggest that favorable action on my bill would not only implement our commitments to the veterans, but would simplify the work of the Veterans' Administration in our area to a noticeable degree.

But, more than that, a new Veterans' Administration building for Boston will convince the veterans that we are doing our share of the job, adequately and efficiently.

They have every right to expect this from us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the legislative program and any other special orders that may have been granted, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the New York Times.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. DEANE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Lt. Gen. I. C. Eaker at the Biltmore Hotel, New York City, on January 22, at a luncheon given for the members of the Wings Club on the subject A Plan for National Security.

Mr. GRAHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Star.

INCREASED SUGAR ALLOWANCE

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therewith a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, many of the people from my congressional district are greatly disturbed over the allocation of sugar. The fact is, our housewives do not have enough sugar. They do not have sufficient sugar for table use and for cooking purposes, and they have very little or no sugar for canning. This situation must be remedied. Quite recently I was scanning the sheets of a paper, entitled "Food Topics," of date January 13, 1947, in which a picture appeared of a huge storage plant, at Green Bay, Wis., in which it was stated that "sugar decontrol will release this 6,000,000 pounds of beet sugar, stored at Green Bay." A picture accompanied the article, and sacks of sugar appeared, stored to the ceiling of the huge plant—all there to remain until the sugar decontrol becomes effective.

I urge that the allocation of sugar be liberalized, to the end that our housewives, and our homes, will have more sugar for domestic use.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include in my remarks an article appearing in Food Topics, of date January 13, 1947, upon this same subject. The article follows:

SEE SUGAR BOOST OF 2 TO 5 CENTS IN 5-POUND LOTS

Sugar prices will jump between 2 and 5 cents on 5-pound lots within a few months, sugar experts advise Food Topics, as the result of an increase in the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index which, under agreement, determines rates paid to Cuban growers. Increased transportation rates also will have an effect.

During the fortnight, numerous other developments on sugar were reported. They are:

1. Congressman CHESTER E. MERROW, Republican, New Hampshire, will introduce a bill to halt present sugar restrictions.

2. Congressman JENKINS, Republican, Ohio, chairman of the Republican Congressional Food Study Committee, said that both rationing and price control of sugar can be safely abolished late in 1947.

3. Whether sugar allotments will be increased in the United States depends on how much sugar the International Emergency Food Council permits to be shipped to England, Canada, and other countries.

INDUSTRY MAY GET MORE

4. Clinton P. Anderson said: "Barring unpredictable disaster, there will be enough sugar during the first 3 months of this year to permit giving consumers one additional 5-pound ration stamp by April 1." Industrial users may be permitted 10 percent more than they now are receiving (60 percent of their 1941 base use), Mr. Anderson said.

5. Retail grocers associations have adopted resolutions asking that shipment of sugar to foreign countries be curtailed. Included are the Ohio Retail Food Dealers Association, the Northern Kentucky Independent Food Dealers Association, and the Portland (Maine) Food Dealers Association.

6. Cuba reports 11,000,000 bags are needed to pack sugar. Cuba estimates that five and one-half to five and three-fourths million tons of sugar will be harvested this year.

CUBAN SUGAR PRICE UP

Food price increases in the United States during the third quarter have already increased the price of Cuban sugar. The Bureau of Labor Statistics' food price index for November increased 4 percent over October. If the December index equals the November figure, sugar dealers say that this will hike Cuban sugar to 4.85 cents per pound. The growers now receive 3.675 cents per pound

This increase to Cuban growers, plus an increase in freight rates (effective January 1) amounting to 10 cents per hundred pounds of sugar, is expected soon to reflect in the consumer price.

There is considerable speculation in Washington whether Congress will pass a bill continuing the Second War Powers Act. The act expires March 31. If no action is taken, this will end the present ration controls on sugar. Rice and sirup is also under control.

THE LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ascertain what the program is for the next few days. I imagine our majority leader can give it to us. Are we going to meet every other day, and for how long, or what is the program?

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will permit, later on in the day I think perhaps we can make some statement about it. Certainly a statement can be made tomorrow. The gentleman may not have been present, but I received unanimous consent that when the House meets tomorrow it meet at 11 o'clock. We expect to call up the bill just reported from the Committee on the Judiciary limiting the tenure of Presidents to two terms. The Rules Committee has until midnight tonight to file the rule. If that is disposed of on tomorrow, it is the intention to adjourn over until Monday. Then I will be in a position to announce the program.

Mr. REED of New York. Do I understand we are to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. HALLECK. That is correct.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman very much.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

BLUEPRINT PAPER AS A LUXURY

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, our bureaucrats continue to rule without rhyme, reason, or regard for the public interest. Last month the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, reversing a ruling in effect for 5 years, decided that blueprint paper—the paper used for the plans and drawings of all housing and other construction—is a luxury, subject to the 15-percent luxury excise tax on photographic equipment and apparatus. Thus the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has arbitrarily increased the cost of every housing job in the country.

I have today introduced a bill to correct this stupidity and I trust that it may quickly be enacted into law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

REPUBLICAN TAX PROGRAM

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the so-called compromise tax-reduction program suggested by my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] may be the politically expedient thing to do, but it is contrary to an election promise made by our Republican leaders last fall, and it is in direct conflict with a prepared statement issued last week by the Republican Members from Illinois, to which statement the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. ALLEN] subscribed. That statement pledging a 20-percent income-tax reduction went to every newspaper in Illinois only yesterday.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if such a compromise program is adopted it will be an open acknowledgment that the income-tax rates of our present tax laws are unjust and inequitable; that they place a heavier tax load upon the man in the lower brackets than his fair share, and therefore this inequity should now be adjusted. I do not agree with that position. I voted for the present tax rates upon incomes, because I believed them fair, just, and equitable; distributing the heavy load of taxation upon the basis of ability to pay. I give credit to the Democratic Party for preparing and passing such an equitable tax measure, and I do not propose to readjust the tax load on the basis of political expediency in lieu of upon the basis of ability to pay. The present much-too-heavy tax load, forced upon the Nation by the New Deal era of squanderlust, is at present adjusted upon the basis of ability to pay, and a 20-percent reduction straight across the board will keep the tax load spread equitably.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Un-American Activities be permitted to sit tomorrow during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

REREFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 70) to amend the act of April 14, 1930, to provide increased retired pay for certain members of the former life-saving service, which originally was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service be rereferred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

I have discussed the matter with the chairman of both committees and there is no objection to the rereference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

THE LATE ADMIRAL MARC MITSCHER

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, today at the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., will be laid to rest with full military honors one of our greatest naval heroes, Admiral Marc Mitscher, whose wartime task force shattered the Japanese air power.

Admiral Mitscher truly gave his life for his country.

Admiral Mitscher grew up in Hillsboro, Wis., in my congressional district. I am proud that he was my constituent. The people of Hillsboro are proud of Admiral Mitscher. The friends and neighbors in the old home town honored their hero in their biggest homecoming celebration in history when Marc Mitscher came back to visit with the home folks and old-time friends in Hillsboro last summer on his return from the greatest naval victory of World War II. The Japanese Navy was totally destroyed by the prowess of Admiral Mitscher's fleet and carrier task force.

Admiral Mitscher was a rugged fighter. He was a pioneer airman. "Pete" Mitscher, as he was affectionately called by his close friends, applied for pilot training shortly after graduating from the Naval Academy, and became one of the first naval officers to win his wings.

Admiral Mitscher conceived the idea of large-scale carrier warfare between fleets out of sight of each other. His pioneer spirit materialized into reality in World War II and was the major cause of the complete defeat of the Japanese Navy. Admiral Marc A. Mitscher and Admiral John S. McCain, who alternately commanded the Pacific Task Force, completely demoralized the Japanese Navy by alternately designating the Pacific Task Force as Task Force 38 and Task Force 58, according to which of them happened to be in command at the time. The Japanese Navy was thus tricked into believing that two major task forces of the United States Navy were roaming the Pacific. The resulting effect on Japanese morale was devastating, and the Japanese Navy was blown out of the Pacific.

Admiral Mitscher credited his air pilots as the best-trained fighters in the world. He knew them to be the best because he trained them and equipped them to be the best. He always maintained that his boys deserved full credit for what they did and insisted that the kids under his command received the military decorations and citations due them.

Admiral Marc Mitscher was loved by all who served him. Our country has lost a great naval hero. The kids who served under him have lost a true friend. Wisconsin is proud of the boy from Hillsboro who became one of the greatest admirals in the American Navy. I am proud to represent the Third District of Wisconsin, where Admiral Mitscher grew to manhood and made his home. The Nation mourns the loss of one of its most valiant heroes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEVENSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the La Crosse Tribune, of La Crosse, Wis., entitled "To Avert Waste."

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and in each to include printed matter.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix and include excerpts from letters, newspapers, and magazines.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by Mr. Albert H. Redles, entitled "A Serious Menace to Smaller Business in America."

Mr. KEAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include three editorials.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper item.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next I may address the House for 20 minutes following the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, on the subject of Lincoln's birthday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF BANKHEAD-JONES FARM TENANCY ACT

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill to amend title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act which will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the land contained in what are known as land utilization projects. These projects are located in some 32 States and contain over 7,000,000 acres. Senator BUTLER, of Nebraska, is introducing a companion bill in the Senate. I introduced a similar bill in the Seventy-ninth Congress, as I feel very strongly that these lands should be returned to private ownership.

This bill was written by officials of the Soil Conservation Service, which agency is now administering these lands. I have discussed this legislation with these men in the Department of Agriculture, and I believe everyone is now agreed that these lands should be sold. A preference is given to World War II veterans, and there is considerable interest among veterans in this legislation.

It is now costing the Government about a million dollars a year to administer these lands, much of which is leased for grazing and other agricultural purposes.

Most of this land was purchased by the Government more than 10 years ago. The purposes of the law were to retire submarginal lands and those not primarily suitable for cultivation. Much of the land was bought during and immediately after the drought period in the Western States. It was good land, but for several years the owners had not been able to cultivate the same, due to lack of moisture. In the past few years this land has been productive and has been leased by the Government to those owning adjoining lands.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose for which most of this land was purchased has long since been accomplished. I see no reason for the Government to continue in the land business. This land should go back on the tax rolls in the respective counties and States.

As I mentioned, veterans of World War II are given the preference in buying this land, except where the present user of the land requires the same to make up an economic unit. In such cases the present permittee is given an opportunity to purchase the land at the appraised price and there is no interference with his operations. There is plenty of land available, and in some cases veterans must be allocated a large acreage because of the nature of the land. These details are being left to the Secretary of Agriculture, and I feel confident the program of selling this land can be carried out satisfactorily to all parties concerned.

I hope this bill will be favorably considered and passed by the House at an early date so that this land can be returned to private ownership with the least possible delay.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to introduce in the RECORD in my extension an editorial appearing in the Evening Star of Washington, January 27, together with six articles appearing in that paper referred to in the editorial with suitable introductory remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article on the foot-and-mouth disease.

EXCISE TAX ON TRAILER HOUSES

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, when the Ways and Means Committee and the other affiliated committees of the House come down to the matter of definitely extending excise taxes, I hope it will be the good judgment of those committees to remove excise taxes from trailer houses. All over this country we find fine men and women who are forced to live in trailer houses in order to attend colleges and universities as well as to carry on their industrial duties. It does not seem to me fair to impose excise taxes on house trailers when no excise taxes are imposed on residential property otherwise used. I hope the committee will remove that tax.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTS] for today and tomorrow, on account of official business on behalf of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Members of this body who are interested in the welfare of the farmer realize that under the administration of the so-called reciprocal trade agreements program agricultural tariff schedules have been cut 252 times and, further, to an average of 40 percent of that which they had been under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act.

As a result of these tariff cuts the importation of competitive agricultural products have increased 57 percent whereas our exports of agricultural products, have fallen off to 30 percent less than they had been in 1934, the year the Trade Agreements Act was enacted.

To those who have been applauding this progressive strangulation of our American protective tariff system this may be good news, but to the average American, the farmer in particular, those of other industries who have been singled out for slaughter, there is very little to cheer about.

BOY SCOUT WEEK

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to add my tribute to the many commendations that the Boy Scouts of America are receiving during this Scout Anniversary Week. For 37 years this organization, operating under a Federal charter from Congress, has been providing a constructive program for the boys of the Nation. Boys who once followed the trail to their Scout camps and learned their first aid and other skills are now men of affairs. Many of my fellow members in this assembly are former Scouts. I have been impressed by the evidence frequently given by these former Scouts that Scout training has helped them in their later activities, and above all that the lessons of good citizenship and right character that they acquired have been abiding forces through the years. At this time there are a million and a half boys who are getting Scout training. There are nearly 8,000,000 more who want it and need it. They may never receive it unless leadership and the help are forthcoming in their home communities. There is something each of us can do to help these boys, and that is to support the work of the Boy Scouts in an intelligent and forceful manner, as one means of insuring unselfish and patriotic citizens for the future.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, for the last 2 years the Committee on Un-American Activities has been on the trail of those foreign spies circulating through this country trying to get the secrets of the atomic bomb. We have been criticized in Congress, abused by a certain element of the press, and maligned over the radio as "witch hunters" and "hate mongers."

While we did not get the support we deserved in this country, we did get the help of the Canadian Government, which captured some of these spies and punished them.

It is amusing now to hear Mr. Barney Baruch, perhaps America's No. 1 self-advertiser, come out and yell for locking the door now that the horse is gone—or would be gone if it had not been for the Canadian Government.

I want you Members of the House to come down tomorrow and attend our hearing. We are going to have before the Committee on Un-American Activities the chief Communist agent in America.

If you do not know that this country is in danger and being undermined at home and insulted abroad by these elements, just come down and hear the testimony that will be developed before the Committee on Un-American Activities tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

CONFUSION IN OUR EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, in the past few days, I have received shocking new evidence of the incredible confusion which still reigns in some of our executive departments.

Representatives of our Government are scouring the country on purchasing missions seeking to buy sheets, towels, garments, and dozens of other items for the use of our hospitals, prisons, and other Federal institutions. At the same time, our Government agencies charged with the responsibility of disposing of surplus war materials are printing huge catalogs listing these very same articles for sale.

Our Government's right hand is concealing its assets from its left. We are going to incredible expense in a most inefficient method of seeking to sell our surplus goods while we ourselves are paying large sums of money for the very merchandise we already have on our shelves in another department.

I am certain that this will blow up in a huge scandal when our purchasing agencies suddenly discover that they are about to buy back from private sellers materials which these private sellers themselves bought from our war surplus sales agencies.

There are thousands of khaki garments, towels, bed sheets, and similar items which are not of general sales value being offered for sale with few takers. Those same items ought to be channeled directly to our prisons and hospitals.

Anything less efficient than this is a direct and unconscionable abuse of Federal tax funds.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, while the Committee on Rules was in session passing on a resolution to investigate certain departments and other matters, I understand unanimous consent was given to take up the Presidential term-of-office bill at 11:30. May I call attention to the fact that a rule has not as yet been granted, and after it is granted I think that the chairman of the committee, if it is to be considered tomorrow, should have unanimous consent to file the rule during the day.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. That unanimous consent has already been obtained. The Committee on Rules has until midnight tonight to file the rule.

Mr. SABATH. I am mighty glad to hear that. Not because I am in favor of the resolution, but because in matters of this kind I am always pleased to aid the Republican side in the hope of promoting and bringing about orderly procedure.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Can the gentleman inform the House how many hours' debate have been allotted to this bill?

Mr. SABATH. The Committee on Rules will meet at 2 o'clock today to take up the rule on this resolution, and I am not now in a position to say how much time will be provided for general debate. I hope that Members will have ample opportunity to express their views on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, it appears to be the intention of the leadership to bring before the House tomorrow for action a bill which would change the Constitution of the United States in that it would limit the terms of the President of the United States. It seems to me that is a very important measure. I trust that it is not the intention of the leadership to rush that bill through in 1 day, because it is so important a matter. I think we ought to have plenty of general debate on the subject and plenty of time for amendment, and if the Committee on Rules takes that into consideration in granting a rule, I think they will give us a couple of days on it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am in complete agreement with the gentleman's position. This is probably the most important question we will vote on, and there should be plenty of debate. I do not know what the Committee on Rules is going to do, but certainly it ought to allow plenty of time for the Members to discuss this all-important question.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I think it is an important matter, too. That is the reason we are going to do something about it. The measure was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary by a vote of 20 to 6, and I rather suspect the sentiment will be very much along that line.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not the question now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the time allowed should be adequate for Members to discuss this all-important matter. This is the second matter coming before the House. With all the other questions that could come before the House, this one to amend the Constitution is the second. Last week it was announced it would be reported out without hearings. Then hearings were held. It was announced before the subcommittee held hearings that the matter would be considered this week. We can interpret that and the people can interpret it. But one thing is certain, there should not be only 2 hours of debate. There ought to be at least 2 days of debate. In any event, limiting debate to 2 hours would be an unreasonable restriction.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course the gentleman knows that it is within the province of the Committee on Rules to fix the time of debate, and it will do that this afternoon. The gentleman made a statement before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I take it he will have every opportunity to state the facts tomorrow. The fact of the matter is that the people of this country have been debating and discussing this matter for a long time, and the overwhelming majority clearly favors such action as this.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether or not that is so and whether or not the gentleman's statement is correct, the fact remains that Members with fixed opinions on the question should not be limited to an hour of debate on a constitutional amendment, one of the most important questions Members of the House, in their own conscience and without regard to party, will pass upon. It is unfortunate the leadership of the Republican Party, as far as the newspapers are concerned, have made it a party matter, and will vote on it in this Congress as a party measure.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENSES

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been directed to a number of comments by radio commentators and certain editors and editorial writers who seem to follow the general theme that it is time for the Republicans to fish or cut bait. Some of them seem to indicate that the Republican Party, now in control of the legislative machinery of the Congress, is being utterly slow in cutting the expenditures of Government and driving unnecessary personnel off the pay roll.

I call attention to the fact, and I think every Member is familiar with it, that the Executive Department of the Government is now operating under appropriations that were made under the auspices of the present New Deal executive administration, and that unless we are able to rescind those appropriations they will continue in full force for expenditure until the end of the present fiscal year.

I want to assure the public and the people of America who are interested in economies in Government that the various subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations are busily engaged in the onerous task of surveying the requests for appropriations for the next fiscal year. I assure the Members of Congress and the people of America that when these appropriation bills are reported, providing funds for the next fiscal year, you will see some very decided cuts brought to the attention of the Congress. As chairman of one of the subcommittees that is busily engaged in an effort to reduce the nonessentials of Government, I hope you will stand behind your subcommittees and your Committee on Appropriations in the effort that will be made, first, to reduce the cost of Government and get rid of unnecessary instrumentalities of Government, and, when we balance the Budget and provide for a reserve, then to provide an equitable tax reduction across the board.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF UNITED NATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 81)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 I submit herewith my first annual report to the Congress on the activities of the United Nations and the participation of the United States therein.[1]

The Charter of the United Nations came into force as a fundamental law for the peoples of the world on October 24, 1945. The General Assembly convened for the first time in London in January 1946. It elected the Secretary-General and brought into being the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, and the International Court of Justice.

In December 1946, at the second part of its first session, in New York, the General Assembly completed its main organizational tasks by establishing the Trusteeship Council. Thus all of the principal organs of the United Nations have now been established. All of them, except the Trusteeship Council, have been working on their appointed tasks during most of the past year.

The policy of the United States, as I told the General Assembly in New York on October 23, 1946, is to "support the United Nations with all the resources that we possess * *  not as a temporary expedient but as a permanent partnership."

That policy—in season and out—in the face of temporary failure as well as in moments of success—has the support of the overwhelming majority of the American people. It must continue to have this support if the United States is to fulfill its appointed role in the United Nations, if the United Nations is to fulfill its purposes, and if our land is to be preserved from the disaster of another and far more terrible war.

In the work of the United Nations during the past year the United States has sought constantly to carry out that policy. Our representatives have spoken for the whole Nation. They have been Democrats and Republicans, members of both the executive and legislative branches of our Government, men and women from private life.

[1] On March 19, 1946, I transmitted to the Congress the report submitted to me by the Secretary of State on the first part of the first session of the General Assembly in London.

The work of the United Nations during the past year has been the work of building foundations for the future.

First of all, there have been the structural foundations. The Assembly, the Councils, the Court and the Secretariat have had a vast amount of organizational work to do in order to establish themselves as functioning agencies of the international community. Much of this has been pioneering work. The whole structure of the United Nations is a far more extensive endeavor in international cooperation than the nations have ever before attempted.

The essential parts of this structure include not only the principal organs established by the Charter. They include equally the specialized agencies, such as the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Labor Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the proposed World Health Organization, and the International Trade Organization and several others. Each of these specialized agencies operates in a specific field under its own constitution. Each is or will be related to the central structure of the United Nations through the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. There is scarcely a field of activity having a common interest for the peoples of the world for which continuing instruments of international cooperation have not been developed during the past year.

Perhaps the most immediately significant development of the past year in this direction was the General Assembly's demonstration of its power to influence the policies of nations and to bring about greater understanding among them. The Assembly possesses few definitive powers. It makes recommendations that can be translated into effective law only by the action of the nations concerned. But the Assembly during its meetings in New York expressed a higher sovereignty of the people's will in a manner which promises much for its development as a dominant power for peace and progress in the world.

The building of the structural foundations of the United Nations during the past year has been accompanied by action over a very broad field toward giving life and meaning to the purposes and principles of the Charter.

There has been progress toward building security from war. Step by step we have advanced the first part of the way toward agreement on the essential principles of a truly effective international system of control over the means of destruction that science has placed in the hands of mankind.

The initiative in the control of atomic energy and other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction was taken by the United States. The resolution creating the Atomic Energy Commission was adopted at the first meeting of the General Assembly in London. The United States presented in the Atomic Energy Commission last June its proposals for international control of atomic energy. The Soviet Union opposed these proposals, but the Commission worked throughout the summer and fall to build the bases for agreement.

In October the Soviet Union introduced in the General Assembly proposals on the general regulation and reduction of armaments that seemed at first far removed from the United States position. Nevertheless, 7 weeks later the Assembly was able to adopt unanimously a resolution reaffirming all the principles of the atomic energy resolution and reflecting for the first time unanimous agreement on the essential principle of a system of international control and inspection established by treaty and not subject to any veto in its operations.

Two and a half weeks later, on December 31, the Atomic Energy Commission transmitted its first report to the Security Council. The report had been adopted by the Commission by a vote of 10 to 0, the Soviet Union and Poland abstaining.

Many months of hard work and difficult negotiation in the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission lie ahead. Not all the essential principles have yet been agreed upon. The problem of enforcement must still be resolved. All the principles must be given specific and practical application in treaties and conventions unanimously agreed upon.

This is one of the main tasks before the United Nations in the coming year. To succeed, we must at the same time build the other essential foundations of a general system of collective security. The nations can safely lay aside their arms only insofar as their security is protected by other means.

An essential element of collective security will be the ability of the Security Council to fulfill its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. In its consideration of international disputes during its first year the Council demonstrated increasing power to ameliorate situations that otherwise might have become dangerous and to influence the policies of nations in the direction of upholding the purposes and principles of the Charter. This was generally true even when the five permanent members failed to reach the required unanimity for definitive action. The Security Council's application on a continuing basis of the public and peaceful methods of the Council chamber to the settlement of disputes between nations is a new development in international relations, the significance of which gives every promise of becoming more apparent in the year ahead.

Important steps have been taken by the United Nations during the past year toward economic reconstruction and toward establishing the necessary basis for an expanding peacetime trade and employment.

A draft trade charter establishing principles and practices aimed at increasing the volume of world trade and employment by reducing or eliminating artificial trade barriers and restrictions has been proposed by the United States and is now being developed by a preparatory committee of 18 nations. One of the primary United Nations tasks of the year ahead is the adoption of such a charter and the creation of an international trade organization to carry it out.

The General Assembly has unanimously asked the Economic and Social Council to act on recommendations for the reconstruction and integration of the European economy and establishment of an economic commission for Europe. This commission would unite all the interested countries, including the Soviet Union on the east and the United States on the west, in a common program. Steps toward economic reconstruction and development in the Far East will also be undertaken by the Economic and Social Council this year.

Progress has also been made by the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies during the past year in many other respects. It is not too much to say that the establishment and maintenance of lasting peace will depend in large part upon the ability of the United Nations to carry through to a successful conclusion the work it has begun toward world economic recovery and cooperation.

The promotion and protection of basic human rights for all peoples is a fundamental purpose of the United Nations. Active support for the wider realization of these rights and freedoms has been and should continue to be a primary objective of United States policy in the United Nations.

During the past year our representatives in the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council took the initiative in writing a charter for the International Refugee Organization under which the right to freedom and another chance for a decent life of a million victims of war and racial, political, or religious oppression would be preserved. I shall recommend to the Congress prompt acceptance of the constitution of the IRO and appropriation of our share of the expenses of its program.

The United States believes that freedom of information must be realized on a far wider basis than exists in the world today if the United Nations is to succeed. We have strongly supported the policy of public debate of all issues in the United Nations because this promotes public knowledge and understanding and gives the peoples of the world a more direct opportunity to influence the results. We have also asked for action to break down the barriers to a wider, freer flow of information in the world. Preparations are now going forward for a world conference on freedom of information before the end of this year as one step in this direction.

The provisions of the Charter relating to dependent peoples offer to those hundreds of millions who do not yet govern themselves their best hope for attainment of this and other basic human rights and freedoms. The United States Representatives took a leading part in the General Assembly in bringing about the establishment of the trusteeship system in the face of sharp disagreements and other major difficulties that might have caused indefinite delay. The United States will support further steps during the coming year toward strengthening the trusteeship system.

America has long been a symbol of freedom and democratic progress to peoples less favored than we have been. We must maintain their belief in us by our policies and our acts.

One of the important long-range achievements of the General Assembly's first session was the adoption of resolutions introduced by the United States on the codification and development of international law.

The General Assembly unanimously directed its committee on codification to give first attention to the charter and the decision of the Nuremberg Tribunal, under which aggressive war is a crime against humanity for which individuals as well as states must be punished. The Assembly also agreed that genocide—the deliberate policy of extermination of a race or class or any other human group—was a crime under international law. These developments toward the application of international law to individuals as well as to states are of profound significance to the state. We cannot have lasting peace unless a genuine rule of world law is established and enforced.

The justifiable hope and confidence to which the great progress of the United Nations in the past year has given rise can be betrayed and lost. The difficulties and dangers that lie before us are many and serious. They are strewn across the road that leads to the final peace settlements, to the establishment and maintenance of collective security, to the control of atomic energy and regulation and reduction of other arms, to the attainment of economic recovery and an expanding world economy, and to the wider realization of human rights.

Our policy of supporting the United Nations with all the resources that we possess must be given effective practical application on a genuinely national, bipartisan basis in every activity of the United Nations. This is just as necessary in the economic and social field as it is in the political field. We must pursue without hesitation bipartisan policies of economic cooperation with the rest of the world in such matters as economic reconstruction and development and the expansion of world trade and employment. Because of the interdependence of the economy of nations, it will also be vital to world recovery as well as to our own prosperity that we maintain at home a stable economy of high employment.

The responsibility of the United States is a particularly heavy one because of the power and influence that our history and our material resources have placed in our hands. No nation has a higher stake in the outcome than our own.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1947.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. OWENS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include therein a letter from the War Department.)

THE GERMAN PRISONER SITUATION

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, within the past 2 weeks I was the recipient of an invitation from the Secretary of War, along with a number of other newly elected Members, to attend a luncheon at the Pentagon Building. There we met General Eisenhower and the members of his staff. After enjoying a very good luncheon we adjourned to one of the numerous rooms in that building and were shown a motion picture setting forth in detail the work of our Army on foot, on wheels, and in the air. It was very thrilling and inspiring. At times it almost caused feelings of horror.

After that film was shown, another was thrown on the screen depicting the present situation in Germany. It showed our boys and the families of our boys living in Germany. They were given homes where they could live. The wives were furnished servants and also men to work in the gardens. They showed us pictures of the countryside in Germany which appeared to never have been reached by the ravages of war.

Here is what I noticed about that picture: In the home the maid would be speaking to the housewife telling her, we were informed, that it was not Germany's fault that it had entered the war. The gardener also would be speaking to the mistress of the house and telling her that it was not Germany's fault; also the driver of a truck told the same story to a GI who had solicited a ride. Another part of the film showed a young Nazi smoking a cigarette, looking straight out into the eyes of the audience and blowing the smoke right in their faces.

The picture also showed scenes of cities in the American area. They were a shambles, there was devastation on every hand. People were working in the streets removing the debris by hand, by pick and shovel, and wheelbarrow, and by derrick.

The strange thing about it all was that there was not one man working on the streets, they were all women.

Aside from the actors in the drama who were part of the propaganda portion of the film, there was not a man working. There were the athletic performers demonstrating their skill to a large number of German women and children with bicycles and other athletic equipment during the course of the entertainment features that were given to the GI's and their families.

I inquired about this situation, and the War Department very courteously sent over to my office Colonel Pitchford and Lieutenant Colonel Cavanaugh. They also were very courteous and efficient in furnishing the information which I requested. We had a long conversation with respect to conditions in Germany. After they finished giving me the details I asked them if they would send a report to me setting forth the more specific items of information which I was requesting concerning the German prisoners that had been taken. I had already read quite a bit about certain prisoners whom we had turned over to France, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, and Belgium; however, this written report which I received just a few days ago gives the details very satisfactorily.

I shall include this report here in the extension of my remarks. I am not going to read it to you because it is rather lengthy. It follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1947.

Hon. THOMAS L. OWENS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OWENS: This is in reply to your verbal request and our conversation concerning the liberation of German prisoners of war captured during World War II.

In view of the fact that no official releases concerning either the German prisoners of war captured or released by other Allied Governments, the information contained herein must necessarily be confined to the efforts of the United States in this activity. However, unofficial estimated figures of German prisoners of war captured by Allied Governments are as follows:

Russia	3,400,000
Great Britain	2,031,000
France	315,000
The Netherlands	153
Total	5,746,153

This total, together with the approximate figure of 2,889,000 German prisoners captured by the United States forces, makes a grand total of approximately 8,635,153 Germans captured by the Allied forces. Of the 2,889,000 German prisoners of war captured by the United States forces, 674,000 prisoners were transferred to the custody of France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg by agreement with the United States for the purpose of assisting in the work of devastated areas in those countries.

The maximum number of prisoners interned in prisoner-of-war camps in the United States were:

Germans	378,898
Italians	51,455
Japanese	5,435
Total	435,788

Of these, approximately 175,000 prisoners were captured by the British forces.

The first large shipments of German prisoners of war were received in the United States during June 1943 and these shipments were completed during the early part of 1944. It is estimated that the average stay of every prisoner of war in the United States was approximately 2 years.

Beginning in November 1945, the United States began the return from this country of prisoners of war interned in the United States prison camps. With the exception of 202 prisoners still in the United States, this shipment of prisoners of war from this country was completed in July 1946. A breakdown of those prisoners remaining in the United States as of January 1, 1947, is as follows:

Penal institutions (113 Germans)	147
In hospitals (1 German)	3
Held as witnesses in capital offenses (all Germans)	14
Held for FBI in harboring cases (2 Germans)	9
In escapee status (22 Germans)	29

All of these prisoners, removed from the United States, were returned to the theaters in which they were captured, for rehabilitation, except the 175,000 British-captured prisoners, who were returned to the British. As of November 30, 1946, there remained in the United States custody in the European theater of operations, 50,700 German prisoners of war, 2,191,089 prisoners having been discharged. It is estimated that the liberation of these remaining prisoners will be completed by the end of this year.

At the recent conferences of Foreign Ministers in Paris, former Secretary of State Byrnes asked France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg for the return of the 674,000 prisoners transferred to their custody, in order that they may be liberated. It is the understanding of the War Department that an agreement was reached which is expected to effect the return and liberation of these prisoners by the end of this year. In this connection you are assured that the War Department is in complete sympathy with the Department of State policy for the early release and repatriation of all German prisoners of war except those held for trial or convicted of war or civil crimes.

Of the 435,788 prisoners of war interned in United States camps, 960 died while in the United States. This is broken down as follows:

Germans	791
Italians	131
Japanese	38

The above amount represents approximately one-tenth of 1 percent deaths per year of internment.

It must be remembered that as late as mid-1946, Germany did not have any of her able-bodied male citizens within her borders. Newspaper accounts have indicated that Germany lost between eight and ten millions of men killed, and an additional eight to nine millions as prisoners of war to the Allies. It is estimated that a large portion of those prisoners of war who have been liberated by the United States forces during recent months, totaling over two million, reside in the Russian, British, and French occupied zones, which represents the most heavily populated area of Germany. Upon being released, these men would naturally migrate to their respective homes. No effort is being made by the United States forces in Germany to keep track of these released prisoners after they are free. This action is precluded by the fact that these men are perfectly free to come and go as they wish upon being liberated, and the administrative burden of trying to keep track of their activities would be prohibitive.

Your considerate interest in this question of handling of prisoners of war is sincerely appreciated and I trust that this information will enable you to advise your constituent in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

MILES REBER,
Brigadier General, GSC, Deputy Chief Legislative and Liaison Division.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about some of the salient facts in that report. The particular thing I was inquiring about was this dearth of manpower in Germany, especially in the American-occupied area. I am informed that the number of men who were killed in Germany was between eight and ten million. I have certain unofficial reports, so far as our allies are concerned, about the prisoners they captured, because neither Great Britain nor Russia would give us official figures. The unofficial figures show that Russia captured approximately three million five hundred thousand prisoners and that England captured in excess of 2,000,000, France a little over 300,000, and the United States 2,900,000 men. Of this number of prisoners about 380,000 were brought to the United States, which included 175,000 that had been turned over to us by England. Those 175,000 were prisoners that had been captured by England. Almost every one of the prisoners in the United States was repatriated. At the present time we have only 202 prisoners, including 137 who are in prison for penal offenses. We liberated 2,000,000 additional men in Europe, making a total of over 2,200,000 whom we have liberated. We turned over to France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg 675,000 prisoners who I am informed were captured in the years 1943 and 1944. They have been held in those countries and have been placed at work supposedly clearing out the devastated areas.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak at length in reference to the situation concerning the 6,000,000 prisoners who were captured by Great Britain and by Russia and of the use being made by those countries of those men, and may I interpolate that we do not receive much information in reference to the prisoners. I could also point out that if we were to follow some of the advice given to us in the very excellent talks by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] about 2 weeks ago, and follow the program that General MacArthur has instituted in Japan, we could probably use that force to help stem the onrush of what Mr. DIRKSEN called "red fascism." But that is not what I want to talk about today primarily. I want to refer to the 675,000 prisoners, and I want to refer to the over 2,000,000 who were liberated. Incidentally, after the 2,000,000 were liberated the explanation is given that they must have returned to the zones occupied by Russia and Great Britain, because those are the zones in which are located much of the manufacturing, industry, and business of Germany. In other words, the Americans have only the scenery over there in Germany. This seemed to be apparent from the report.

The 675,000 men to which I have previously referred appear to be used to replace men in the Netherlands and France so that France may go over to Indochina, wage a war there to reestablish her decadent colonial empire. Great Britain seems to be doing the same thing with reference to the Dutch East Indies, where it is reported that with the aid of their brave Japanese they were able to repulse the attacks of the Indonesians. They have also been able to place an iron heel on Palestine. We in America who live in freedom have abolished slavery and involuntary servitude, yet we are a party to turning over to those nations 675,000 men who, 2 or 3 years after their recapture, and 2 years after the war has ended in Europe, are still slaving in those countries. I am reliably informed that the prisoners working in Corsica for France are skin and bones. They are barely able to raise the hammers to do the work that has been assigned to them. What if we had lost the war and our boys were being held as slaves from returning to their homes. How would we feel? Are we going to follow the biblical adage about an "eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," or are we going to adhere to the Christian principle, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you"?

Mr. Speaker, when we speak of un-American activities, as we have been doing in this House, I say that that activity is un-American; it is not humane; it is not Christian. We should end it. After Secretary of State Byrnes asked that those men be repatriated, those nations made a promise that some of them might be liberated this year. I say that is not enough. Those men should not be liberated this year or next year; they should be liberated now. If France and the Netherlands and those other nations will not accede to our request, then let us take measures and sanctions against them. Let us stop giving them gifts and dowries, and if that is not enough, let us take more appropriate action. It will only be then that our Government will be American; that it will be Christian; that it will be humane. I say that if the State Department does not take some action in regard to that, I shall ask the Congress to take definite action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SUGAR

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to briefly discuss the subject of sugar. A subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture was appointed to conduct an investigation of shortages of food and other agricultural products. The committee completed its investigation as to sugar supplies last week and filed a report with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, giving an accurate and clear picture of the supply situation of sugar in the world.

The primary purpose of the committee was to secure more sugar for the American people in 1947, and I believe the findings of our committee will warrant a substantial increase in the allowance of direct sugar for the American consumers as well as for industrial and institutional users. I commend a reading of the report to you. A copy of it was sent to each Member of the House last Saturday and additional copies will be available for Members through the House Committee on Agriculture on Thursday afternoon of this week.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to commend the gentleman's committee for putting out this exhaustive report. I have read every word of it, including the supporting tables, and I think every Member of the House should pay some attention to it, especially in view of the fact that these people are so much interested in this subject.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman.

The report of the committee is not a political document in any manner. It was the unanimous report of the members of the subcommittee. It was our purpose and objective to secure as accurate information as we could on the supply situation. After all, the sugar crop for use in 1947 has either been produced or is now being harvested and refined in the United States, which also includes Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and, I might also say, Cuba, which is not a part of the United States.

As I stated before, our purpose is to secure more sugar in 1947 for the American people. Last year American consumers received 25 pounds each of direct sugar. In 1945 they received 24 pounds each, and in 1944, for some strange or unknown reason, American consumers received 40 pounds each—1944 was an unusual year in American history—and I will not go into the political significances of 1944, because those are still fresh in our minds. But needless to say, we did get more sugar in 1944. As a matter of fact, during that year those in charge of allocating sugar permitted the American people to have up to 50 pounds of sugar on application to ration boards.

Most of this increased allowance came in the last half of the year 1944. You will recall that during that time several additional sugar stamps were made available to the people, and that they were specifically told by the OPA that the stamps would be good indefinitely and that the people who held them could cash them in any time. But lo and behold, after certain events took place in November of 1944, and as a special Christmas present to the American people that year, the OPA and other agencies in charge invalidated all the outstanding sugar stamps. Do you remember? I hope that history will not repeat itself for next year.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. I should like to compliment the gentleman and his committee on their report on the sugar investigation they have just made, but I hope he is not going to spoil the effect of that fine report by making a political issue out of it and making a political speech.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I can assure my good friend that I have no intention of doing that, but, as I recollect, history repeats itself. Sugar is a commodity that is important to the housewives of this country. I have no disposition to inject a political issue. I am recalling now what took place in 1944, with the hope that we will not have a recurrence of it in 1948. Sugar should not be used as a political football.

A reading of the committee report will disclose that the International Emergency Food Council, consisting of some 30 nations, will shortly be engaged in allocating sugar to its member countries. The main sugar surplus in the world is to be found in the Cuban sugar crop, which is owned by the United States Government. We have purchased the Cuban sugar crop since 1942. The International Emergency Food Council will principally engage itself in making recommendations for the division of the American-owned Cuban sugar.

The committee has recommended an allotment of 35 to 40 pounds of direct sugar for United States consumers in 1947, as compared with 25 pounds in 1946, and an increase for industrial users from the present 60 percent to 80 percent of the 1941 base-period use. This allowance of sugar for American consumers will require approximately 7,200,000 short tons of sugar. Production of sugar in all United States areas, which includes Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, is estimated to be approximately 3,808,000 short tons. To secure the increase in sugar recommended by the committee, it will be necessary to retain approximately 3,300,000 short tons of American-owned Cuban sugar. The Secretary of Agriculture is the official representative of the United States Government on the International Emergency Food Council, and your committee insist that he retain approximately 3,300,000 short tons of American-owned Cuban sugar as a minimum requirement for United States consumer for use in 1947. Larger allowances of sugar should be made for 1947 if production shows an increase above the present conservative estimates. I am attempting to show that we do not produce enough sugar in United States areas to take care of American requirements. We are directly dependent upon our sugar supplies from Cuban production.

Cuba has produced this year, and its crop is in process of being harvested and refined, approximately 5,500,000 tons, or better than a million tons more than they produced in 1946. It has been my contention and that of our committee that this increase in sugar production, as long as the United States Government owns the Cuban sugar crop, should go to the American people rather than be distributed to the other countries in the world where there has been a very substantial increase in sugar production over last year.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Did the gentleman's committee in making its investigation of the situation secure any information as to how much of the sugar we export has been or will be paid for by those who receive the sugar?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The committee report shows exports of Cuban sugar, but it is not possible for me to state how it was paid for. I might call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a loan has been made to the British of $3,750,000,000, and that the Export-Import Bank has loaned approximately $3,000,000,000 and that there have also been some arrangements made under lend-lease. I know the gentleman is an expert on such matters and his judgment is probably as good as mine as to whether or not any of these loans will be repaid.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman permit another observation?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to.

Mr. WOODRUFF. May I say in view of the past experience with our loans to foreign countries it seems to me that we are justified in questioning whether in the future we will have any better luck with our loans than we have had in the past.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think that is open to question and should be considered. There are some who feel that we should go further than we have gone. But may I say to the gentleman I recognize that the money we appropriate to lend to other countries must come from the American taxpayers and in the end they will have to pay the bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is correct. I would like to know further whether or not the committee learned that these shipments of sugar and other commodities are being paid for currently?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Certain amounts of Cuban sugar are being exported to foreign countries.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRANGER. Aside from what the gentleman may think as to whether or not the distribution is fair to the American people, does he not think that it was wise to at least attempt a reasonable distribution for all people and that we should have bought the Cuban sugar crop?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think it was a very wise thing to do. In fact, I was a member of the committee during the last Congress that urged the purchase of the 1946–47 Cuban sugar crop.

Mr. GRANGER. I think the committee report further indicates that there is a tremendous shortage of sugar throughout the world at the present time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; I wish to advise my colleague that the sugar situation throughout the world has improved materially since last year.

It is estimated now that sugar production in the entire world is approximately 31,000,000 tons. The normal consumption was approximately 32,500,000 tons.

Mr. GRANGER. It seems to me that a short time ago I heard the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], who makes a study of this sugar business, state on this floor that there was a worldwide shortage. He said, "Make no mistake about that."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We are short approximately one and one-half million tons. That is according to the report of this International Emergency Food Council, of which I have a copy, signed by Dr. Fitzgerald, although I may say that the normal production of sugar throughout the world prior to World War II was around 34,500,000 tons. But the consumption, according to Dr. Fitzgerald, was approximately 32,500,000 tons. You will note the sugar situation throughout the world has materially improved.

I might say further to the gentleman that in the areas of Europe which secured sugar from our Cuban supply last year, production of sugar has increased by approximately 34 percent, as against an increase in the United States areas of only 13 percent. With that increase in the European production the committee felt that the American consumer should have a larger share of Cuban sugar, which we own, that we had before, and that there was less need to take as much from the Cuban sugar supply and send to the other countries as we did in 1946.

We have proposed an increase for the American consumers of 10 to 15 pounds for 1947. That would provide between 35 and 40 pounds as against 25 pounds in 1946, and an increase for industrial and institutional users of from 60 to 80 percent of their 1941 base. That is a substantial increase, but it is not a substantial increase when you consider that during 1944 the consumers received direct sugar of 40 pounds and the industrial user received 89 percent of his 1941 base. I am satisfied that the American people want to help the people in other countries of the world with food. They are doing a magnificent job in this respect for the entire world. Facts and figures will show that during the past 2 years we have supplied the people in the destitute countries, where they need food, with four or five billion dollars worth of food, not only through UNRRA and directly, but also through lend-lease and private sources. From July 1, 1946, to July 1, 1947, we will send out between 400 and 500 million bushels of grain to those countries—not as a gift. These and other food supplies will be purchased by foreign countries. We have supplied some of the funds through Export-Import Bank and other loans.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman cited percentages in support of his argument. The gentleman will allow that percentages of increase often do not mean very much. For example, the area in Europe which the gentleman said had produced so much greater percentage of sugar this year than it did 2 or 3 years ago, How little did it produce at that time? For example, suppose that Europe altogether produced a million tons. A 15-percent increase would be 150,000 tons, while a 10-percent increase on 6,000,000 tons in the United States will mean 600,000 tons increase, on a per capita amount which is already infinitely greater than the people in Europe enjoyed.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will be glad to give the gentleman those figures.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman will concede that the average for 1935 to 1939 was about 8,000,000 tons more than the world average this year, was it not? We are short 8,000,000 tons. That is, the world sugar production is that much short for this year.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The figures I have show that the 1945–46 European area crops amounted to 5,494,000 tons as against their present sugar supply of 7,377,000 tons, an increase of 1,883,000 tons.

Mr. DINGELL. What is the per capita difference between European consumption and our American consumption?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is something I want to go into because it is claimed that this sugar should be distributed by the International Emergency Food Council, which is a voluntary organization of approximately 30 nations, on the basis of a tripartite agreement which would take into consideration the per capita consumption in those countries.

Mr. DINGELL. The per capita consumption is what counts, is it not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think we are taking care of that pretty well; but I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that if there is any such agreement we have not been able to find it. The tripartite agreement is an agreement between the United States, Canada, and the British Isles, or the United Kingdom, wherein they agree for the crop year of 1945 and for that time only, on a division of the sugar largely on a per capita basis.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In a minute. Let me point out what the situation was on the per capita consumption of sugar in 1946, and I am referring now to direct sugar. These figures come from the Department of Agriculture, and I therefore have every reason to believe they are correct; if they are not correct then it is not my responsibility. During 1946 the American people for all direct sugar purposes received 25 pounds, which was not enough sugar to take care of canning and other needs. What was the situation in Canada with whom, according to this tripartite agreement, we were to be on an equality basis? It appears that the people of Canada received not 25 pounds but 41 pounds per capita of direct sugar last year.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And notwithstanding that fact, Canada, which produces quite a quantity of beet sugar, does not today have more than one-half of its sugar-producing capacity in operation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That may be. I am not criticizing Canada, and I am not criticizing the British, but I just want to point out and ask if there is an agreement that there should be equality of consumption why should United States consumers receive 25 pounds, Canadians 41 pounds, and the British, according to the Department of Agriculture, 30½ pounds?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I want to complete my thought; then I will yield. I am not so sure that the figure for the British is correct, because I have here a letter signed by a British lady. It deals with this very question of sugar. In it she writes this:

> I get half a pound of sugar a week for the baby and a half pound for myself every week, and 1 pound for each of us extra a month instead of preserves, if I wish, and a lot extra every now and then for canning and bottling, and so forth.

When you add up the different amounts a British citizen receives, according to this British housewife, it totals up to around 38 pounds; and in addition to that they get some extra now and then—she does not say when. I notice, however, that the Department of Agriculture reports that the British housewives got a pound and a half extra per capita at Christmas time. That was asked for in behalf of the American people for last Christmas but no additional sugar was forthcoming for the American housewives at Christmas.

I now yield to my colleague from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I do not know whether the gentleman is advocating we should reduce the allotment to the industrial users of the United States itself or increase the housewife up to the quantity of the Canadian housewife.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not know. The gentleman is probably hinting at the possibility that the Canadians and the British do not use as much industrial sugar as we do.

Mr. PACE. Right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not know very much about the situation in the British Isles, but I am reliably informed that about the only industry over there using sugar is that industry which makes beer. There may be something to that. I am not familiar with the situation, never having been over there. The gentleman from Georgia knows that this was brought to the attention of our committee. They may have less ice cream, and less candy and things of that kind involving sugar. That does not apply in Canada. But surely the American housewife likes to have the sugar in hand so that she can use it at home. She wants direct sugar. I say to you there has not been an equality in the distribution of sugar for American consumers as provided in the tripartite agreement, which incidentally is a hard agreement to understand. Let us get that straight. Let us see if the American housewife is entitled to as much sugar as the housewives and the consumers in other countries of the world.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What the gentleman is saying is extremely important because here in the United States among the agricultural people as well as the industrial and town people, they all have buying power and the mother and the housewife insist on having an adequate supply of sugar in her kitchen, thereby making her independent of having to drive into town to buy some industrialized product. This thing cannot and will not be handled satisfactorily by political parties or by any administration until the American housewife can go to town or send the children to the store and buy sugar any time she gets good and ready to buy it. That is the issue that we have to face as Members of Congress. And may I say this for the benefit of the gentleman from Utah: In my remarks the other day I was dealing with not only production and consumption but with the availability of reserve stocks, because you cannot have fair distribution of any basic commodity unless you have an ample reserve stock at all points of distribution, country-wide or world-wide, from which the trade can draw, and those stocks are not in existence today after providing for the per capita consumption specified by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Does not the gentleman think, looking forward to the day not too far distant when controls can be removed, that it is of great importance to the American consumers that the pipe lines and the stock piles be built up so that there will not be the likelihood at some time in the future of the sugar supply being short?

Mr. CRAWFORD. But build those stock piles by production, not by denying sugar to the people.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to again urge my colleagues to secure and study the report of the Committee on the Sugar Situation. You will have a better picture of the sugar-supply situation and the requirements of the American people, if you read the report. The committee is determined to secure more sugar for American consumers in 1947. Adequate supplies are available and the sugar should be forthcoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

(Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain tables and extracts from letters and communications.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE ATOMIC BOMB

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, since taking my place in this august body on January 3 I have consulted with many of my colleagues who are wiser and more experienced than I. Invariably they have been courteous. They have given me a great deal of valuable advice. But there is one piece of advice on which they have been unanimous. They have all said, "Do not speak on the floor of the House until you have been in Congress at least 10 years." Mr. Speaker, I am an optimist, but I think it very doubtful that I will be in Congress for 10 years. So many things can happen in this atomic age.

I do want, however, to speak on something that I think is vitally important not only to the people of my district—and I hear from them frequently on the subject—not only to the people of my own Nation, but to the people of the whole world. That matter is the secret of the atomic bomb. The people of our country and of the world are fearful; they do not know exactly what is being done about this secret. They know only vaguely what the potentialities of this weapon are and they do not want to see it given away even under an international commission. Once it has been passed around, once two great nations possess that secret, how do we know that they will not go to war? And, if two such nations go to war it may well mean the end of this planet. We know without a doubt that the secret will be discovered; that the engineers of other countries and the scientists of other nations are working on it day and night. But would it not be well to give ourselves a little time? Would it not be well to keep it here until perhaps, by the grace of God, we may find a defense against it? Every poison has its antidote. Every problem has its solution. Every weapon has its defense. It is merely a question of finding it.

As long as we have this secret here we can maintain peace. It may not be the highest ideal to maintain the peace of the world through such a weapon, but we know that with human nature as it is no one will pick a quarrel with us as long as we possess this weapon. We also know that it still takes and always will take two to make a quarrel.

One week ago today on the floor of this House we saw a book exhibited that had been prepared and written by one of our former allies and a friendly power. In this book we saw pictures of all our dams, of all our roads, of all our bridges, of all our watersheds, and of all our great centers of population and of manufacturing. All this was done surely not simply to have interesting and instructive picture books for the children who are being brought up in Communist nurseries and schools all over the world. Oh, no. This book was there for one purpose and for one purpos- only. It was there so that it could be used in case of war. We cannot afford to be blind in these matters. Again, we do want peace. We surely should, when we know what a future war may bring.

We talk about future legislation. We are doing our best to pass legislation in this House to curtail expenditures, to help our country on the road to progress, but are we not a little bit like children playing on the very verge of an abyss with a shotgun, when we do not yet know what is going to happen to this secret? We must be very careful as representatives of our people that we do not do anything to jeopardize them. This secret is their secret. The $2,000,000,000 that was expended in its discovery and its perfection was their $2,000,000,000. The men and women who are working there, 43,700 of them, are American citizens. We know that this thing now is so far ahead of what it was when it was used on Nagasaki and Hiroshima that it is probably like comparing a model T Ford to the modern automobile.

The people must speak, and the people, I believe, are already speaking, and loudly, through the press and through their own voices. They are saying to us, "Wait. Do not give this thing away. It will be found soon enough. Do not hand it over like everything else on a silver platter."

We have reached the turning point in history, but we may well be writing the last page of history unless we guard this thing, this diabolical thing, that so far we alone possess. We must be careful in watching this Commission that is being appointed and has been appointed. Let us weigh the value of these men. So far, I can see only one real scientist on that whole list of five.

These matters are of grave importance. These matters are something that I feel must be spoken of on the floor of this House before it may be too late and before this planet goes up in smoke and is just another moon, dead on the surface of the sky.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, on last Monday, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] made a remarkable speech in support of the Knutson income-tax bill. It was remarkable both because of content and because it was publicly commended by members of the majority party highly placed on the tax-writing committee; to wit, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]. But, Mr. Speaker, the most outstanding feature of my distinguished friend's speech was his utter frankness in stating what he understands to be the theory of the Republican Party on taxes, boldly and nakedly.

Of course, this theory of the gentleman's party is not new, only stated more candidly than usual. Neither is Democratic opposition to it new.

It must come as a distinct surprise, however, to many who heard so much about the new Republican liberalism during the election campaign last year to know that the gentleman's party still clings to a pre-World War I philosophy of taxation. As further evidence of this, however, I need but point out the fact that the No. 1 bill of this Republican Congress is H. R. 1, known as the Knutson bill.

I would like to call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some of the exceedingly interesting observations of the learned gentleman from Illinois who has undertaken to expound to us his party's philosophy on taxation. He informed us, for instance, that "we have two general tax theories in the world today, and only two."

It does seem that in economic studies or in writings on problems of taxation, or in debates on revenue bills, or somewhere I have read or heard of a third theory, but surely I must be mistaken because the distinguished gentleman says that there are only two. And he says, "We must choose between the two."

What are the two theories? Well, the able gentleman has favored us with the information. He tells us on page 758 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that:

> One theory is that a person should pay to support the Government on the basis of the benefits received from the Government.

That was the theory, he goes on to tell us—

> That prevailed all through the Middle Ages.

So we will call this the theory of the Middle Ages.

Then about the second theory, the gentleman says:

> When democracy came into the world they drafted a new theory of taxation, and that is the theory that each person should contribute to the support of the Government on the basis of his ability to pay.

So we will call this the theory of democracy.

Fenced in by these two recognized theories—the theory of the Middle Ages and the theory of democracy—the gentleman was coasting with ease and grace on the smooth highway of bliss until suddenly he met the Knutson bill. But was he abashed? Not one whit. No, sir. He was sure it was entirely theoretical and he was for it, theory and all.

The gentleman from Illinois then began to explain the Knutson bill, began for the first time to give his theories practical application.

In order to give us a sense of proportion, the gentleman divided the people into three general income groups or classes and proceeded to tell us how the Knutson bill would affect them, not in theory but in fact. He told us first about the low-income group which comprises about two-thirds of the income taxpayers. The gentleman said that "67 percent of all Federal income taxpayers would receive under the Knutson bill a rebate of $900,000,000." According to my arithmetic, this would be an average tax reduction of about $3 per month for each of the taxpayers falling within this group.

He then examined the beneficent effects of the bill on the middle-income group and came up with the answer. The gentleman said, "Twenty-eight percent of the taxpayers would receive $1,040,000,000 rebate under the Knutson bill."

At this point the gentleman from Illinois must have become skeptical of the practical application of his theory because he did not finish his analysis. He had told us the amount of rebate 67 percent of the taxpayers would get under the Knutson bill and what 28 percent of the taxpayers would get, but 67 percent and 28 percent comprise only 95 percent of the taxpayers. What would the remaining 5 percent receive? I listened, as I am sure you did, Mr. Speaker, but I did not hear him say. The distinguished gentleman who had been so explicit suddenly backed off and failed to tell us how his theory would affect this neglected 5 percent, this most important group in his theoretical Pandora box. When the gentleman did not tell us in his speech, I thought surely he would notice the omission and add it in the revision of his remarks, but I read it carefully, a couple of times. It is not there, that is, unless one is willing to do a little calculation. But if the figures which the gentleman has given us are correct, we can, without great effort, arrive at it. The gentleman said in another place that the Knutson bill would give a tax rebate of $3,500,000,000 to all taxpayers. Now, if 67 percent get $900,000,000 and 28 percent get $1,040,000,000, then there remains for the forgotten 5 percent a total take of $1,560,000,000.

So, using the gentleman's own figures and assuming they are correct, I have made a little chart completing the gentleman's analysis of the Knutson bill:

Under H. R. 1—Knutson bill—5 percent of taxpayers get $1,560,000,000; 28 percent of taxpayers get $1,040,000,000; 67 percent of taxpayers get $900,000,000.

Now, what I want to know is, Does the gentleman advocate this inequity by the theory of the Middle Ages or by the theory of democracy? By no stretch of the imagination could this injustice be the theory of democracy, because the gentleman has said that when democracy came into the world they drafted a new theory of taxation—the theory that each person should contribute on the basis of his ability to pay—and the Knutson bill favors, not those least able to pay but those most able to pay.

So, since we must choose between the two, according to the gentleman's own analysis, the Knutson bill conforms to the other of the two theories—the theory of the Middle Ages.

But, in an effort to be sure and certain as to which of the two recognized theories the Knutson bill conforms, I have worked out another table in terms of take-home pay. Take-home pay is a thoroughly democratic term growing out of the withholding provisions of the income-tax law. It has come to have a household meaning to all income-taxpayers—farmers, workers, housewives. It is what they have left after paying their taxes. Some people call it spendable income. Under the Knutson bill, take-home pay for a single person with a $1,000 income would be increased 2.1 percent. Another man with an income of $10,000 would have his take-home pay increased 6.1 percent. But the person with a $302,000 income would have his take-home pay increased by 72.6 percent. The following table conclusively proves that the Knutson bill would be monstrously unjust to those who need help most.

Under H. R. 1—Knutson income-tax bill:

Single person with income of—	Percent increase in take-home pay
$1,000 will receive	2.1
$10,000 will receive	6.1
$100,000 will receive	34.9
$250,000 will receive	65.9
$302,896 will receive	72.6
$1,000,000 will receive	69.4

That lowly million-dollar-income man would receive an increase of only 69.4 percent.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I am glad to yield to my distinguished and able friend from New York.

Mr. LYNCH. Is not that in accordance with the old Republican policy of helping the rich and soaking the poor?

Mr. GORE. I am sure the gentleman was quite amused, as I was, to hear that we must choose between the theory of the Middle Ages and the theory of democracy. I thoroughly agree that this is on all fours with the theory of the Middle Ages, a pre-World War I tax philosophy.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is barely possible that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] had in mind as constituting the Middle Ages the period from 1929 to 1933.

Mr. GORE. To say the least, the gentleman's party does not seem to have learned anything in that period, judging from the No. 1 bill of the Republican Congress, H. R. 1 of the new Congress.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Why did the gentleman use the words "That lowly million-dollar" fellow? Why did the gentleman say "lowly"? That is real sarcasm. What I want to say is that the man who gets the 69 percent will take care of a lot of thousand-dollar men. That is what they do with their money.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. LYNCH. Does the gentleman know of any instance where any of them has ever done that?

Mr. GORE. I certainly do not.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do.

Mr. GORE. Just a moment. I think it is quite significant, Mr. Speaker, that the speech of the gentleman from Illinois was applauded and publicly commended by two high-ranking members of the majority on the Ways and Means Committee and is now being defended by another member of the majority side of the Ways and Means Committee. I think we might look into the statement of the author of H. R. 1 and see by which of these two recognized theories he justifies the bill. The statements of the distinguished statesman from Minnesota are rather fulsome and effulgent and I sometimes have difficulty in finding them; but I find one thing: To my surprise he did not justify his bill by either of these two recognized theories. Oh, no, he goes back and takes a tried-and-found-wanting policy from the good old days, right out of the Andrew Mellon primer of special privilege, and what does he say?

Among other excuses for his proposal, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is quoted as saying that:

> It will start the country on the road to complete economic recovery and—
>
> Listen to this—
> provide the Treasury with even greater revenue.

It was this economic theory, Mr. Speaker, that worked so well that it brought on the panic of 1929 and the utter defeat of the Republican Party in 1930 and 1932.

Surprising as it may seem, though, Mr. Speaker, if you will analyze the Knutson bill closely you will find that it does not wholly reject the Democratic theory of levying taxes according to ability to pay. Indeed no. You will find a provision in the bill which clearly shows that the gentleman from Minnesota was reminded, even if at the last moment, that the very keystone of our whole income-tax structure is the rising scale of payment by those best able to pay.

Americans cannot sacrifice that principle. It is now as basic in our democracy as the principle of majority rule. It is, therefore, fortunate that the gentleman from Minnesota detected this oversight at the last moment before he introduced his bill. When reminded of this oversight, was the able gentleman stubborn? Did he insist upon his 20-percent across-the-board reduction in all income taxes, democracy or no democracy?

No. The distinguished gentleman, with statesmanlike aplomb, altered his measure to conform with his country's democratic principles. Yes, sir. Let the chips, the blue chips, fall where they may, this new Republican liberalism rose manfully to the defense of the forgotten man—all those ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed Americans earning not more than $302,896 per year.

Mr. LYNCH. That was after election, though.

Mr. GORE. Of course, it was after election.

Mr. LYNCH. That statement was only made a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. GORE. Does not the gentleman feel grateful that he detected the oversight?

Mr. LYNCH. There is something to what you say.

Mr. GORE. We should be grateful, I am sure. In fact, by this deathbed concession to social justice, by this forthrightness, by this magnanimity, by this show of compassion, the people of the country were deeply moved, touched in fact, and they will be touched even more deeply if this Knutson bill becomes law.

Mr. LYNCH. They will be touched more deeply in their pocketbooks.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. LYNCH. What I have in mind is this: Does the gentleman suppose, with the original promises made before election, which were considerably cut down after election so that those in the top brackets get only a 10-percent reduction, there will be any change in the general attitude by reason of the introduction of the tax bill yesterday by the chairman of the Rules Committee instead of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. GORE. I must admit to the gentleman that it is rather difficult for me to fathom what is going on here. This is the second month that the Congress has been in session. We have not abolished one Federal agency, we have not shot one bureaucrat, and we have called the roll but once since the opening day.

Mr. LYNCH. And we have had but one meeting of the Ways and Means Committee, if I remember correctly, during the whole month.

Mr. GORE. If the gentleman wants my explanation of the situation I will say that the Republican Party is stuck in the muck of confusion and hung on the hooks of irresponsible promises.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. What is this magnanimous concession that the gentleman from Minnesota finally agreed to write into his tax bill, and is this take-home pay figured after his great magnanimous concession?

Mr. GORE. This is because you see from the chart that beyond the $302,896 man there is a small drop in the percentage increase in take-home pay. Of course, this 10½ percent does not apply to that part of the income below $302,-896 per year; only above. That is the line of demarcation made by the gentleman from Minnesota between a poor man and that lowly rich man.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to observe, what a pity it is to spoil a good speech with so much politics. Will the gentleman tell why the boys on that side were defeated last year?

Mr. GORE. I will be delighted to tell the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. You tell them.

Mr. GORE. I will tell the gentleman himself as well as my colleagues why we were defeated. It was because of a campaign of irresponsible promises, because the country was torn with problems inevitably resulting from a war and, my friend, because you are now stuck with those irresponsible promises we will beat you in 1948.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Are not these Knutson promises and Republican promises of the last election on a par with the same Republican trick and philosophy played by the Governor of Kentucky who promised repeal of the income taxes before election and afterward, and before he was inaugurated, he said that it cannot be done?

Mr. GORE. This is not the first time the same story has been told.

Mr. DINGELL. Is it not a parallel case?

Mr. GORE. I am not sufficiently familiar with that as to say, but I have heard that it is.

Now, I want to ask a question.

Where are my Republican friends who before the war were crying out that the size of our public debt was endangering the stability and soundness of our country? Are they the same voices I now hear crying for lower taxes and reduced Government revenue? Has concern for the stability and soundness of the Nation's economy fled from your councils?

What is stability? What is soundness? I am thinking of our entire order, our monetary system, our banking system, our national economy, and asking upon what does it rest.

I hold in my hand a circulation statement of United States money and I see here the total amount is more than $50,000,000,000, mostly paper currency. I called the Treasury a few days ago and asked them to give me the total amount of deposits in all banks and was told that it was more than $160,000,000,000. I asked then for the amount of Government bonds in the hands of the millions of our citizens and I was told that it was nearly $260,000,000,000. Suppose that the millions of the people holding these bonds suddenly became doubtful of the value of their bonds. Suppose then that all these depositors began to want their money from the banks, wanted cash or something material?

I know Treasury experts do not like to have our monetary system referred to as a house of cards and I agree that that term gives a flimsy and inaccurate description because there is something more substantial in the foundation upon which the structure is built. What is it? It is the people's confidence in the soundness of the Nation's Government, the Nation's economy, and its institutions. Except for that, our whole monetary and banking system would be an inverted pyramid, so top heavy that within a matter of hours it would topple and crash, crushing, depressing, and wreaking havoc upon our economy, our political system, and our society.

Once that confidence in our system is shaken, the Nation and the world would rock with tremors; once destroyed, it would be as if it did not exist at all. That is why I think and why it seems to me that you, Mr. Speaker, should think, why all thinking Americans should think, it utterly imperative that we start immediately a reduction of our public debt. The amount of retirement is not so important as the act and the effort. Indeed, I do not hold it necessary that all the debt ever be retired, but lest we shake the confidence of the millions of bondholders who are watching their Government's every move and whose composite opinions determine the value of not only the bonds which they hold, not only the bonds held by banking and insurance institutions, but determines as well the very integrity and soundness of our system. I think tax reduction, desirable though it is, must be strictly secondary to a reduction of the national debt.

We can no more laugh off our war debt than we could have won the war without incurring it. We must face grim reality. I am not pessimistic but I do think, Mr. Speaker, that instead of evading our responsibility, instead of shunning our obligation, we must shoulder our burden and walk. The future will then be brighter.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Has the gentleman's party ever paid off any of the national debt?

Mr. DINGELL. I can answer that, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. We paid off a considerable amount just before the Wilson administration went out.

Mr. CURTIS. When?

Mr. DINGELL. Just before the Wilson administration went out.

Mr. CURTIS. I am referring to the New Deal Party that took possession of this House following the election of 1930, and I ask the question if you have ever paid $1 on the national debt.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. Let me reply, please, to the gentleman from Nebraska. Of course, the gentleman's question was answered in part by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, but that answer was apparently not satisfactory to the gentleman. He then modified his question and referred to the New Deal Party. If he refers to the control of the Government by the Democratic Party that came into power in 1932, I need but remind the gentleman of the conditions then existing. The conditions, due to the fallacious policies which his party followed during the boom and bust period, made it utterly impossible to do more or less, if this country were to be saved, than to turn the resources of this country to the preservation of our institutions. We were very near chaos and collapse, and if you follow the philosophies in the Knutson bill you will take us right back to the brink of disaster.

Mr. CURTIS. Then the answer is that you have not paid off $1 on the public debt or one dime.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I just want to interpose an observation for the benefit of my friend from Nebraska. He might have forgotten that in Nebraska at that time they were burning corn instead of coal, and they complained about 2-cent hogs and 10-cent corn.

Mr. CURTIS. You did not pay any of the debt, did you? You never redeemed a dime's worth of bonds.

Mr. DINGELL. We made it possible for your farmers to keep from starving to death.

Mr. CURTIS. Since your party gained control of the House in 1930 there has never been $1 reduction of the public debt. You never retired a bond. You took possession of this House following the election of 1930, and there has never been one bond paid by reducing the debt.

Mr. DINGELL. Corn was selling then at 10 cents a bushel.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to my distinguished friend, the author of H. R. 1, the first bill on the calendar of the Republican Congress.

Mr. KNUTSON. When it comes to taxation, it reminds me there are three things that everybody knows more about than those that are engaged in them. I have never yet met a man who did not know more about farming than a farmer. I have never yet met a man who did not know more about running a paper than a publisher does. And there are very few Members of Congress who do not know more about taxation than those who live with it all the time.

The gentleman referred to the depression that existed in the later years of the Republican administration. We all deplore that depression, but it was world-wide, and it was due to the war that you Democrats promised to keep us out of back in 1916.

Mr. DINGELL. It was started by the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LYNCH. After listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota that people who are not on the Ways and Means Committee do not know anything about taxes, I just want to say there is some evidence before the American people that some on the Ways and Means Committee do not know too much about taxes.

Mr. GORE. I think the gentleman from Minnesota may be surprised how many people understand his bill, its practical effect as well as theory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question as to this chart here before us?

Mr. DINGELL. I dislike to have it come out of my time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for one additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if, when he revises his remarks, he will include, in reference to the chart appearing on my left, the mathematical formula showing how the figures in the right-hand column are arrived at?

Mr. DINGELL. I can answer that. I think that is the increase in the amount of take-home pay. He made that clear.

Mr. GORE. If the gentleman will yield, I will be delighted to supply that information to the gentleman, and I request him to let us know in his extension of remarks how he stands on the Knutson bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have this information that I requested.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman from Tennessee state which Knutson bill—the one he promised first or the one he introduced, or the Allen bill, or what?

Mr. GORE. The No. 1 bill of the Republican Congress, H. R. 1.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I listened to the prepared speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], freshman member of the taxing Committee on Ways and Means, as he rose girded for combat to defend the indefensible Knutson 20-percent straight-across the board relief-for-the-rich plan. I marveled at his dexterity and verbal fencing as he dueled with the able and progressive gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. At one and the same time he blew hot and cold, said yes and no, agreed and disagreed, went forward and back, but ultimately came around to his own perch to express himself in unmistakable and understandable terms which needed only some graphic illustrations to prove the fallacy of his position. By his own unshaken determination to revitalize the exhumed mummy, known before its disgraceful demise as the Mellon plan, now rechristened the Knutson plan, he alines himself, according to my mind, on the wrong side of a most vital question and against those who in the largest measure deserve tax relief.

Mr. Speaker, I will fight every inch of the way this iniquitous attempt to foist upon the American people another, though even more vicious, Mellon plan under the Knutson label.

My attention was arrested when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] gave unequivocal approval to the original Knutson plan. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 758:

The Knutson bill as it was originally drafted and as I approved it, and still approve it, was a flat reduction on all income taxpayers, the same reduction.

After graciously yielding to me the following dialog in part ensued. It illustrates clearly the lopsided philosophy of the Knutson adherents and their disposition to aid the wealthy while abandoning the millions of poor and middle-class taxpayers. I quote:

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. What the gentleman advocates is that the man who pays $1 of income tax gets 20 cents reduction.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. The man who pays $100 under the Knutson plan would get $20 reduction.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the man who pays $100,000 in income tax gets a rebate of $20,000.

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the man who pays a million dollars in income taxes gets a tax cut of $200,000.

Mr. MASON. That is exactly right.

Mr. DINGELL. And the gentleman reasons that 20 cents tax cut to the poor devil who pays $1, and that is all he can pay, is all right and that is just, equitable, and right?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. DINGELL. You think that is just right when it is compared with the man who gets $200,000 cut on $1,000,000?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; of course.

Mr. MASON. And that is the whole theory of it.

Earlier in his speech as the RECORD will show on page 757, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] argues in support of his theory as being "right," "fair," "just," and "equitable." He cites Treasury expert's figures which I accept without verification or question:

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to intelligently act upon a tax-reduction program we should have before us the essential facts that bear upon the problem of tax reduction, facts that throw light upon the number of people in the different tax brackets.

Treasury experts tell us that if we increase exemptions from $500 per person to $600 per person, it will take 3,000,000 people off the tax rolls and will mean a reduction in Treasury receipts of $1,500,000,000. If we increase income-tax exemptions from $500 to $700 per person it will take 10,000,000 people off the tax rolls and will mean a reduction in Treasury receipts of $3,000,000,000. This would practically use up the $3,500,000,000 tax rebate covered in the Knutson bill. Do we want to do that?

The following facts also bear directly upon the problem of tax reduction and should be kept in mind when considering the same:

(a) Sixty-seven percent of all Federal income taxpayers receive $2,500 per year or less. This group pays $4,500,000,000 in Federal taxes each year, and therefore would receive under the Knutson bill a rebate of $900,000,000.

(b) Twenty-eight percent of all Federal income taxpayers receive between $2,500 and $5,000 per year; pay $5,200,000,000 in Federal taxes, and would receive $1,040,000,000 rebate under the Knutson bill. The Federal Treasury books show that about half of the total Federal income-tax receipts come from these two groups; namely, taxpayers who receive $5,000 per year or below. We must keep these taxpayers on the tax rolls if we expect to balance the budget.

(c) Under present Federal tax rates and exemptions:

A $1,500-a-year man, with family of two children, pays no Federal income tax.

A $2,500-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $95 Federal income tax.

A $3,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $190 Federal income tax.

A $5,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $589 Federal income tax.

A $10,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $1,862 Federal income tax.

A $50,000-a-year man with family of two children, pays $24,111 Federal income tax.

A $500,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $406,600 Federal income tax.

A $1,000,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $838,850 Federal income tax.

I advance these figures by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] as the strongest argument illustrative of the essential need for striking from the rolls the largest number of taxpayers in the lowest income brackets by applying the most generous increase in exemptions covering dependents. That is the first and fairest step to take in the direction of tax relief; of course, after we balance the budget and pay substantially upon our national debt. Every taxpayer, rich or poor, will be treated in like manner if dependency is taken into account. One child or nine children rated as dependents will command the same statutory tax exemption of whatever the amount might be under the law and here I want to state it should be a generous amount raised from $500, as at present, to $750 or even more.

Mr. MASON'S figures pertaining to the loss of revenue indicate a figure of $3,000,000,000 and a reduction of 10,000,000 taxpayers with a $700 dependency exemption. I do not dispute these figures. It would be well for us to consider these figures when writing a new tax-reduction bill, for in addition to the tax benefit there would be an additional and a substantial economy in the reduction of the number of Treasury employees needed to service this large number of taxpayers, both in Washington and in the field. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] wants to retain these people on the rolls and desires to give the bulk of the relief to others fewer in number, richer, less deserving, in order to keep the poor, so he argues, tax conscious.

In the tax-relief bill of 1945 we who were then in the majority struck from the rolls approximately 12,000,000 taxpayers and I contend they are still conscious of their responsibility as citizens. In fact, they are taxpayers, Federal and State, whether they pay income taxes or not. They pay directly Federal excise taxes, and State and local taxes, either directly or indirectly. What they need more than anything else to keep them physically, mentally, and morally tax conscious is tax relief. Under the Knutson theory, which the gentleman from Illinois so valiantly champions, they would become physically unconscious of everything about them.

Let us take two simple examples, wide apart, from Mr. MASON'S own table to illustrate where lies the right, fair, just, and equitable in taxation—page 757, RECORD of February 3, 1947. I will leave the decision to you.

A $2,500-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $95 Federal income tax.

At present he has to get by on a balance of $2,405 for the year. His 20 percent cut under the Knutson plan would amount to $19 so next year he would have the munificent sum total of $2,424. Now take—

A $1,000,000-a-year man, with family of two children, pays $838,850 Federal income tax.

At present he has to get by on the remainder or $161,150. Given a 20 percent tax cut under the original Knutson plan for the relief of his distress, he, too, having a wife and two dependent children, his net income after taxes would be increased by only $32,230, increasing his meager exchequer to $193,380 for the following year.

If I am to be stirred to compassion and an inclination toward relief, I shall most certainly cry over and extend relief to the man who, after taxes, has left the amount of $2,405. That is equity and fairness in taxation predicated upon the ability to pay. That is not class legislation but good sound Americanism which will preserve our democratic system.

Mr. Speaker, I very much dislike to question sincerity or lack of knowledge of those with whom I differ so sharply and irreconcilably on the controversial subject of tax reduction. So to be as charitable as possible under the circumstances, I must say that the whole theory and philosophy underlying the issue is without foundation and therefore wrong. It must be since it is unsupported by the principle and the rule of ability to pay. They ignore, too, or forget that taxes are levied on the escalator or graduated basis and therefore should be reduced by employing the same principle and on the same basis.

Perhaps these champions of the Knutson plan of 20 percent tax reduction straight across the board do not know anything about this well-known and time-worn principle. My friends and colleagues of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], who have served on the committee even longer than I—and I am serving my seventh term thereon—should and do know that when we wrote so many of the 17 tax bills mentioned by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] we always, I repeat, always and without fail, graduated the tax increases in accordance with the principle of ability to pay. To illustrate what I mean—to begin with, we put people on the tax rolls who were not there before. Thus they paid 100 percent more than they did before the levy was made. The taxpayers in the lower brackets already on the rolls were increased from as high as 50 to 100 percent and sometimes more. In the next or higher income category they, the taxpayers, might have been increased from 40 to 75 percent and so on by reduced percentages; as the net income grew larger the percentage of tax increases became less.

In the top brackets where the big incomes are classified for tax purposes and where the percentage of levy is already high the increase while in dollars great, in percentage it was quite small. The illustration is clearly understood when you realize that it tapered off in the highest brackets to limited increases of 5, 4, and even 3 percent, sometimes less.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield briefly.

Mr. LYNCH. Under the Knutson plan, as I understand it, the person who is taxed on $2,500 would receive only 50 cents a week relief, whereas those in the upper brackets would receive well over $1,000. Is not that correct?

Mr. DINGELL. Oh, yes; that is correct; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, under the Knutson proposal which is a reversion to the putrid Mellon plan, the idea of fairness and applicability of the principle of reducing the tax load in the same manner and ratio as it was increased does not exist. Accordingly, it was pointed out factually by my friend the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] that a man making a million dollar net income for 1947, following a Knutson cut would pay less taxes than he paid on that amount in 1939. Whereas people in the lower income brackets would be paying five to ten times as much as they paid before the war. All because you take it off faster where you put it on slower, and slower where you put it on faster and heavier. The richer the man the greater the relief and the poorer the man the lesser the tax relief.

My Republican colleague from my own State the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] injecting himself into the discussion charges me with "advocating special privileges for this, that, and the other one, and especially to the low-income group." He charges me further with purchasing the votes of this low-income group. What sophism. You cannot buy this low-income-group vote—but you can get it by doing the right thing. However, votes may possibly have to be purchased if you favor those who need tax relief the least. I will take my chances, come what may, on the philosophy that the poor and the lowly first and the middle class next should get relief ahead of the high bracket income-tax payer. The gentleman from Allegan, Mich., Mr. HOFFMAN, can argue here that the small farmer back home should be satisfied with a $10 income-tax cut as fair and equitable as compared with a $10,000 cut for the other fellow, be he an industrialist or a corporate farmer, but I do not think he will score heavily in his district with such strained reasoning—it is wrong if you do not know any better but it is sinful if deliberately foisted upon the people.

I hold that this subject is the head-on and irreconcilable clash of the same old theories—the Republicans believe that to load the master's table to the breaking point with delicacies which the earth affords and to fill his cup brimful and to overflowing the little man sitting patiently at his feet will reap rich reward for his submissiveness.

The Democrats, however, believe and put into practice the idea that the common man is entitled to his fair share of the worldly goods, yes, even including some of the peacock feathers, leisure, and even of the spotlight if he earns and deserves it, and that because he is numerically so large the Nation's prosperity depends upon his well-being. The theory was proved in the late twenties and early thirties. President Hoover and the Republicans believed that prosperity comes down from above while the Democrats insisted it must come up from the roots. No argument in my mind as to who, and what idea, is just and right.

I stated my position on taxes before the election last fall when I addressed the House on August 2 and again when the Republican majority presented its first tax bill to perpetuate the superduper sales or excise taxes. I restate my position again and briefly.

There should not be any tax cut for the year 1947. After effecting every reasonable economy in government, without reducing veterans' benefits or essential armed services, and balancing the budget, such savings and surplus should then be applied to the reduction of the public debt. The tax bill of late 1947, carefully studied and drafted but applying to the tax for 1948, should provide, first, an additional and substantial payment upon the national debt in order to preserve Uncle Sam's good credit rating and to maintain the value of his notes of indebtedness, or as they are generally known, savings bonds and other outstanding obligations. Next, consideration should be given toward liberalizing the exemptions for dependents, raising the amount from $500 as at present to as high as $1,000 with $2,000 for married couples. Following that, striking off the tax rolls all taxpayers whose income tax amounts to $50 or less. It may be possible, following consultation with staff and Treasury experts, to go even up to $100. This would exempt at the same time and automatically, pensioners drawing modest amounts, yet hardly sufficient in themselves to provide the meager essentials of life. The next step to be considered in tax reduction should apply to all taxpayers on a graduated basis.

The wartime excise taxes borne by the consumer should be reduced at the earliest possible date in accordance with the pledge given the American people upon my motion and insistence at the time of their enactment.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Would it not be well for us to remember that it was from the low-income groups that the most sons and daughters were given in this war to keep us free?

Mr. DINGELL. That might be rather impertinent as a philosophy when called to the attention of the proponents of the Knutson plan. I do not think they took that into account.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

FEDERAL TAXATION

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, you know, we can take some of this small talk admirably in small doses, but when we suffer through an hour of extravagant conjecture it is just a little too much; and your blood pressure goes up just as the blood pressure of the voters went up last year when the question was asked: "Have you had enough?" They said they had had enough. We have had so many New Deal promises and so little performance from 1932 on that these haranguers become splendidly ineffective. The telephone book here in Washington for 1947 is three times the size it was in 1932.

There are 830 pages in the regular white section of the telephone book, plus a classified section. In my home town of Cleveland, Ohio, a community that has over 300,000 more people than Washington our telephone book contains only 741 pages.

The speech of the gentleman from Tennessee just delivered is an ill-advised and unfortunate attempt to stir up strife. It must be dismissed as moonshine. I think the Republican majority is undertaking to do an excellent, orderly job, and they are doing it in good time; so unlike New Deal procedure. I believe that we will provide a tax relief bill after sufficient study that will be pleasing to all the people in America, and I believe that our Committee on Expenditures, which is now getting under way will show where we can throw some of these papsuckers off the Federal pay roll; and that will be pleasing, too.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I spoke against the Knutson bill.

Mr. BENDER. I understand.

Mr. DINGELL. Does the gentleman favor it?

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, I have not studied all of the Knutson bill. My work is quite heavy here. Of course, I favor a tax-reduction bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Then the gentleman does not oppose my view.

Mr. BENDER. Just a moment. I want to say this: Now the gentleman is not going to pin me down to any particular bill at this stage of the game. We have been in session only about 5 weeks, and they expect us to perform miracles here. While I have been here—and this is my ninth year—I have seen the kind of performance we have had, and it comes with poor grace with the gentlemen on the minority side today to criticize the majority after all the bungling that we have had from them during all these years.

I think the people of the country have got their bellies full, and I am sure that they are going to get the kind of relief from this Republican Congress that they voted for last November. It is a condition created by the New Deal, not a theory which confronts us.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I presume that the gentleman has the feeling that the committee should first complete its labors and report a bill to the House before any of us attempt to pass upon legislation that may come to us later.

Mr. BENDER. Exactly.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Who is the chairman of that committee at the present time, I will ask my good friend from Ohio?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will answer.

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I might say to the gentleman from Michigan that he has long been held up to the public as one of the outstanding tax experts in America, and we are sure that he will be able to convince his colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means that his position is absolutely correct and proper, whatever that position may be.

Mr. DINGELL. I agree with the gentleman that that is probably what I will have to do with the present Republican chairman on that committee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And if he is as able as I am sure the gentleman thinks he is, I am sure he will be able to convince the whole House that they should go along with his program.

Mr. DINGELL. I have only served on the committee seven terms and I want to say, modestly, that I am just beginning to learn something about taxes.

Mr. BENDER. Now, is that not a confession? Is that not grand?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, now comes the cruel pricking of the bubble—is it not fine that we now hear that the gentleman has been on the committee for seven terms and he is just now beginning to grasp what it is all about, yet here the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] brings in his bill the day before yesterday, or last month, and the gentleman from Michigan expects the bill to be perfection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I think it is the beginning of all wisdom when a man concedes that after seven terms he begins to realize the complexity of taxing and the responsibility imposed upon a man who has to deal with tax matters.

Mr. BENDER. I am very fond of my friend, and he knows it, but I say, for 45 minutes I have heard a lot of belly-aching here because the bill introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is not perfect. The gentleman from Minnesota himself confesses that it is not perfection. Frankly, when we approach these tax issues it is just like singing Onward Christian Soldiers. It says in one verse, "Like a mighty army moves the church of God." We know that is a hope and an aspiration. It is not always moving like a mighty army. Then in another verse it says, "We are not divided, all one body we." Well, that is another fine thing to sing about. We try to do it. Why should we be criticized here after a few weeks' time following 14 years of the worst bungling in government we have ever had in this country? Now a Republican Congress takes over, and here, after a month's work, they wisecrack about us.

Of course, you can take a little of that stuff. It is admirable in small doses. But when you get 45 minutes of it from two such experts, expert New Dealers, I should say, as the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Michigan, rather facetiously on one hand and trying to be serious on the other, in throwing that stuff around here—you know what I am talking about—it is worthy of no credence. In fact it is in bad odor and our tears refuse to flow.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I wonder if the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, will join with me in expressing the wish and the hope that if the gentleman from Michigan serves another 14 years on the Ways and Means Committee perhaps his education will be complete, and he will see the Republican viewpoint and embrace it.

Mr. BENDER. I agree. The Bible says "the wrath of man shall praise thee."

Mr. DINGELL. They still have something to learn.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It is interesting to note that for seven terms, or 14 long years, no one ever had any experience in reducing taxes. Not until the Republicans come in do we even offer to reduce taxes.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is right. The New Deal has been weighed in the balances and found wanting.

Let me say that the gentleman from Michigan confesses that he rode in on the coattails of the New Deal in 1932.

Mr. DINGELL. He never made that confession.

Mr. BENDER. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am going to raise a point of personal privilege, because that is a slander. I never made such an admission.

Mr. BENDER. I apologize if I have hurt the gentleman's feelings.

Mr. DINGELL. Do not say things of that kind.

Mr. BENDER. But I say the gentleman was on the New Deal ticket. He was hanging on somebody's coattails.

Mr. DINGELL. Maybe some did, but I did not. The gentleman has some weight on me but he does not have it up here.

Mr. BENDER. I am sure I have not. The gentleman is a very learned and fine person. I am sure, as for intellect, he is a giant.

Mr. DINGELL. I made the admission of being modest about my knowledge.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to my good friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. My distinguished friend has referred to the New Deal. As one who was majority leader for the last 6 years, and who has served here 18 years, during which period the gentleman has served here, I want to express my thanks to the gentleman for the many votes he gave in support of New Deal legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I listened with interest this afternoon and I have come to the conclusion that this little sideshow and this performance that we have seen is just an example of the cooperation that President Truman has asked of the Republican Party. This is just one example and, of course, we expect more as time goes on. Is that not right?

Mr. BENDER. That is a proper statement, and I think it is in order.

Regarding the statement of my friend, the former majority leader and now the minority whip of the House, I would say, yes, we voted for many things here as war measures, and since the war many of us have gone along with the administration. In fact, they had many unanimous votes here because of wartime conditions. But the war is now over, and we do not have to go for that stuff today. But may I say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] that I am sure I would not offend the learned gentleman by saying that he is hanging onto someone else's coattails. That is a figure of speech that is quite frequently used, you know. Many New Dealers were elected because of the voice and charm of the former President, but in any event his chief plank in the 1932 platform was to the following effect. He said:

> I shall approach the problem of carrying out the plain precept of our party, which is to reduce the cost of current Federal Government operations by 25 percent.

That is what he said about the plank in the Democratic New Deal platform in 1932, and you ladies and gentlemen of the House remember what happened. He was indulging in pure political bunkum. We got the business and they rode in on campaign promises that they did not try to keep. This Republican Congress was elected, in my opinion, because the people had had enough of broken promises, as has been evidenced here. Furthermore, they want the cost of government reduced and they want their taxes reduced. Now there are some things we cannot reduce. We cannot cut the interest on the debt. We cannot cut the expenses of the Veterans' Administration operations. But we can cut the cost of government and we are proceeding in order to do that. We can cut the tax burden. We are not saying we are going to do a 100-percent perfect job, but we are trying. We think our friends are just a little impatient since we have only been in control of the House of Representatives for 5 weeks, after 14 years of bungling on the part of the New Deal. Then they get up here and chastise or leaders for trying to do a good job. They do not cut a very good figure. We have just organized the House and we are ahead of the game. If you compared this Congress with any Congress in the last 14 years, we are way ahead of the game in performance.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Two years ago it was along about February before the House started to function, and the gentleman from Massachusetts rose on the floor of the House and asked unanimous consent every time that when the House adjourned it would go over a day. But what I rose to say was that it took the minority party this time over 2 weeks to pick their committees. Our hands were tied until they submitted the names of their committeemen to us. Is that not true?

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. And we have been hearing a great deal about taxes and one thing and another. All this mess we are in is due to our having gotten into the war that Mr. Roosevelt promised to keep us out of in his Boston speech.

Mr. BENDER. May I say to the gentleman that in 1938, long before the war, when Mr. Roosevelt promised jobs and when he promised to cut the cost of government, in 1938 in the city of Cleveland we had 87,000 people working on the WPA getting $15 a week, and it was not until the war came that they began to get jobs for the people of America. We had 11,000,000 people out of work before the war started in Europe and before we were in it. I say it comes with poor grace from the representatives and the leaders of the opposition, especially with their people in Congress and with the President submitting the kind of budget that he submitted to us to criticize our people for trying to get their feet on the ground and get going in an orderly way. It is worthy of no credence.

The American people know this picture quite as well as the Republican Party. It is saying to us today, "How do you propose to repaint the scene? What do you offer?" We are developing our answers day by day. The solution of these problems cannot be visionary. It must be realistic. It must spring from the bitter experiences through which we have passed in the last decade.

We are not dealing with a partisan issue. We are discussing the future of the Nation in the formulation of our solutions. The day of extensive activity is passed. Our frontiers are no longer beckoning every adventurous son of the Nation. Soils are no longer lying beneath our feet in the first fertility of the nineteenth century. Populations are no longer increasing by the millions annually, demanding new products in never-ending succession. Today we must stimulate, we must encourage. Our economy is changing from extensive to intensive.

The Republican Party is recognizing this basic factor. No return to the era of "Go West, young man" is possible. We have literally millions of men and women whom we must plan for on the theory that they will require assistance for many years ahead. America can take care of them. This Nation can and will retrain many of them for new tasks. It will provide work for all of them. We must not yield to the temptation to pauperize those who cannot be reemployed. And while the process goes on, we shall seek the middle course which has always been the American technique.

There can be no doubt in the mind of every American citizen that the great promise with which the Democratic Party assumed national control in 1933 has gone completely unfulfilled. The more abundant life, the restoration of national prosperity, were glowing visions. They captured the Nation's enthusiasm with the greatest of ease. But the magnitude of our optimism was in direct proportion to the size of our disappointment. We have come down to earth with the usual sickening thud. Nowhere did we see the realization of the New Deal's happy pledges. Not a single major group in our Nation can look upon the activities of the national administration with genuine satisfaction. Capital has watched with growing apprehension as it has recognized the increasing menace of Government in business. Industry has discovered to its deep chagrin that the Federal Government regards businessmen as distinctly antisocial creatures. For the first time in many years the employers of labor have become consistent targets for the scorn of high officials, whipping boys for the national administration. The experience has been novel, and distinctly unpleasant.

Labor, in whose name a host of measures have been sponsored and enacted by the fertile minds of the "brain trust," finds to its dismay that harmony and peace do not necessarily follow in the path of legislation. Nor have the leaders of labor discovered any formula for permanent employment in the multitude of laws hatched by the New Deal. Despite the intensified interest in labor problems, labor relations, and union organization, the working men and women of the Nation, after 14 years of New Dealing, are still lost in the shuffle.

Industry will move out of the doghouse back into the good graces of the Nation, for whose growth it has been so largely responsible. The epoch of name calling, witch hunting, and public hanging will end. Encouragement rather than deterrents will keynote the return of Republican leadership of our National Government.

Farms can still be made to pay in our land. The work of our State and Federal agricultural bureaus makes it evident that there are new crops, new methods, new ideas in farming which may yet restore agricultural prosperity. What we need most is a market. A revived Nation, with industry regaining the confidence it has lost, will build that market up anew. The frantic search for foreign outlets, initiated and promoted by the New Deal, must give way to the sounder economy of an increased American market.

Government will get out of business because it has demonstrated repeatedly that it does not belong there. An institution which seeks to regulate by destroying is either blind or willful.

The multitude of bureaus and agencies created by the Federal Government in the last 14 years will be decimated, retaining only those which can justify their existence through their constructive achievements. Federal expenditures will drop.

But above all else, these specific steps will restore the Nation's confidence in the future. Once the restraint upon private investment has been removed through more equitable tax laws, the millions of dollars now held in the vaults of our banks will be given opportunity to get to work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Light of the World, Thy wonderful compassion has brought to the gates of our lives the footsteps of One who is the sovereign expression of every human need. Forgive our shallow thinking and break through the twilight of our petty rivalries. With wise understanding, enable us to put to flight every hidden movement that seeks to change the ideals of a free people. O stimulate our souls with the certainties that make for the stability and perpetuity of our Republic.

Our Heavenly Father, we are anxious about Thy church, that its spiritual life may not be smothered by worldliness; we are anxious about our homes, that love and discipline may not sit idly by while the fires of irreverence and indifference burn. Here may the Godly virtues be exemplified, and emulated by children, and the voice of prayer be heard at the rising and the setting sun. Let the people praise Thee, let all the people praise Thee. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. It had been the intention of the Chair not to recognize Members for 1-minute speeches at this time, but, owing to the tragic event which happened in New York and over which the House is profoundly sorrowful, the Chair feels it may be advisable to recognize three Members from the great State of North Carolina to speak briefly. However, there will be no other 1-minute speeches until after the business of the day is disposed of, at which time the Chair will be glad to entertain such requests.

THE LATE HONORABLE O. MAX GARDNER

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, every North Carolinian is saddened today by the event which took place in New York this morning, when that great North Carolinian, former Gov. O. Max Gardner, Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, died. I am too stunned to say very much and cannot, under the circumstances, pay the proper tribute to his memory. For forty-odd years he and I have been close friends. All of his friends in North Carolina have followed his career with pride. Member of the General Assembly of North Carolina, Lieutenant Governor, Governor, Under Secretary of the Treasury, he has had a full life. I know of no man in North Carolina and few elsewhere who were his equal. A courageous man, an honest man, a man of the highest character, and a man of outstanding ability: this, in brief, is a very short statement of my friend and constituent. In the last few years Governor Gardner gave of his time and money to the establishment of a college, Gardner-Webb, in North Carolina. If his life had been spared, he would have made a great Ambassador to Great Britain.

I know the House joins with me today in expressing to Mrs. Gardner and the other members of the family our deepest and most sincere sympathy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, like my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina, Major BULWINKLE, I was greatly shocked and deeply grieved to learn this morning of the sudden and unexpected death of the ex-Governor and Ambassador Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Great Britain.

Governor Gardner was appointed by President Truman on account of his long experience and outstanding ability to this high and exalted position and was unanimously confirmed by the Senate January 13, 1947, soon thereafter taking the oath of office.

Governor Gardner at the time of his death was in New York ready to sail to London to take up his great work.

I am sure that nothing I could say at this time, feeling as I do so deeply the personal loss of a dear friend, would even in a measure be adequate to the wonderful record of Ambassador Gardner to our State and the Nation.

He served as Lieutenant Governor of North Carolina, then as Governor, both of which positions he filled with great satisfaction to our people. President Roosevelt recognized Governor Gardner's outstanding ability and frequently advised with him on matters of great national importance. President Truman also early in his administration recognized the great ability of Governor Gardner and appointed him to the important position of Under Secretary of the Treasury. While he only held this office briefly, his ability as a financier and his sound judgment on fiscal affairs were recognized by the entire country. The record of his services, both State and nationally, are indelibly engraved on the public affairs of both.

I shall always cherish as one of the joys of my life that I was privileged to enjoy a close relationship and friendship of Governor Gardner, and ofttimes have I been helped by his wisdom, advice, and counsel.

I entertained for Governor Gardner a very deep personal affection, as well as an exalted admiration. Governor Gardner was not only an outstanding statesman but a most successful businessman—truly a great man because he was a truly good man and a truly useful man.

In deed and in truth I have never known a more devoted champion of all the people, one whose ability, industry, fidelity, and experience qualified him in a higher degree for outstanding public service.

To his widow, children, and each member of the family I express my most deep and profound sympathy in their great sorrow and bereavement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is certainly 1 minute of time that I regret even having the opportunity to take. It is with a heavy heart that I listened to the announcement of the death of the Honorable O. Max Gardner. He was my personal friend. He was a friend of mankind. He was a great American. He loved his country; he served it and its people faithfully and well. In my opinion it was only as a result of great pressure that he continued in the service of this Nation. I, for one, had more real enthusiasm and optimism over what O. Max Gardner would do in Great Britain as Ambassador from this great Nation than I have had for any other man I have known in my life. His personality, his ability, his integrity were such that it would not only impress but almost overwhelm any man with whom he talked. He was eminently qualified for the great task to which he had been assigned. America can ill afford to lose such men in these troublesome times. The people of North Carolina and the Nation regrets his passing. May God rest his soul.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, according to newspaper reports a small group of Republican Members have held another one of their many caucuses—this time with the Republican leaders of the House. This caucus decided, in effect, to open the hunting season on the reciprocal-trade-agreement programs.

I make the observation, Mr. Speaker, particularly for the benefit of Members on the Republican side, that the reciprocal-trade-agreements program was not an issue in the recent congressional campaign; that Members of the majority, by virtue of being elected as Republicans, are not committed as a matter of Republican Party policy to vote to postpone or abrogate this most wise and important policy in foreign affairs.

I hope that the thinking Members will refuse to follow the leadership of a few who would plunge this country into an economic war with practically every other nation, and destroy one of the most effective means of securing a better understanding and more good will throughout the world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received unanimous consent to insert certain matter in the CONGRESSIONAL REC-

ORD. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $278.67, but I ask unanimous consent that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Oberlin Times.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO THE TERMS OF OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 91 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 27) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 27) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

This resolution has but one purpose. That purpose is to submit to the people, by and through their State legislatures, this very important problem of the Presidential tenure of office, and to let the people decide whether or not this limitation should be written into the Constitution.

Heretofore many resolutions have been introduced upon this very question, but for some reason or another they have fallen by the wayside, and no legislation has been passed upon this question, and our Constitution remains without amendment to this date respecting the tenure of the office of President.

Section 1, article II, of the Constitution provides:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of 4 years.

Again, under amendment 20, section 1, of our Constitution, we find, in that amendment, the following language:

The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

By reason of the lack of a positive expression upon the subject of tenure of the office of President, and by reason of a well-defined custom which has arisen in the past that no President should have more than two terms in that office, much public discussion has resulted upon this subject. Hence it is the purpose of this legislation, if passed, to submit this question to the people so they, by and through the recognized processes, may express their views upon this question, and, if they shall so elect, they may amend our Constitution and thereby set at rest this problem.

This is not a political question. The importance of the problem to the people transcends all political implications and considerations. This proposed amendment to our Constitution, if adopted, will continue throughout the future years, unless and until a further amendment may be adopted upon this subject. Therefore, in the face of general public discussions, in the face of the custom which has developed throughout the years, we are here presenting a resolution to submit this basic problem to the people.

When considering House Joint Resolution 27, amending the Constitution to limit tenure of the President to two terms, Congress must decide whether or not the people of the United States should still be permitted to choose the type of government under which they will live. This resolution merely enables our citizens through their State legislatures to express their opinion on this important question. I believe the people should make the decision, and I recommend adoption of this resolution as our expression of faith in their judgment.

When he refused nomination for a third term, George Washington warned the people that they might again be subjected to the tyranny of monarchy if they permitted any individual to become too firmly entrenched as the Chief Executive. This precedent established by our first President made unnecessary constitutional limitation of tenure of Presidency. As the precedent no longer stands to protect them, the people should be given the opportunity to set a limit on the time an individual can serve as Chief Executive. As a President can be elected by the electoral college, even without the popular vote, our citizens now have really little protection against totalitarianism. The question of Presidential tenure has never before been submitted to the people. To protect them from the oppression of dictatorships that have arisen in other countries, I recommend this resolution be adopted, allowing their expression of sovereignty.

THIS UNDEMOCRATIC AND UNWANTED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT IS BEING RUSHED THROUGH WITH UNSEEMLY HASTE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, the rule has been correctly stated by my colleague, the new chairman of the Committee on Rules, with whom I have had the pleasure of serving for many years. I have always found him to be fair, and consequently I was rather surprised that he should have yielded to the demands for depriving the House of a reasonable time for general debate on this important legislation.

NO OTHER CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT SO RESTRICTED IN DEBATE

If I am not mistaken, this is the first time that any resolution amending the Constitution that has served us so well for 170 years has been brought before the House under a rule which permits only two short hours for general debate. O I recollect in days and years gone by that on many occasions the Republicans demanded not 2 but 6 and 8 hours, sometimes even 3 and 4 days, on minor and inconsequential proposals; but on this resolution weighted with such grave importance, proposing to change the Constitution of the United States and to limit the right of the people to choose their own President, they are liberal enough to allow only two measly hours for general debate.

REPUBLICANS IN HURRY TO BI FREE TO ATTEND BANQUET

Of course, I understand that the gentlemen of the majority are anxious to get through with the sad business of passing this resolution in order to be free to attend a Republican feast this evening. Doubtless this pitiful victory over a great man now sleeping on the banks of the Hudson will sharpen their appetites and give zest to their banquet. I know it will be a splendid feast, and I wish that I could be with them to taste the delicious food, which I am sure I should find palatable and digestible enough; but I fear that I could not digest the words which would follow after the feasting.

Yet, still I ask, Why should the Members of this House and the people of America be deprived of the right to know the facts attending the passage of this resolution and of being informed by extended debate? Why should not the people know what this proposed constitutional amendment means? Is a banquet sufficient excuse to cancel out the democratic processes? Such haste seems indecent.

VAST MAJORITY FAVORED ROOSEVELT

I recall that my colleague, the majority leader, the genial gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], stated yesterday that a vast majority of the American people favor this legislation. Frequently the gentleman from Indiana is right; but this time, I am sorry to say, he is entirely wrong; and I think that he knows in his heart that this unseemly haste is due to the fact that the overwhelming majority of the American people are opposed to this amendment, and the Republican leadership is hurrying to pass it through the Congress before the public clamor grows too loud to be ignored. I know, and the Republican leadership knows, that a vast majority of the American people voted for Franklin D. Roosevelt not just once, or twice, nor even three times, but for four consecutive terms. That shows how the American people stand, and how they loved this great leader.

REPUBLICANS HAVE NO CANDIDATE FOR EVEN A SINGLE TERM

Of course, I realize that my Republican friends have no man that they could possibly elect President for a fourth term, nor even for a third term. In fact, I do not believe they have anyone at this time, or will have in the foreseeable future, who can even be elected for a first term, notwithstanding the fact that they succeeded in misleading sufficient of the American people to gain, in the last election, a temporary majority in and control of this House.

I do not know whether or not all of you know it; but, though I am and have been always a progressive Democrat, I am ready and willing to cooperate with the Republicans whenever they are right. Unfortunately, they are not right very often. In view of the tremendous responsibility which is now theirs, I hope that they will henceforth be right; but they will not be if they follow the tactics they have followed in this case, for certainly the Republican leadership has not indicated by this procedure that it is their aim and intent to deal fairly and justly either with the minority or with the American people.

REPORTED BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ONLY YESTERDAY

Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary only day before yesterday. They did not give that committee even time to introduce the amended resolution, nor to print the hearings for the benefit of the House membership. They were obliged to come in with a resolution which will have to be amended in accordance with the majority vote of the Judiciary Committee. I hope that in the future the Republican majority will not act so hastily and so harshly, bringing in legislation of major importance without giving this House and the country an opportunity to become familiar with the bills on which we are acting, and, in this instance, without any effort to explain why they believe the Constitution should be amended.

For 170 years this country has prospered and grown strong under the Constitution, without any amendment deviating from our true course toward more and more democracy, nor from the true principles of representative government laid down by the founding fathers. Today we are enjoying greater prosperity and greater liberty and greater equality than ever before in our history. I hope the Republicans will not be able to do anything to destroy that prosperity, which was brought about by the Democratic Party under the inspired leadership of our greatest President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, during the third and even the first part of the fourth term, until his untimely death, and despite the incalculable burdens of carrying a world-wide war to final victory.

CANNOT FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT BE PERMITTED TO REST IN PEACE?

What hurts most, and what I strongly resent, are statements made by several Republican Members that they "must vote for this anti-Roosevelt resolution." Perhaps, had I not overheard those remarks, I should not have said anything at all here today.

Can we not be fair enough to let rest in peace a man who has done so much for our country and for humanity? I think it is manifestly unfair for anyone to make such remarks. It was a Godsend to the world that we had Franklin D. Roosevelt, whom the people freely chose four times to direct our Government and our destinies, and who served the Nation and all mankind as no other man has ever done before.

Though Franklin Roosevelt now rests in eternal sleep, I trust and I hope that his views and his policies, for which he fought and for which he gave his life, will continue for years to come to shape our national destiny, and that this country will continue in the great material prosperity which he brought about. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the people of the world can reach his greatest objective—a just and lasting peace—not only for America, but for all people everywhere. That is his dream, and my dream, and the dream of the common people Roosevelt so loved.

STATES WILL NOT RATIFY THIS AMENDMENT

In thus assailing President Roosevelt, and in attempting to besmirch his memory, Mr. Speaker, my Republican friends are overlooking the fact that just as Roosevelt loved the common people, they loved him. I do not believe that three-fourths of the States will ever ratify this amendment, which is by its nature insulting to the memory of our greatest President. I have no doubt but that many of the legislatures even in solidly Republican States will refuse to approve it. Not only do the people remember Roosevelt's magnificent leadership through war to victory; they remember his stirring words in the depths of depression, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself." They remember that our living standards, our wage levels, not only in America but the world over, rose steadily under his influence and democratic leadership. They know that he gave his life to his country as truly as did any soldier hero fallen in the battle.

THIS AMENDMENT RESTRICTS THE DEMOCRATIC RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE TO FREELY CHOOSE THEIR OWN PRESIDENT

But, Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons why the people will rise up in anger against this proposed constitutional amendment once the facts are known.

Anyone familiar with the history of the formation of the Union and the writing of the Constitution, and with the debates in the Constitutional Convention and the commentaries of the founding fathers after the convention, knows that it was not the purpose of the delegates to that convention, nor of any of those who agreed to the language of the Constitution, to restrict the right of the people to choose their President freely, nor to limit the terms which a President could serve. No such limitation was written into the Constitution, and it would have been placed there had there been a majority sentiment for it. Our Constitution is a noble instrument of human rights, forged by the hammer of human necessity on the anvil of compromise.

We have frequently amended our Constitution, as the need arose, to extend and strengthen the democratic processes on which our Government is solidly built. This amendment goes backward, and limits the right of the majority to choose the President.

But on that score I know that the former majority leader, the great scholar and gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] will in his speech bring home the views of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, and of others who helped to frame our Constitution; therefore I will not dwell upon it.

REPUBLICANS ARE INCONSISTENT IN ATTACK ON CONSTITUTION

O Mr. Speaker, how well I remember how often my Republican friends have clamored to "stand by the Constitution"—the many statements they have made, the tears they have shed, in its name. I remember how often they have charged that we, the Democrats, were trying to change or ignore the Constitution. And now, lo and behold, today and for the last 2 days, drunk with their temporary power—and by temporary I mean short-lived—they are boldly trying to change that Constitution, and the principles of our democratic form of government, by restricting the right of the American people to decide for themselves who will be their President. This denies the long-standing principle of majority rule; it restricts and dilutes the rights reserved to the people under the Constitution. I cannot and will not concur in such a backward step, and I have confidence that the American people will make their opposition known before the Senate can ever act on this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important questions that any Member of this body will have to pass upon and I hope each Member will determine the question in accordance with his conscience. It is not my purpose to discuss politics in connection with the proposed amendment to the Constitution, an amendment which will not have any effect upon you and me of this generation but which might have a very important effect upon generations to come after you and I are dead and gone. If this amendment is incorporated in the Constitution, it will make the Constitution rigid. It ties the hands of future generations of Americans and deprives them of the opportunity to meet any problem that might confront them.

Of course, we have lived through the experience ourselves, but I can picture two generations from now, or one or three generations from now, when Americans may be enveloped in a war with their back to the wall. We will not be here. We will have passed on. But we will have imposed this prohibition upon them. They may be with their back to the wall with a President approaching the end of his second term. Let us assume the people of that future generation have complete confidence in their President. I do not know what his party may be. I do not care. That future President will be compelled to terminate his service as President of the United States when he may be the best man qualified to lead the people of our country at that time in meeting the crisis that confronts them. I beg of you as we sit here today to realize just what we are doing. I believe in custom. A custom is one thing, but a rigid prohibition is another thing. If this amendment becomes a part of the Constitution—and you cannot say, "We are sending it to the several State legislatures"; that is not the question; that is not the answer—if this amendment becomes a part of the Constitution, it imposes upon Americans for all time until and unless the Constitution is reamended the rigid hand of a rigid prohibition that no matter what crisis may confront America in the future when a President's second term is drawing to a close they cannot reelect him so that he may continue his service to the Nation which might be vitally necessary at that particular time.

I think it is too great a risk to take. For myself, I do not want to take it. Let us see what some of the eminent men of the past have said on this question. George Washington did not want a first term even. He accepted it reluctantly as a patriotic duty. He expected to serve about 2 years. He reluctantly served a second term because of the conditions abroad. He withdrew voluntarily at the end of his second term. But what did Washington say? This is what he said in a letter to Marquis de Lafayette on April 28, 1788, in relation to the second term. This is probably the only quotation of George Washington in relation to this question which I think can be found. He said in discussing or writing about the limitation of the terms of a President:

> Under an extended view of this part of the subject, I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the service of any man who on some great emergency shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public.

What about Thomas Jefferson? Thomas Jefferson, historically, is the father of the two-term custom. There is no question about that. Thomas Jefferson, however, only wanted one term. He served a second term because of the calumnies hurled upon him by the Federalist Party and the effect they were having abroad at the time. He served patriotically. He could have had a third term. As we look back in history, I think we would all agree as to that. Jefferson retired at the end of his second term, but back in the days of the Constitutional Convention he believed in rotation in office. That was the big issue then. But what did Jefferson say about this? Jefferson himself said:

> There is, however, but one circumstance that could engage my acquiescence in another election; to wit, such a division about a successor as might bring in a monarchist. But this circumstance is impossible.

In other words, Jefferson himself recognized an emergency might exist where he would run for a third term, and in those days the emergency was the danger of a division existing that might establish a monarchy in our country. So Jefferson himself definitely saw that there was a distinction between custom and rigid prohibition. He recognized that in case of an emergency he might have been compelled, patriotically, to run for a third term, but he said this circumstance was impossible, because the danger of a monarchy did not exist at that time. But he said if there was such a danger he would have run for a third time.

John Quincy Adams said it should not be incorporated in the Constitution as a rigid prohibition.

Theodore Roosevelt said:

> If, for instance, a tremendous crisis occurred at the end of the second term of a man like Lincoln, as such a crisis occurred at the end of his first term, it would be a veritable calamity if the American people were forbidden to continue to use the services of the one man whom they knew, and did not merely guess, could carry them through the crisis.

He further said:

> While it is well to keep it as a custom, it would be a mark both of weakness and unwisdom for the American people to embody it into a constitutional provision which could not do them good and on some given occasion might work real harm.

James Buchanan, in this very House, when he was a Member of this House, said:

> Shall we pass a decree, as fixed as fate, to bind the American people, and prevent them from ever reelecting such a man? I am not afraid to trust them with this power.

Woodrow Wilson, when he was asked about a 4-year term or one 6-year term with no reelection, made this remark:

> Put the customary limitation of two terms into the Constitution, if you do not trust the people to take care of themselves, but make it two terms (not one, because 4 years is often too long), and give the President a chance to win the full service by proving himself fit for it.

"If you do not trust the people to take care of themselves," you will note he said.

Senator William E. Borah:

> One of the fundamental reasons for opposing the joint resolution is that the people who could be trusted to determine whether or not they desire a President for a second term may also be trusted to determine whether or not they desire a President for a third term.

Henry Cabot Lodge, Sr.:

> I have no fear that they—

The American people—> can be fully trusted with the power to say whether a man shall serve a second time or a third time.

General Grant also took the same position. Ulysses S. Grant took the position that we should not impose upon the American people a rigid prohibition that would preclude them for all time of meeting any grave emergency that might arise.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of the Republican Party or the Democratic Party; this is a question where as we are sitting here we are acting for tomorrow, a tomorrow when you and I in all probability will no longer be alive. What we do today, however, will be operative and binding upon Americans who come after us. Now, we are going to impose the dead hand of the past upon them on some occasion when a grave emergency confronts them, when, as I said, they might be engaged in war, with a President coming to the end of his second term but possessing the confidence of the American people of that day—not the indispensable man, but the best man; there is such a thing as the best man under certain conditions to lead a people—when the best man was the President of the United States approaching the end of his second term, what are they going to do? What can they do? The "law of the jungle" confronts them. Just as people respond to emergency situations that confront them, especially that of self-preservation, so likewise do nations.

They might be compelled to demand that such a President act extra-constitutionally, the very fear some men have in mind now might be the vehicle under certain conditions when grave danger confronts our country for the people to demand of a President: "You should continue; it is your duty to continue until the danger is over." But outside of that, when that situation exists, and it may occur again, our country is likely to be faced with that danger again in the future; it might be even worse than it was in the last war; fighting with our backs to the wall, a President, as I say, nearing the end of his second term, the people wanting him, he being the best man in the country to lead them under those circumstances, and he being a good man, the people cannot follow that which custom dictates they should do because they are met with a rigid prohibition that says that under no conditions can they reelect such a man who is President and whom the country needs, the end of whose second term is drawing near, to continue in office no matter how grave the danger that confronts the country.

O Mr. Speaker, to me it is too great a risk. I am talking not as a Democrat but as an American. I served in World War I. Other Members here served in World War I, and many Members served in World War II. We are all interested in our country no matter which side of the aisle we sit on; we all believe in its fundamentals. We have got to view this from the angle of tomorrow. This amendment will operate upon future generations of Americans. This amendment at a particular time of grave crisis confronting our country in the future might place our country in a strait-jacket and it might be a contributing factor to harmful results.

In no part of the Constitution will you find any limitation, any prohibition except against Congress itself: Congress shall pass no law abridging the right of free speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assemblage. You will find limitations in the Constitution, but they are limitations upon Congress; and those limitations were imposed to protect the rights of individuals to assure that the legislative body would not take away the fundamental rights that our people believe in and for which the framers of the Constitution fought. This amendment is a limitation upon the people. This is not a limitation upon the Congress. It is a limitation upon the action of the people of the future, no matter what the danger may be, no matter how urgent it may be that the second-term President continue, he cannot if this amendment becomes a part of the Constitution. O Mr. Speaker, it is too grave a danger to take this step, too grave a danger for us who will be dead at that time in all probability, to impose such a limitation upon future generations of Americans. Let their hands remain unshackled. Let us not put them into a strait-jacket, a strait-jacket that might be the factor resulting in the destruction of our country at some time in the future. Leadership is important. Leadership is the big thing and a President in his second term in the future might be the leader who will bring our people to victory. His going out at such a time might be the difference between victory and defeat. We are tying the hands of Americans in the future from exercising in a grave emergency the judgment which they may deem is for the best interests of our country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, while I do not agree with the burden of the argument just made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have listened with interest to what he had to say. I commend him for his approach, which is clearly one devoid of partisanship. I join with him in the statement that the matter we are discussing today is not one of partisanship but rather of what best to do, be we Democrats or Republicans, looking to the future of this great land of ours. He has pointed out certain things which he says might be dangerous in their effects. Without undertaking to say that there is no force at all to his argument, speaking for myself I think that the dangers that the gentleman envisages, if they may be said to be dangers, are certainly outweighed by the real danger that obtains from the absence of the constitutional amendment as now proposed.

We are discussing here a proposal to perfect our American system of constitutional government. In such a discussion there can be no divisions on mere lines of partisanship, for in this House, Democrats, no less than Republicans, are devoted to our Constitution. We all want to see our system work for the benefit of the entire Nation, and for posterity.

Throughout our entire national history, we have amended the Constitution from time to time as experience appeared to dictate.

The Constitution has served us well. It was once described by the great Gladstone as the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Yet the Constitution itself clearly provides the methods of amendment, demonstrating that it was never the intention of the founding fathers to regard their work as finished for all time.

These are the reasons why I am happy today to call as our witness for this proposal one of the founders of the Democratic Party, a man who was himself one of the principal architects of the Bill of Rights, so vital a part of our Constitution today—Thomas Jefferson.

Toward the end of Jefferson's second administration, in 1808, there arose an insistent demand among many of his supporters that he stand for reelection.

When the legislatures of 7 of the then 17 States had adopted petitions urging a third term, Jefferson responded:

> That I should lay down my charge at the proper period is as much a duty as to have borne it faithfully.
>
> If some termination to the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution, or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for 4 years, will, in fact, become for life; and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance.
> Believing that a representative government, responsible at short periods by election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind, I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and I should unwillingly be the person, who, disregarding sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second term of office.

Now, we do not need a Philadelphia lawyer to interpret what Thomas Jefferson thought about the principle embodied in the proposal before us today.

If he were here today, in my opinion he would be supporting it.

As history demonstrates, the only reason this matter was not pressed to formal amendment many years ago was the deeply rooted belief of the American people that the principle had been firmly established by usage and broad general acceptance, to such a degree that no legal or constitutional limitation of Presidential tenure was required.

It is, of course, a common thing in American life to omit from the body of the law those things which are accepted as commonplace in the habits, customs, and traditions of the people. Indeed, our whole system of law and government is reared on certain basic assumptions of morality and attitude which are not specifically enumerated in the corpus juris. So it was with the matter of Presidential tenure.

By way of illustrating how deeply the two-term tradition had become imbedded in our legal and political assumptions, let me read to you a plank from the Democratic national platform for 1896. The plank is headed, "Third term." It reads:

> We declare it to be the unwritten law of this Republic, established by custom and usage of 100 years, and sanctioned by the examples of the greatest and wisest of those who founded and have maintained our Government, that no man should be eligible for a third term of the Presidential office.

With Thomas Jefferson as his mentor, and with the Democratic national platform of 1896 as his guide, no Democrat in this Congress need experience the slightest qualms of partisan conscience in giving unequivocal patriotic support to the amendment before us.

General Washington, the president of the Constitutional Convention, himself entertained some doubts concerning the failure of the Constitution, in its draft stage, to place a firm limitation upon Presidential tenure. In a letter to the Marquis de Lafayette under date of April 28, 1788, while the Constitution yet was in process of ratification by the States, George Washington said:

> There cannot, in my judgment, be the least danger that the President will by any practicable intrigue ever be able to continue himself one moment in office, much less perpetuate himself in it—but in the last stage of corrupted morals and political depravity.

It was this view, supported by the tremendous influence and prestige of General Washington, which at length prevailed, and led to the ratification of the Constitution without a specific limitation on Presidential tenure, as had been proposed before the convention by Edmund Randolph, of Virginia, and Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina.

But having so greatly influenced the adoption of the Constitution without that limitation, General Washington was the great author of the two-term tradition, which prevailed as almost the unwritten law of the land for 140 years.

In his historic Farewell Address of September 17, 1796, General Washington sharply warned his fellow countrymen against "that love of power, and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart."

His experience in the Presidency had confirmed him in "the necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power."

He warned against excessive partisanship, on the ground that such activities often defeated measures of sound progress and enlightened administration. And then he traced the dangers which are the very inspiration of this amendment:

> The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation, on the ruins of public liberty.

When Washington and Jefferson had, by deed and precept, firmly placed the foundations of the two-term tradition, the matter was at rest for many years, for Thomas Jefferson wrote in his biographical notes, shortly before his death in 1826:

> Though this amendment has not been made in form, yet practice seems to have established it. The example of four Presidents voluntarily retiring at the end of their eighth year, and the progress of public opinion that the principle is salutary, have given it in practice the form of precedent and usage—insomuch that should a President consent to be a candidate for a third election,

I trust he would be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views.

The House of Representatives supported and confirmed the Washington-Jefferson tradition in a resolution passed on December 15, 1875, in which it was declared to be the judgment of the House that any departure from the two-term tradition would be "unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

At that time the House of the Forty-fourth Congress was composed of 181 Democrats and 107 Republicans. The resolution I have quoted was adopted by a vote of 234 to 18.

That resolution quieted all third-term discussion for a quarter century.

Immediately after his second inauguration in 1901, William McKinley became the focus of much third-term chatter, which he promptly squelched with the declaration:

I will say now, once for all, expressing a long-settled conviction, that I not only am not and will not be a candidate for a third term but would not accept a nomination for it if it were tendered me.

I will not burden the House with a detailed review of the many minor incidents in our political history which reflect the same national sentiment—the same abiding faith of the people—that custom usage, and tradition adequately protected their constitutional system against the occasional ambitions of extended Presidential tenure.

Suffice it to say that at no point in our history has the matter ever been one of partisan decision.

On the contrary, great men of all parties have subscribed to and sustained this unwritten law of America.

Our only task today is to place the matter firmly in the Constitution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think one of the greatest expressions I have ever heard is "just a minute"; wait a little while and cool off a bit.

The gentleman from Indiana said our Constitution has been amended many times. That is true. But since the first 10 amendments were adopted—and they were practically agreed upon before the Constitution was ratified—it was said by men in high office that they would be adopted—I cannot find anywhere in any of the other amendments to the Constitution that a fundamental change has been made in the Constitution. This Government of yours and mine was founded upon the theory that it was to be a representative democracy. It was, it has been, and it is just that. None of the changes made in the fundamental law have ever countenanced a change from that fundamental.

Without putting any partisanship into this thing, and I do not intend to, for it is too big for that, when I say "just a minute" I think it might be well for us to take a little more time, look the situation over, and heed some of the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] when we are away from the third and the fourth terms just a little. This is a representative democracy. For the people to have the privilege of choosing whom they please to be their leader is democracy, real democracy, in action.

Let us not lightly change a document that has served us well and which has been a beacon to people throughout the earth who longed to be free and who wanted to get away from the heavy hand of the few that the people themselves in a free election might choose whom they would to be their leader. I do not know—I do not know, and neither do you know, whether a time may come when one man may be the individual to carry on in an hour of great strain and stress—and danger. I believe it would be well for us to take just a minute more to consider this fundamental change in our fundamental law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in any remarks I may make today a study of what was said about the third term by previous Presidents of the United States, a study prepared by the Legislative Reference Service in the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO TERMS OF OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 27) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 27, with Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, which gave consideration to this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the matter which is now before the House comes under House Joint Resolution 27, has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

This resolution, which is rather brief, provides for submission to the people of a constitutional amendment fixing the tenure of office of the President of the United States.

At this particular point and at the very outset of what I have to say on this question, my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], indicated we were placing shackles upon the people. I cannot subscribe to that statement, because we are merely passing upon the question as to whether or not we will submit to the people a constitutional amendment, and let the people pass upon it and decide that question themselves. I do not believe there is any Member on the floor of this House who opposes submitting to the people this constitutional question, and permitting the people to decide that question themselves and return to us what their decision is.

Let us see what the provisions of this resolution are. While I say it is brief, let us read it together

Section 1, which follows the preamble of the resolution, contains this language:

Any person who has served as President of the United States during all, or portions, of any two terms, shall thereafter be ineligible to hold the office of President; but this article shall not prevent any person who may hold the office of President during the term within which this article is ratified from holding such office for the remainder of such term.

Section 2 provides for ratification. That is the sole and only question which we are deciding today, as to whether or not we will submit it to your people, to the people of every district in our Nation, and to the people of this Nation, and let them pass upon this question as to whether or not they believe there should be a limitation upon the terms of office of the President of the United States; and this question is not, as my good friend has said, that we are shackling the people. We are simply passing down to the people the right to determine this very highly important and basic question.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I know that my distinguished friend from Indiana does not mean to make a misstatement, but I am afraid he has, because, after all, this question will never be submitted to the people. It is submitted to the legislatures.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, this question goes to the legislatures, and the legislatures are the representatives of the people in the various legislative districts. That has always been construed, and is today construed, as submitting the question to the people themselves.

At the very outset of what I have to say on this question I want to make clear that this question is not a political question in any sense of the word. I hope that it will not be treated as such by the membership of this great law-making body. The importance of this question, it being the submission of a constitutional amendment, far transcends all political implications and considerations. This proposed amendment to the Constitution, should it be finally adopted, would continue as a basic law of the land for years to come, and until some future amendment is adopted on this same subject. I therefore plead with the Members of the House to approach this problem in the spirit of the sacredness with which this question is enshrouded. We are meeting and facing a problem which will mean the writing of the scroll of our fundamental law, which will endure throughout time and until our words have been erased in the future by other generations.

This resolution has but one purpose. That purpose is to submit to the people of the country by and through their State legislatures the important problem of Presidential tenure, and permit the people through their legislatures to decide whether or not they desire that limitation fixed or to leave the question of Presidential tenure just as it is now set forth in the Constitution of the United States of America.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does my friend agree with my contention that if in the future our country should be involved in war and the then President were in his second term, that no matter what the emergency, no matter what situation might confront the people at that time, that President must retire if this resolution becomes part of the Constitution?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman's question, and thanks for submitting it. May I say that if our country were involved in any grave emergency in the future, such as war, the President does not fight the war. Our chiefs of staff, our generals, our admirals are the ones who fight our wars. Our President takes advice, of course, and acts in conjunction with them. But where is the President, of whatever political party he may be a member, who would not take that same counsel, that same advice, for the safety and for the protection of our Nation and the people in it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SPRINGER. May I proceed further? I have but a short time. I appreciate the gentleman's interest.

Mr. Chairman, during the past many resolutions of this kind have been submitted but none have ever been enacted by both Houses of the Congress, and this question has not been submitted to the people. Throughout the years the Constitution has stood as originally written, and may I read just for our own consideration, as we deal with this vitally important problem, section 1 of article II of the Constitution which contains this provision. I know all of you are familiar with it, but let us review it once more:

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America, who shall hold his office during the term of 4 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that until the lame-duck amendment to this article, amendment No. 20, there had been no amendment adopted on this question. That amendment provided—

> That the terms of President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January of the year in which such terms should have ended if this article had not been ratified and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me call attention to the fact that in 1861 when everyone knew we were on the verge of a war, the Confederate constitutional convention met, at a time when we had one of the greatest soldiers of all time as President of the Confederacy, and they adopted a constitutional provision limiting the Presidency of the Confederacy to 6 years and providing that he could not succeed himself.

Mr. SPRINGER. In other words, they wanted to protect to some extent against any man perpetuating himself in public office.

Mr. Chairman, I want to recur to the words of Woodrow Wilson. Let us think for a minute what he said on this question. I obtained this interesting statement from his own remarks, now on file in the Congressional Library. This is what Woodrow Wilson said on this subject:

> To change the term to 6 years would be to increase the likelihood of its being too long, without any assurance that it would, in happy cases, be long enough. A fixed constitutional limitation to a single term of office is highly arbitrary and unsatisfactory from every point of view.

He was thinking about the one-term proposal.

> Put the present customary limitation of two terms into the Constitution, if you do not trust the people to take care of themselves, but make it two terms (not one, because 4 years is often too long), and give the President a chance to win the full service by proving himself fit for it.

Before closing I want to quote the words of Abraham Lincoln when he left Springfield, Ill., to come to Washington to assume the Presidency. He came to Indianapolis. He was worried and distressed. He stopped there. A great group of people had assembled. They asked him to speak. He spoke, and in the course of his remarks he said this to the American people:

> Remember, it is not with the President nor the officeholder, nor with the politician, but with the people alone rests the power of determining our policies of government.

Mr. Chairman, we are today proposing to submit this highly important question to the people, just as Lincoln proposed.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, a number of the members of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary realize that the Constitution sets no limitation on the number of terms a President may serve. The Members also realize that a tradition was established by Washington, followed by Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Cleveland, McKinley, and Wilson. Now attempts are being made to change the Constitution as to number of terms a President may serve.

These Members feel a change is unnecessary, but if there is to be any change these Members feel it would be preferable to change the Constitution so that a President could serve only 6 years and not be eligible for reelection.

It has always been natural for the incumbent President to have his eyes fixed on reelection, and all the acts of the first term, directly or indirectly, in some measure, are affected by the ambition for a second term. It is only natural for the incumbent President to make appointments even to his Cabinet with due consideration for political repercussions. Even appointments to important judicial positions have been at times tinctured with politics. I make no specific charge against any specific President. I speak generally. The President is one to ask himself and his intimates, "Will the appointment enhance or diminish my prospects for reelection?" You know and I know that even Ambassadors and Ministers have been appointed because of political campaign aid and assistance and in the hope of renewal of that aid at reelection time. If there is no possibility, we feel, for reelection, there is no need for the President and his Cabinet and those associated with him to canvass for delegates at the national convention; no need for the President to placate certain sections of the country that may be hostile; no need to suggest legislation that might mean the garnering of additional votes that might be useful at the national convention.

During the first term the ambition for reelection to a second term and to serve four additional years casts an ominous shadow, in my humble estimation, over all the acts and all the works of the incoming President. I could, but shall not, quote you at length the arguments advanced by numerous Presidents, notably Jackson and Hayes and Taft, in favor of a 6-year term, with no reeligibility, but I will give you the statement made by Grover Cleveland when he accepted the nomination for President. He argued for a 6-year term, with no right to reelection. He said:

> Then an election to office shall be the selection by the voters of one of their number to assume for a time a public trust, instead of his dedication to the profession of politics; when the holders of the ballot, quickened by a sense of duty, shall avenge truth betrayed and pledges broken, and when the suffrage shall be altogether free and uncorrupted, the full realization of a government by the people will be at hand. And of the means to this end not one would, in my judgment, be more effective than an amendment to the Constitution disqualifying the President from reelection. When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptations to retain public place once gained, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent when a horde of officeholders, with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for reelection a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent political action which must characterize a government by the people.

I could not and you could not put in better language, or express more succinctly or more wisely, the argument for a 6-year term, with no right to reelection. I feel that the desire to be reelected tends to build up, beyond peradventure of a doubt, for the incumbent a dangerous political machine. The attendant political strains and stresses are inconsistent with good government. Too often the President, having his eye on the reelection possibilities, wants to be all things to all people at one time. Too often in our history Presidents in their first term have actually—and I can give you chapter and verse—appeased the bosses and appeased the machines. His efficiency thereby becomes greatly impaired. Not infrequently he has the overweening desire, in order that he may get the renomination, to punish his enemies unduly and to reward his friends too lavishly.

Elections every 4 years are too often, and a great burden of taxation thereby is saddled upon the people. We know that the approach of any election sets the demagogues at work hunting issues and inventing party slogans to stir up the country, and thus the blight of discontent and uncertainty as well as fear descends upon all of us. Business is greatly retarded, and industry is hurt and hampered. That evil should not come upon us too often. It is too often, indeed, to have it come before us twice in 8 years and four times in 16 years.

For that reason, among others, I do believe it would be well for this Committee to vote for an amendment which will be offered, a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the majority of the House Committee on the Judiciary, which substitute amendment would set up a tenure of 6 years, with no right to reelection.

I also believe this: The President's health, with a 6-year limitation, would be better protected. I believe that if President Roosevelt had not run a third and fourth time—I do not say he should or should not, I am addressing myself now to his physical condition—he might have been spared to us and we could use now and use well his prescience, his prophetic wisdom, and his statesmanship.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks, in order that we may become properly oriented, let us remember how many efforts and attempts have been made to amend the Constitution of the United States. Inquiry today of the Congressional Reference Service, available to the Members of this House, reveals that 4,500 attempts have been made to amend the Constitution, of which number 1,300 were made in the first 100 years of the Constitution.

It has been argued here today that we are doing something new, dangerous, and untried.

In those first 100 years of the 1,300 attempts, 125 went to the tenure of office of the President of the United States and in a period of 39 years, from 1899 to 1928, 85 additional attempts were made to affect the tenure of office of the President of the United States. Therefore, all told, in a period of 139 years 210 attempts have been made to fix the tenure of office of the President of the United States. So we are not doing anything new, unusual, or out of the way at this time. We are simply trying to carry out the mandate of the people in order that they may have an expression and voice in the amendment of the Constitution. We must remember that our guide in this question is the Constitutional Convention. When Edmund Randolph appeared in Philadelphia on the 25th day of May 1787, and the Convention finally got down to work on the 29th the seventh ordinance that he had in his propositions was as follows, which I desire to read into the RECORD:

7. Resolved, That a National Executive be instituted; to be chosen by the National Legislature for the term of —— years, to receive punctually at stated times a fixed compensation for the services rendered, in which no increase or diminution shall be made so as to affect the Magistracy, existing at the time of increase or diminution, and to be ineligible a second time.

It is true that no time was fixed to limit the debates of that Convention and in the 91 days in which they were engaged, from the 29th day of May until the 12th day of September, you will find that nearly 14 days of the time of the Convention was consumed in fixing the mode of election of the President, the time that he would serve, and the length of his term. After these propositions had been referred to the Committee of the Whole and was first debated on the 1st and 2d and 8th days of June, finally on the 26th day of July the committee made a report and in that report they fixed the term at 7 years and proposed that the incumbent would be ineligible to serve a second term. This carried through until finally the great report came through on the 4th of September under the direction of Judge Brearley, of New Jersey, chairman of the Committee on Postponed Matters. Their report was to this effect: that the term should be 4 years and the ineligibility clause stricken out. Now that is our polestar by which we must be guided today. What did the framers of the Constitution intend and what did they want done? It was known that George Washington would become the first President. Everyone knew that. The great doubt at that time was whether the country would endure for, on the 8th day of August, Nathaniel Gorman, in the Committee of the Whole, addressed George Washington, who was then presiding, and said, "Can it be supposed that 150 years hence this great country, including the western territory, will remain one nation?" Well, 160 years have gone by and Nathaniel Gorman's question has been answered. Incidentally, he was a gentleman from Massachusetts. On that score, when Washington came to the end of his second term, his Farewell Message went out to the people and thereby the precedent was established which grew into tradition which endured down through the years. What was the result of that? A few years ago that tradition was broken. What may be the other effects, if you please? Our founding fathers intended that this should be a great system of checks and balances, that the judiciary should be independent, that the legislative branch should be independent, and that the executive branch should be independent to the extent that the Executive could go ahead and administer laws enacted by the legislative bodies. I read from a statement issued by the Attorney General of the United States that in the period from 1932 down to the present there have been appointed to the United States judiciary 192 Federal judges, both district and circuit court judges, 25 in the Territories, and 14 in the lower courts, a total of 231 judges. Of that number 17 have been Republicans—9 in the United States, 6 in the Territories, and 2 in the District of Columbia. This has now reached the point where the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate has taken this matter up and publicly declared through the press and through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that there must be a different division in the appointment of men to fill these great and high offices of our judiciary.

That is just one illustration of the case of a President having more than two terms and entrusting too much power to one man.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. In order to have the record clear, I just want to ask the gentleman if he does not agree that this was the procedure: that the 7-year term, without further eligibility, which was changed to eligibility and then changed back again, was then sent to the Committee of Eleven, after the Committee on Detail had reported it to the Committee of the Whole? Was not that election by the National Legislature?

Mr. GRAHAM. Up to that point the Senate was to have elected the President. At that point the electoral college was brought in.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the 7-year term was election by the National Legislature?

Mr. GRAHAM. That was the first matter presented, but afterward it came down to the writing of the Constitution and the formation of the electoral college.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the electoral college came out of the Committee of Eleven?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. But prior to that it was a 7-year term, to be elected by the National Legislature?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

There has been a great lack of emphasis here on the mode of election. That is what those men were principally driving toward at that time, because at the time and in that period the relative number of voters was considerably less than it is today.

In conclusion this is one point I wish to make: Our fathers realized, of course, that the day would come when it would be necessary to amend this Constitution. The great bulk of the American people have been hesitant to touch this charter of Government. The very number of amendments I have cited, nearly 4,500 attempts with only 21 successful, is proof in itself of the strong hold that this great charter of human rights has upon the minds and hearts and consciences of the American people. But by the same token, inasmuch as it has been amended, I quote you in substance the words of James Madison when he submitted the original amendments in the First Congress. This is approximately what he said:

> We never need to fear an executive in this country because he will always be weak. The legislative branch will always be the stronger.

Had Mr. Madison lived within the last two decades he would have reversed that statement. Now we have come face to face with the situation where we have seen the evil of perpetuation of centralization of government, of control through great bureaucracies, appointment of courts and control of our foreign relations, all due to the built-up, accumulated potency and power of one man remaining too long in public office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is extremely important, when an attempt is made to amend the Constitution, to have as the objective something more than what I believe is being attempted here today. It is very important for us to remember in connection with the present resolution that perhaps as much time was devoted in the discussions of the tenure in office of the President as was devoted to any other section of the Constitution. For 18 days the founding fathers labored with the question of whether or not the tenure should be limited, and, significantly enough, the only proposal made toward limiting the time during which the Chief Executive could serve was in connection with one term of either 6 or 7 years. It was not until after this complete debate when, in my judgment at least, the entire committee was worn out and tired, that they did nothing about it. But bear this in mind, that a great deal of thought was given to this particular section of the Constitution. I believe that if we are going to do anything at all we ought to do what the founding fathers almost did, namely, provide for one term of 6 years.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] has touched to some extent on the abuses that could follow when there is no limitation on the number of terms. He overlooked, however, the extremely important question of selection of personnel by the Chief Executive. Under present conditions too much attention is given to geography and politics. I could well understand there being two or three very capable men in the State of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Iowa, who could not possibly be considered because of the population of that State compared with States in which there was a much larger number of voters. No man ever occupied the seat in the White House who did not during his first term think of his reelection. It is only human nature. So I repeat, if we are going to take the first step incident to doing something as important as amending the Constitution is, we should advocate a real improvement and only after greater consideration than has been given the proposal now before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON].

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, the age-old question of the third term for President is before us again. The question arose in the early days of the Republic. In 1787 when our Constitution was first adopted our founding fathers debated the question of tenure of office for the President. First, it was proposed that the President should have one 7-year term. That proposal was adopted and later thrown out. Then a 6-year term was proposed, but rejected. Finally, in its great wisdom, the Convention settled on a 4-year term, with no limit to the number of terms. During the 170 years since the establishment of tenure of office for all our elective Federal officials many proposals have been made to change or limit the length of their service, but no change has ever been made. For many years, some Americans, particularly Republicans, believed that the precedents set by Washington and Jefferson, when they refused to serve three terms, had established an unwritten law that no President should ever serve his country more than 8 years.

In 1940 opponents of Franklin D. Roosevelt called on that unwritten law to help them prevent his election for a third term. But this so-called precedent or tradition proved a poor substitute for the will of the people, who swept the President back into office for a third and a fourth term. To have had a constitutional limitation on the Presidential tenure of office in 1940 and again in 1944 would have been disastrous. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gross fallacy of such a proposal as we have before us today was proved beyond the shadow of a doubt when in the face of a grave national crisis in 1940 the people of the United States believed it inadvisable to change their Chief Executive; and the utter stupidity of such a proposal was proved in 1944 when the people believed that such a change would have thrown our Nation into chaos and jeopardized our security in the face of the gravest military crisis in our Nation's history.

The proposal before us utterly ignores the possibility of future crises and exigencies which could well make it mandatory that we continue a Chief Magistrate in office beyond an 8-year period.

Before 1940 the precedent for the President's tenure of office had been established by the Presidents themselves, notably Washington and Jefferson. But in 1940 the precedent was established by the people, and that is as it should be. The President is the servant of the people, and each 4 years the people themselves should have the privilege of deciding whether their chief servant is to continue in office or be replaced. President Wilson said, "We singularly belie our own principles by seeking to determine by fixed constitutional provision what the people shall determine for themselves."

If the people believe it unwise to continue a President in office after he has served 8 years, or 4 years, let them make that choice at the ballot box when and if the incumbent President seeks reelection and in the light of the issues involved and in consideration of the relative merits of the parties and their candidates. But in the name of democracy their exercise of free choice of a President should not be limited for all time to come by a constitutional amendment passed with only present partisan political considerations involved. It has been suggested that a constitutional amendment may at any time be repealed in the event the people should at some future time change their minds about the third term. The fallacy of that is obvious, since the President is elected by a mere majority, whereas the passage or repeal of a constitutional amendment requires a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress and ratification by three-fourths of the States.

Much has been said about the danger to democracy in allowing a President to remain in office beyond 8 years. There can be no danger to democracy so long as the people themselves may freely exercise the franchise. Parliamentary governments have preserved their democracy with indefinite tenure for their prime ministers.

Manifestly, if the people of the United States can be trusted to elect a President for one term, or two terms, they also can be trusted to determine whether he should be continued in office for a third one.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I shall favor this resolution. The two-term rule for the position of President is an American tradition which was established by Washington, ratified by Jefferson in forceful and unambiguous language and likewise ratified expressly or impliedly by every other President until the day of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The tenure of Franklin D. Roosevelt proved that Washington and Jefferson were wise.

I introduced a resolution to the same import as the resolution that we are now considering. I would have voted for my resolution and I shall vote for the one before us today.

My resolution was introduced by me several years ago and has been reintroduced in this session of Congress as House Joint Resolution 36. A copy of that resolution is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 36

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. No person shall be chosen or serve as President of the United States for any term, or be eligible to hold the office of President during any term, if such person shall have theretofore served as President during the whole or any part of each of any two separate terms; but this article shall not prevent any person who may hold the office of President during the term within which this article is ratified from holding such office for the remainder of such term.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a resolution that I introduced on this same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 27. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], one or two others, and myself introduced identical resolutions, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the tenure of office of the President to the whole or any part of each of two separate terms; in other words, making ineligible any person who has served as President for a whole or part of two separate terms, and thereby placing a maximum limit of 8 years. No man could serve more than 8 years if this proposed amendment is submitted to the States and ratified by 36 of the 48 States.

I am expressing the view that I have entertained over a long period of years. My experience and observations have strengthened my position on this matter. There has been so much discussion of this subject that I feel that we should at least give the American people, through their respective legislatures, the right to determine whether or not they desire such a limitation.

President George Washington, the Father of Our Country, in his wide experience and great wisdom, declined to be considered for a third term even though there was a universal demand that he do so and at a time when our country was having serious problems with France and other nations. Thomas Jefferson, another one of our very great Americans, the author of the Declaration of Independence, and who had served our country in the highest offices in this country and in foreign countries, certainly believed in representative democracy and in protecting the liberties and freedom of the American people. He had seen at first hand in Europe how free people had lost their freedom, not through parliaments and congresses, but through ambitious heads of the executive branch of the government. Therefore, 2 years before his second term expired, he made the following statement:

The general solicitations I have received to continue another term give me great consolation, but considerations for public as well as personal determine me inflexibly on that measure. That I should lay down my charge at a proper season is as much a duty as to have borne it faithfully. * * * These changes are necessary, too, for the security of republican government. If some period be not fixed, either by the Constitution or by practice, to the services of the First Magistrate, his office, though nominally elective, will in fact be for life; and that will soon degenerate into an inheritance. I have therefore requested my fellow citizens to think of a successor for me, to whom I shall deliver the public concern with greater joy than I received them.

In this wonderful statement Jefferson reemphasizes the principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence and our Constitution. He truly believed that the hope of this Nation and the security of our people could only be achieved through our republican form of government. He, too, realized the danger to our freedom in too long a tenure of the powerful office of the President. At the time he made this declaration and 2 years before his term expired we had very serious foreign problems with both Great Britain and France, and it might be said at that time our Nation was weak in numbers, naval and military forces, as well as wealth. We had not yet become thoroughly established. Jefferson might well have said that by reason of the perils that confronted this new Republic there was an emergency and listened to the general solicitation not only of his own political party but many of the opposition party to consider a third term.

James Madison, James Monroe, and Andrew Jackson, all great Americans and popular heroes, declined to be considered for a third term. The first to attempt to override the wise example and admonition of Washington and Jefferson was President Ulysses S. Grant. He was a very popular war hero. Many Americans felt that he had contributed greatly in saving the Union and freeing millions of slaves. Many of his comrades in arms and many and perhaps more influential of his appointees insisted that he seek a third term. His friends made a long and determined fight to secure for him the Republican nomination. Three hundred and six delegates stood out to the end but the Republican Party refused to give to the hero of Appomattox the nomination for a third term. The Republican Party thereby rendered a great service to our country.

Theodore Roosevelt was nominated as the running mate of President McKinley in 1900. They were overwhelmingly elected. President McKinley lost his life at the hands of assassins in September 1901, less than 6 months after his second inauguration and Theodore Roosevelt entered upon his duties of President. He was nominated in 1904 and elected by an overwhelming majority. A host of admirers and friends urged him to seek another term as he had had only one full term.

The records show that 30 of our American Presidents were conscious of this threat to the freedom of the American people and they pointed out that there should be a limitation as to the tenure of the Presidential office and one of them, a great Democrat, favored 4 years, some 6 years, others not more than 8 years. Republican and Democratic National Conventions, from time to time, have declared in favor of a limitation of the tenure of this office.

Whatever may be said of the mental attainments and the winning personality of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, he must have impressed the American people that he was an ambitious man. He insisted on having control of not only the executive branch of the Government but control of Congress and control over the courts. He created hundreds and hundreds of bureaus, commissions, and agencies and at one time had more than 4,000,000 Federal civil officeholders in this country and in foreign countries and through these agencies and officials, they attempted and did, to a large degree, control agriculture, industry, labor, and many of the normal activities of the American people. Power feeds power.

When history finally records what transpired in our Nation for the last 14 years, they will likely write that the two-term tradition was broken by these controls and by the expenditure of enormous sums of money and the granting of special favors to blocs and groups.

Soon after the election of President Roosevelt to his fourth term many of his friends and admirers were declaring themselves in favor of a fifth term, and we heard that attitude substantially expressed today by at least one of the able Members of this House, confirming the prophecy of the immortal Jefferson nearly 140 years ago. Jefferson said that there should be a limitation on the tenure of this great office, and that these changes are necessary for the security of our republican form of government, and he also stated that he should lay down his charge at a proper season and that the laying down of his duties of President is as much a duty as to have performed the duties of this office faithfully.

Who can say that some other great American, Democrat or Republican, could not have handled the affairs of this Nation from 1940 to 1945 equally as well as President Roosevelt? To take any other view we must assume that we have and do produce in this country indispensable men. This idea was only sold to one other man before President Franklin D. Roosevelt and that was President Grant.

My sincere prayer is that we shall never live to see the day when this great Republic becomes so bankrupt of leadership and patriotism that we accept the principle of the indispensable man. I am against the 6-year one term. If we should happen to pick a bad President, 6 years is too long, and if we picked a good President, under this amendment, the American people can elect him for another term. Furthermore, unless we amend the Constitution as to the election of Members of the lower House, there would be great confusion.

The two-term President would be encouraged to select suitable men for high places in our Government and conduct himself in a way that would meet the approval of the American people. Eight years of honest and faithful service is enough to break down the vitality and health of any man. While President Roosevelt won a fourth term, yet the burdens of the office greatly lessened his activities during his fourth term. The Constitution, as written provides that the term of office of the President shall be 4 years. It makes no provision for his reelection. But he set his face against this proposal. He recognized at that time that the two-term principle declared by Washington, Jefferson, and other American Presidents was generally regarded as being embodied in our country's political system.

President Wilson, our great war President, so far as I know, never showed any inclination or desire to seek a third term at the height of his popularity. President Coolidge, as the running mate of President Harding, was swept into office by a landslide in 1920. He and Mr. Harding assumed office on March 4, 1921. President Harding, after less than 3 years' service, died suddenly and Mr. Coolidge assumed the Presidency. He became a very popular President, though he had been in office less than 2 years. He was nominated by almost a unanimous vote in the Republican Convention in 1924 and was triumphantly elected. His administration of the affairs of the Nation was marked by honesty and high purpose. Tremendous pressure was brought to bear to have him seek another full term, but more than a year before the national election in 1928 he made known to the American people that he would not be a candidate. He recognized that the two-term principle was fully embodied in our political system. At the end of his term he would have had less than 6 years of service. Mr. Coolidge recognized that by accepting another full term he would have had more than two terms and violate this political principle.

This is not and must not be made a partisan issue. It is a great policy in the interest of freedom and our republican form of government laid down by the Father of our Country and followed by such great Democrats as Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, and such outstanding Republicans as Theodore Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge, and in only two instances in all of our history has any serious attempt been made to set aside this great political principle, in the persons of President Grant and President Franklin D. Roosevelt. No doubt, in the days of President Grant, some of his stalwart admirers looked upon him as the indispensable man but that Republican Convention believing, as we strongly believe, that this country has never had an indispensable man, refused to nominate him.

Through the 50 centuries of the world's history, chief executives, emperors, kings, princes, czars, as well as some presidents of the nations of the earth, by their own thinking and by reason of the urging of their appointees, have considered themselves the indispensable man or woman. Some of these have been cruel tyrants, others have been benevolent dictators or rulers, some have sought power and more power to accomplish their own selfish aims and those of a small coterie of favorites surrounding and cooperating with them.

Then, there have been the benevolent group of executives who, with high purposes and motives, through their own thinking and the thinking of their friends and supporters have come to believe that they alone know what is best for the people or country over which they have control, and they regard themselves as indispensable men and women. They seek power and more power to continue what they regard as their benevolent rule over the nation and the people.

As we read history no free people ever lost their liberties through their parliament or congress except in some instances through the influence and power of the executives, the law-making body is whipped into subservency and they abdicate their powers. The real hope of a republic or democracy is in a strong parliament or congress, freely chosen by the people. The parliament or congress has great power, especially in this country, to protect and preserve the rights, freedom, and liberties of the people, but such bodies do not have the power of the sword or the expenditure or disbursement of enormous sums of money, or the appointment of millions of great and small public officials. We have many examples of "yes men" in parliaments and congresses who were made subservient through the tremendous power of the chief executives. Long tenure of the Chief Executive office in this Nation was considered dangerous to the liberties and freedom of the American people, even by our early Presidents. This danger has increased many hundredfold since the days of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson. In those days we had a very small Army and Navy. It was numbered by thousands rather than millions. The appointees were numbered by thousands rather than millions. The expenditures at the disposal of the President were limited to millions rather than tens of billions as it is today. In those days there were few blocs and groups that were demanding special benefits, aids, and hand-outs from the Government. It was generally accepted that the people supported their Government instead of the Government, through special privileges and benefits, supporting the people.

If long tenure of office of the President was a threat to our republican form of government as stated by President Jefferson nearly 140 years ago, with his limited powers, small disbursements, small Army and Navy and a small number of appointees, how much greater must that threat be to our republican form of government and to the liberties of the American people today. The threat to the security of our country with 48 great States and approximately 135,000,000 people with untold wealth could not have been as great as they were to our security from foreign attacks as they were in the days of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, when our country was threatened by the French on one side and the British on the other side and the French and the British had control of the seas and much of our own North American Continent which is now a part of the United States. We have observed that even so-called benevolents, chief executives, can find emergencies and other reasons that appear to them to be good and sufficient.

I cannot believe that President Roosevelt could have or would have been nominated for a third term or even a fourth term but for the use of the Executive powers of himself and supporters to bring about his nomination for a third and fourth term. During that period the number of Federal officeholders increased by leaps and bounds. The billions of dollars of money at the disposal of the President and his subordinates increased by billions from year to year, and with all these extraordinary powers were given to the President, and practically blank checks were voted by a Congress that admittedly was dominated and controlled by the President. Immense sums of money were distributed to various groups. Of course, in each case the American people were told that all of these acts were made necessary by reason of the threat of some emergency.

At one time we reached the point that there was not only control of the executive branch of the Government but a very large control of the legislative branch and, last but not least, control of an overwhelming majority of the members of the Federal courts. All of these things violated the expressed provisions of the Constitution providing for three coordinated branches of our Government. The American people now begin to realize clearly the wisdom of Washington, Jefferson, and other great American Presidents in establishing and holding to the principle that a longer period than two terms was a real threat to our republican form of government.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHELF.]

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to House Joint Resolution 27. I voted against it when it came before the full Committee on the Judiciary. I joined in the minority report which sets forth our reasons for our opposition to what, in my opinion, is a legislative abortion—an untimely arrest of democratic process. I shall vote against it today on final passage.

I sincerely believe that this attempt to limit the tenure of office of the President of the United States is unwarranted, unneeded, unwise, undesirable, unthinkable, unbelievable, unconscionable, and that it actually reeks with putrefaction insofar as keeping good faith with our basic precepts of democracy is concerned.

We are considering today a proposal that strikes right at the heart of our form of government. We are considering a proposal which would limit the rights of the American citizens as free people to govern themselves according to their expressed will as guaranteed by the tenets upon which our Nation was founded.

Perhaps one might say I am going far afield in attaching too deep a significance to this proposed amendment to our Constitution, an amendment which would do nothing more than merely limit the term of the President of the United States to two 4-year terms. Indeed, it could sound innocuous enough. Why consider over carefully a proposal that apparently does no more than limit the tenure of office of our President. To my mind, there are several vitally important factors involved which call for careful, deliberate, conscientious and even prayerful consideration.

First and foremost, we are proposing to recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. For 160 years that document has outlined the principles of liberty, justice, and democracy, but it has done more than that because in guaranteeing freedom, it has also indirectly espoused the cause of the teachings of Christianity. Our Constitution has been the beacon light of hope, of faith, of comfort, and of peace to freedom-loving peoples all over the world. I do not mean to say that the founders of our Nation were able to frame an infallible pattern of government for our people throughout the ages. Quite naturally, there must be changes in our methods of operation to meet our governmental needs in a changing world. But I do say that the principles laid down in our Constitution have proved themselves to be remarkably sound, just, and practicable. These principles have proved their roots of fairness and truth in the steady growth of our Nation.

I am informed by constitutional experts that in the 160 years of our existence as a nation, there have been some 3,000 attempts to amend our Constitution. Out of this number, only 21 have proved wise or appealing. When one pauses to consider that 10 of these amendments were the original Bill of Rights which were adopted at the same time as our Constitution itself, there are really only 11 actual amendments which were sound enough to merit favorable consideration and final adoption. Imagine, only 11 changes to our American way of life and its meaning in all of our glorious 160 years of progress and development in which we have arisen from a young, obscure, sprawling country to the greatest Nation on earth today. Incidentally, each of the 11 adopted amendments, in every instance, gave more rights, responsibilities, freedom and power to our people—only 1 of the 11 was later repealed by the people.

Whenever we can amend the Constitution to further democracy and to give a large segment of our country's population broader rights of citizenship, it should be done. For instance, when slavery was abolished, such action strengthened a link in our chain of government. When that segment of our people were given the rights of suffrage irrespective of their race, color, creed, or previous condition of servitude, this, likewise, placed another strong support in our citadel of freedom. When the people were given the right of voting directly for the Members of the Senate, such action brought more securely within the grip of the people, an additional opportunity to govern themselves. When the right of franchise was given to the women of America, that, too, was a step forward in the right direction. The Norris amendment abolishing the lame-duck session of Congress was likewise a healthy contribution. These and other amendments constitute enlargements of the democratic process and with this long history of additional responsibilities being given to the people, I profoundly regret that the majority party has now seen fit to propose this amendment which, in my humble judgment, seeks to impede and curtail the freedom and democratic power of the voter.

Mr. Chairman, we have been in session now for 33 days, and this is the second piece of legislation that has come to our attention; and will you believe it, we have only 2 hours to discuss a constitutional amendment that means so much to the people of this great Nation of ours—2 hours, 1 for the opponents and 1 for the proponents of the measure.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHELF. I am sorry, I cannot yield at the moment. I will later.

It has been argued that the American people must be protected from dictatorship by statute or constitutional fiat. But the simple fact remains that nobody can protect the American people from dictatorship because it is a well-known fact, thank God, that dictators are not bred or conceived in free and open elections such as are held in the United States of America.

Yes; only once in all of this magnificent 160 years of achievement and expansion did Americans see fit to elect any one person President for the third and then the fourth term. And as every grade-school child knows, this would never have been done had our Nation not been tottering on the brink of a horrible and ghastly world conflagration. Yes; for the first time in all of our existence as a nation, Americans realized that continuity of service, experience, and leadership were in demand far over, above, and beyond our normal and natural tendencies to restrict, through the medium of the ballot, a President to two terms.

We cannot change the past, for what is past is prologue. Mr. Chairman, future generations are involved in this great decision which we here today must make. Who are we to say that our posterity yet unborn shall not have the same rights, privileges, and responsibilities such as we ourselves have enjoyed and participated in? If we defeat this proposed amendment today, I will make the prediction that in future ages countless thousands will laud and praise our names. We have a golden opportunity today, not only a rendezvous with destiny, but, what is more, we have a rendezvous with the future, because if by our actions we vote down this unconscionable proposal, we of our time will ring down the curtain with such a spectacular performance that the applause and acclaim therefrom shall resound and echo in the ears of grateful generations yet unborn.

The people, at present, by a mere majority vote, have the opportunity of deciding every 4 years whether they want to terminate the services of the President if he stands for reelection. I do not feel that any further limitation is justified. The American people have done nothing to warrant this restriction upon their democratic process. The fact that they saw fit in their wisdom and judgment to elect Franklin Delano Roosevelt for a third and then a fourth term is no offense.

As I see it, the man selected and the number of times he is elected or reelected comes under the heading of the people's business. That is their business. They will know how many times they want to elect a President or any other man. If they want to elect him once, twice, three times, or four times, that is the present right of the people of the United States.

Let us pray that the time may never again come when the United States may be in the throes of another global war with a dangerous enemy, but should this come to pass, by adopting this amendment—I repeat—we assume to speak for the generations to come. We have no crystal ball to gaze into and we cannot anticipate their dilemma; therefore, we should not attempt to tie their hands and require them in the midst of a titanic struggle to change leadership, be he a Republican or a Democrat, and, therefore, invite defeat and destruction of Christianity, democracy, and decency.

Does Congress propose to set itself up as a guardian or curator of the American people? By this amendment we say quite frankly that the people of this great Nation have not sufficient intelligence or judgment to know their own minds, that they cannot think for themselves, and, as a result, their Representatives in Congress must appoint themselves as the peoples' committee in order to protect the people from themselves. Yes; a committee of the people, by the people, and for the people, with malice toward none but with a straitjacket for all.

Mr. Chairman, if the Congress has nothing more to do at the present time than to attempt such legislation which seeks to detract from the rights and privileges of its citizens, then I say to you, sir, that we had better adjourn and return home.

We know we have a job to do here. Much important legislation is being held up. Let us vote this constitutional amendment down and get on with the people's business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHELF. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman's own State has a limitation of one term for your own Governor; is that correct?

Mr. CHELF. Yes; and I was not alive when that limitation was adopted, I will tell you that. I still believe the people themselves can best judge whether a man should be elected for one or more terms.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BYRNE].

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this proposal today is self-answering. I do not think anyone in the country denies that ordinarily and reasonably no party should elect a President for more than two terms. I think that is fundamental. I think it is axiomatic in a democracy. I believe the reason that this particular proposition has never been enacted or placed in the Constitution is simply because the people did not know how to make an exception to it, which exception they realize is necessary at times. Six years does not answer it, nor does 8 years answer it, because the necessity will arise suddenly, and in these times will arise more suddenly than ever right out of the clear when the absolute necessity and need for a particular man is imminent, evident, and manifest, and when everybody knows that that particular man is the logical man for that particular spot. By the way, we must not overlook the ladies because there is no question at all but what some of these days, although it may be in the distant future, there is going to be an application to this rule to the women of this country. But we cannot find, and I do not believe Solomon could have found, nor do I believe that my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], in spite of his erudition, can find the exception to the rule. Unless we can find an exception to this rule, we make our Constitution so rigid that it is unworkable. If it is unworkable, then it is not in any sense a proper democratic manifesto. That is the answer to this whole problem today, as I reason it out in my own mind. I do believe that this particular proposal is absolutely invalid because for 158 or 160 years the finest minds in our country have been attempting to find a means by which we could place in the Constitution a regulation for two terms and yet have the exception to that regulation.

They never can give us the exception. There is no question about it. When Jefferson, when Washington, when McKinley, when Cleveland, when Grant, when all of the others, including Coolidge, were looking around for a method by which they could jump the barrier and do it logically and successfully, they found it just could not be done. They found it could not be done. Today we cannot find it any more than we could before, and less readily do we find it today because the exception to the rule in Roosevelt has been proven beyond peradventure. In other words, he goes down in the pages of history unquestionably as the one man up to date who was absolutely essential and necessary at the time he was nominated and at the time he was elected. The results prove the case. In other words, it now becomes an axiom that Roosevelt was correctly placed, correctly selected, correctly elected. If you find the exception to the rule I will be happy to go along with the proponents. Otherwise I go along with the opponents.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman, I know, believes in submitting questions of this kind to the people?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Highly so.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the gentleman certainly has no objection to a matter of this kind coming before the people and letting them determine it?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Unless the people at this time can tell me I am wrong. And I am too conceited to believe they can tell me just at the minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BYRNE], has expired.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, it is not to be determined here today that hereafter no President shall serve more than two terms. We are simply giving the people of this country, through the legislatures of the various States, the right to settle that question.

The founding fathers anticipated there might be need, from time to time, to amend the Constitution. They therefore provided a method by which it might be done.

One of the anomalies of human history is that people sacrifice and fight and die for the privilege and right to set up a government to defend themselves against the aggression and oppression of foreign powers and to protect themselves against the fraud and violence of the lawless members of society. Then, having done that, they find it necessary from time to time to protect themselves against encroachments upon their rights and liberties at the hands of their own government.

The framers of our Constitution were speaking and acting for a people who had just fought and won the Revolution to free themselves from the repeated injuries and usurpations inflicted upon them by the King of Great Britain.

The men who wrote the Constitution were familiar with every experiment in government from the dawn of history to their day. They were governmental experts. They thought in terms of government. They themselves had felt the heavy hand of despotism. They resolutely intended to protect the dignity and inviolable personality of man. They set their hands to the task of making workable under government the eternal principles and truths of the Declaration of Independence. And I quote from that immortal document:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed—that when any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it.

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution were proposed to the legislatures of the several States by the First Congress on the 25th of September 1789. They were ratified by a sufficient number of States to make them a part of the Constitution within a little more than 2 years thereafter. These 10 amendments are our Bill of Rights. They cover the citizens all over with the armor of the law.

I favor this proposed amendment. Only by its adoption can the people be assured that we shall never have a dictator in this land. Without such a limit on the number of terms a man may serve in the Presidency, the time may come when a man of vaulting ambition becomes President. Such a man, clothed with the vast powers of the Presidency and backed by a subservient Congress, as Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, could well have in his hands the two mightiest instrumentalities of governmental power, the sword and the purse. He would have the power to put the Nation into a war without Congress having voice in or control over our going to war. The President by vetoing an act passed by Congress can kill such measure unless two-thirds of the House and Senate vote to override his veto. He appoints the members of his Cabinet, all our representatives to foreign countries, and millions of other Federal officials who have control over the business and daily lives of the people. He appoints all Federal law-enforcement officers and all Federal judges. Such a President could well name to the Supreme Court of the United States men of his political faith and economic thinking, and these men in passing upon and interpreting acts of Congress, acts of the legislatures of the States, and in construing the Constitution of our country would have the power to substitute their economic philosophy for the law of the land. They could thus sweep aside and overthrow the safeguards of the Constitution. They could overrule the settled rules of law that have been declared and recognized for a hundred years. Such a court could legislate by judicial decision. It could transform our form of government.

Such disaster cannot hereafter happen if the proposed amendment is adopted. A vast majority of the American people favor this amendment, and rightly so. Under our constitutional form of government, the American people have made the greatest progress, have enjoyed the widest measure of liberty, and have achieved the deepest intellectual and moral and spiritual growth of any people in the history of the world.

Under the proposed amendment, no President will have the power to perpetuate himself in office, to create a dynasty, and to substitute a succession for an assured rotation in the Presidential office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS] has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote "no" on this proposition to deny the people the right to elect whom they please President unless the people specifically vote to deny themselves that right by constitutional limitation. The first three words in the Constitution of the United States are: "We, the people," and the enacting clause is: "We, the people, do ordain and establish this Constitution." As this bill is now written it could be made a part of the Constitution without being specifically voted on by the American people.

There has been a great deal of discussion about the nature of our Government. Of course, it is not a pure democracy. Yes, it is a representative democracy with sovereign power resting in the people. I think our Government is getting more democratic with each passing year. I believe that more and more a greater degree of responsibility is being placed upon the people, exactly where it belongs, because sovereign power resides in the people.

It is true that by our vote here today, if it carries, we are not yet making this proposal a part of the Constitution, as we are merely taking the first step; but it is conceivable that it could be submitted to the States and adopted by the necessary three-quarters of the States and then become a part of the Constitution without being subjected directly to a vote of the people. This is because the members of the State legislatures now in session or in existence were not elected on this specific issue only, they were elected on many other issues. I do not, therefore, take much stock in the argument that we are by our vote today, if this carries, merely submitting it to the vote of the people.

I believe the question of whether a man is to be elected to the Presidency for more than two terms should be left to the American people at those future times, and that we should not try to determine that question today for them or this year, or at any time without their instruction. Whether any President should or should not be elected for a third term should be decided by the people themselves when the necessity arises. I myself do not favor a third term in normal times and under normal conditions, but as the gentleman from Massachusetts, the whip on our side of the House, pointed out, some time in the future the country may be faced with an emergency. We cannot forecast these emergencies. We must not tie the hands of our people thus without their specific vote to do so. This proposed constitutional amendment should not be adopted except by affirmative action by conventions chosen for the purpose in three-fourths of the States. I know there are certain republics in the Western Hemisphere who practice rotation in office, who are apparently afraid of the man on horseback, and so place limits; but I do not believe that the American people need have any such fears nor need to place any such limits to guarantee that the man on horseback shall not appear and make himself supreme.

Each passing decade we have given more power to the people by taking away from the State legislatures the power to elect members of the other body and subjecting Senators to popular election. We have given the ballot to women. I cite these only as illustrations of extending the people's power.

I come from a far-western State that prides itself on extending the principles of democracy to a greater and greater degree. To adopt this measure into the Constitution would reverse the modern trend. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that if we should adopt this amendment providing that no man shall have more than two terms of office as President that we will be denying the people of the future the fundamental right American people have always had to select the man whom they pleased even though he has already served two terms. Let our people decide at that time what is their sovereign will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the Presidential tenure of office is not a political question. It is a constitutional question of the highest order. In one form or another it occupied the attention of the Constitutional Convention from the introduction of Mr. Randolph's resolutions on May 29, 1787, until the adoption of the report of the Committee on Style submitted on September 12, 5 days before final adjournment.

In one form or another it has been before the people or the Congress, or both, ever since 1803—more than 140 years—when resolutions introduced after the election of 1800 came before the House of Representatives. Indeed, it has been calculated that between that date and 1889 more than 125 amendments were proposed to change the term of office of the President or to fix the period of eligibility; and it is estimated that almost as many have been introduced since.

It is hardly necessary to remind Members of Congress that when the matter of the Presidency was considered in the Convention the members of that body repeatedly expressed the importance of placing some limitation upon the tenure of the office. That was particularly so when it was contemplated that the Chief Executive was to be chosen by Congress and that long continuance in office would lead to autocracy, intrigue, or cabal. For a long time the sentiment prevailed that the President should be limited to a single term of 7 years. When it became apparent that choice by the legislature would not be adopted, the plan of the electoral college with a provision for a fixed term of 4 years was substituted.

Members of the Constitutional Convention feared autocracy. They feared perpetuation in the Executive Office. They had but emerged from war against a king with unlimited tenure of office. They had seen their State legislatures dissolved by royal governors appointed by a king. And they proposed that there should be no such usurpation of power in the Chief Executive they were about to create. And while they did not expressly prohibit reeligibility, they were not without the belief that the electoral college, as they contemplated its operation, would provide an adequate check against perpetuation in office.

Regardless of the inadequacies of the electoral college, however, the principle of a limitation upon the Presidential tenure came to develop by tradition. Even though it be contended that Mr. Washington's refusal to accept a third term was based upon circumstances other than those intended to establish a precedent, the fact remains that his action was regarded as a precedent by his immediate successors, and the tradition of only two terms of 4 years each became attached to the Presidential office.

Jefferson expressed this sentiment in a letter dated January 1805, in which he wrote:

> My opinion originally was that the President of the United States should have been elected for 7 years, and forever ineligible afterward. I have since become sensible that 7 years is too long to be irremovable, and that there should be a peaceable way of withdrawing a man in midway who is doing wrong. The service for 8 years, with a power to remove at the end of the first four, comes nearly to my principle as corrected by experience; and it is in adherence to that that I determine to withdraw at the end of my second term. The danger is that the indulgence and attachments of the people will keep a man in the chair after he becomes a dotard, that reelection through life shall become habitual, and election for life follow that. General Washington set the example of voluntary retirement after 8 years. I shall follow it. And a few more precedents will oppose the obstacle of habit to anyone after a while who shall endeavor to extend his term. Perhaps it may beget a disposition to establish it by an amendment of the Constitution.

In his first annual message, December 1829, President Jackson said:

> I would therefore recommend such an amendment of the Constitution as may remove all intermediate agency in the election of the President and Vice President. * * * In connection with such an amendment it would seem advisable to limit the service of the Chief Magistrate to a single term of either 4 or 6 years.

And he repeated that recommendation in several succeeding messages.

In his letter of August 18, 1884, accepting the nomination for the Presidency, President Cleveland wrote:

> When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptations to retain public place once gained, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent whom a horde of officeholders, with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for reelection a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent political action which must characterize a government by the people.

And I would recall to my friends on the other side of the aisle that the Democratic National Convention, held in Baltimore, Md., in 1912, adopted the following resolution:

We favor a single Presidential term and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

This historical feeling and tradition against unlimited tenure in the Presidential office, Mr. Chairman, is not based upon idle fear. The power and prestige of the President of the United States has grown constantly and increasingly since the first inauguration of Mr. Washington. Today, the President of the United States is perhaps the most powerful individual in the world. It is within the spirit of democracy that proper constitutional restraints be placed upon his tenure of office.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE].

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, it is a paradox that we, who generally speak so glibly of the supremacy of the people and government by the people, would, through this proposal now under consideration, limit that supremacy and power.

The statements of many of our leaders of the past have been quoted today supporting arguments both for and against this resolution. President Wilson, as suggested in last night's Washington Star, more nearly summed up arguments on this matter when he said that the President's fighting power in behalf of the people would be immensely weakened by an anti-third term amendment to the Constitution. Further quoting President Wilson, he said:

We would singularly belie our own principles by seeking to determine by fixed constitutional provision what the people should determine for themselves.

We should not discuss at this time the issue of the number of terms the President of the United States might be privileged to serve, for the question, the unfortunate question, is that of limiting the power of the people in this regard. It perhaps would be in better taste for this body to consider this resolution had the question not been previously presented to the people.

In 1940 the sovereign voters of the United States, many millions strong, expressed themselves upon this issue. Actually, it seemed to be the only issue in the campaign, for as I checked the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD covering 1 week immediately preceding the 1940 election last night I found that more than 40 Members of the House made speeches similar, yes, almost identical, to the speeches made today predicting disaster to representative government and to this great country of ours if a President should be elected to serve more than two terms. Those predictions were made again in 1944. Both times the people of the United States repudiated the doctrine of this resolution and repudiated it overwhelmingly.

A majority in 38 States in 1940 and a majority of some 36 States in 1944 voted that a man might serve more than two terms as President of the United States.

As a matter of interest, Mr. Chairman, the very county in which the splendid Speaker of this House lives, and then lived, repudiated the theory that a President should serve no more than two terms and voted overwhelmingly for Mr. Roosevelt, as in 1944, did the people of the State of Michigan, home of the able chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Normally, I would prefer for a new man to be President of the United States after two terms but I have a great deal more confidence and more faith in the fundamental principles of this Government—that the judgment of the people should be supreme—than the judgment of this legislative body or that of any State in this Union. Actually, I think that you have, too.

It must seem strange to the people of this country that the Republican Party is so violent at this time against a third term for the President and in the same breath are asking for a third try to impose a restriction upon the sovereignty of the people. Could it be, perhaps, that they did not like the judgment of the sovereign voters in 1940 and 1944, and have more confidence in the ability of the legislatures?

Most assuredly it is not sound at this time for any man on this floor to say that we are going to give the people an opportunity to pass on this resolution, for by the express terms of the resolution, it shall be submitted to the various legislatures. The Republican majority could have, had it desired, writtten the resolution and presented it for discussion, with the provision that it would be submitted to constitutional conventions in each State. I am not sure why they did not do this. Perhaps it was the memory of the people voting in 1940 and 1944.

I cannot vote for this resolution unless it provides for submission to the people; for I cannot say to them, as you will do if you pass this resolution, "We did not like your judgment in 1940 and 1944, so we are going to sidestep you and submit the question to the legislatures of the various States with the hope that they will have better judgment than you have." And they might add, and perhaps have in their counsels, "It will be relatively easier to put this through in the Republican-dominated legislatures of the several States."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FELLOWS].

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, I shall heed the injunction of our former Speaker when he used the words "just a minute," to the extent that I shall speak for just a very short time.

We must not overlook the wisdom of our forefathers, nor should we forget the accumulated experiences during the historic years. Experience is a wonderful teacher. I had this forcibly impressed upon me once. I sat in an old school house in a small town in the State of Maine, and I looked into the sweet face of an old lady with gray hair, and she said this: "Sometimes I think that the school of experience is the only one in which fools can learn anything," and she looked at me when she said it.

I have listened with great interest to the arguments that have been made against this proposed amendment. We have heard our beloved former leader of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts, whom everybody respects, speak to this subject. The burden of Mr. MCCORMACK's argument is this: That we may find ourselves with our backs to the wall, a President serving a second term, and that we, being in a crisis, could not find the man who could meet the situation and carry us through safely.

I think I have an answer to that, and I do not think there is any answer to my answer. I think the best answer to that is to point to the living presence of such men as the gentleman himself, who, possessors of such distinguished and preeminent ability in a country of 140,000,000 people, could and would lead us safely through any crisis. What can their reply be to that?

It has been suggested that this proposal is anti-Roosevelt. That is not true. It is not true in any sense of the word. It certainly is not retroactive legislation.

There have been some excellent statements made here but there is no better one to be found than that which appears as the minority views of two distinguished gentlemen, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT]. I am going to read one paragraph:

Of course, other crises may arise in the course of our history wherein we may long to retain the experienced and able guiding hand that may then be steering the ship of state, beyond the limit of tenure fixed, and regret that we surrendered our ancient heritage of such perfect freedom. But in the exercise of our best, studied judgment we certify our conviction that the advantages of limited tenure far outweigh the disadvantages urged against it, and have confidence that, the certitude of law having removed all question of repudiation, we may count with the utmost assurance upon the patriotic service as lieutenant of every captain who steps down from the bridge.

They, I believe, are in favor of the 6-year term.

I shall vote for this proposal; first, because I believe it should be accepted by the States; and second, we are simply voting to submit this question—permitting the people, through their elected representatives in their States, to vote upon it. And let me say, when the words that inaugurate our great document are referred to, "We the people," that we the people established this system which provides that it shall go to the legislatures.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

WE MUST NOT SHACKLE THE FUTURE—OPPOSED TO PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—LEAVE FUTURE CITIZENS FREE TO MAKE THEIR OWN DECISIONS

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, what the President's term of office should be has been a much debated question throughout our history as a nation. Even in the Constitutional Convention it was one of the principal controversies. Many different proposals were then advanced, ranging from a single term with ineligibility for reelection to tenure during good behavior or for life.

After much deliberation the constitutional framers wisely fixed the term at 4 years, but refused, by repeated votes, to limit the number of terms to which the people might elect a President.

But there was not then, nor has there ever been, complete satisfaction with this constitutional provision. In fact, a resolution to change it was introduced in the very first Congress, and over the years since, there have been more than 150 proposals to amend the Constitution so as to change the President's tenure of office.

The people have not seen fit to change it. Nevertheless, after all these years of sound democratic government, we are again debating the question today. After all these prideful years of free government and progressive extension of the right of franchise, is it now necessary or expedient to say that the people shall not be trusted to exercise their judgment in electing the man they desire as President at a particular time or any particular emergency?

This proposed amendment would be an impairment of the citizenship of the future, a limited impairment, to be sure, but a definite restriction on the freedom of choice of our children and our children's children. We must not shackle the future.

Let us suppose that in the future some crisis—a crisis even more critical than we have yet experienced—should come to hand, and that the people should consider absolutely necessary the continued service as President of a particular man who had gained their confidence through a demonstration of able patriotic leadership.

Could this question not then safely be submitted to the people, or shall we place a restriction on them because we think, perchance, they may be unable to distinguish between a patriot and a tyrant.

Under certain circumstances the people might think, and rightly so, that there was less danger to their freedom in a third term for one man than in a first term for another who did not seem to them equal to the job of running a nation.

We cannot foresee now what the election issues will be, let us say, in 1980 or whether the President will be a Republican or a Democrat. Why should we prejudge? I want to defend the rights of the American people of 1980 to judge for themselves.

To say that we must now put this restriction upon the right of the people to a free choice is to cast doubt upon the whole theory of popular government. I am one who believes that the perpetuity of government by the people depends, not upon restrictions on the people, but rather in maintaining free and frequent choice and decision by the people. The fewer restrictions on the people we place in the Constitution, the better off we will be in the long run.

We, in America, have a deep-dyed habit of citing the statements and examples of our founding fathers as evidence of the rightness of our course, even though times and circumstances may be materially different. Even so, I want to cite an example and a statement from the Father of Our Nation.

The origin of the two-term tradition is generally ascribed to President George Washington because he declined to be considered as a candidate for a third term. History, however, is abundantly clear that he did so from the standpoint of his own personal choice and not upon political precedent. Washington not only voted against limiting the terms of a president in the Constitutional Convention, but in repeated writings he branded such limitation as both unwise and unnecessary.

For instance, in a letter to General Lafayette, President Washington wrote:

> I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the service of any man who in some great emergency shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public.

This is not a question, though, which should be decided solely upon the beliefs and examples of former statesmen, nor do I believe it is a political weapon, which we can wisely use for temporary political expediency. It is rather a principle which goes to the very heart of democracy—of government by the people, of the people, and for the people.

If I distrusted the free and deliberate judgment of the American people, then no matter who might be President or how short we might limit his term, I would have little faith that a system of self government by freemen could long endure in this or in any other country.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I am frightened. I feel bad, not physically but mentally and spiritually, because this question has been brought up at this time. I do not charge that there is partisanship in the consideration of this resolution; I do not think there is. I do not even charge that there is evident partisanship in the fact that this resolution originated so quickly after the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt. But, Mr. Chairman, to my mind this is perhaps the most serious subject we will be called upon to give consideration to while we are in this Congress. It is something that is contrary to all which has obtained for 160 years. In all that time just one man, just one, was elected to a third term as President of the United States.

The election of that man was not partisan in its character, essentially. It happened that he was nominated by the Democratic Convention which met in Chicago in July of 1940. It is a fact there were some then in that convention who thought that it would not be justified in us to nominate a man for a third term, but those were in such minority that out of about a thousand convention votes the man who was in office at that time and who was nominated for a third term received over 900 votes, in the Democratic Convention, which, as far as this action was concerned, was nonpartisan. There could not be any question as between them, whether they were Republican or Democrat. The only reason that man was chosen, who happened not to be Theodore Roosevelt, but Franklin D. Roosevelt, was because it was felt by a great majority of the people of this country that it would be in the best interests of the country and in the interest of the security of the United States of America and all its people in that hour of imminent danger. The man who had been at the helm in the several years prior thereto was not perhaps best qualified inherently but was possessed of the greatest amount of information of any other man in the United States, and while he was not an indispensable man it was the best opportunity we had to fortify ourselves against the approaching war which eventually did come and which shook the foundations of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with the proposition that we are withholding from the people of the United States the opportunity or privilege of speaking upon this matter. But it is natural to assume that the representatives in the State legislatures may conclude that we are in favor of it. It is yet to be accepted that Congress influences some. We set in motion a dangerous proposal. In the language of the distinguished former Speaker of this House, I would beg you to wait—wait a minute and let us consider this matter further and more seriously. Franklin Roosevelt did not personally desire a third term. The people required it in what they believed was to save our country. I beg you to vote down this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill is not of the greatest importance to the American people. In a democracy we have the right to change our laws to fit the exigencies of the moment. As conditions arise we meet them. Ours is a fluid type of Government, and I am certain at this time the necessity for limiting the tenure of office of the President is not one of great concern to the people.

My opposition to the measure is based on the recent experiences that we have had with this sort of thing. In time of emergency the American people may want to continue their Chief Executive beyond the two terms as set forth in this bill, as they did at the last general election and at the general election preceding that.

Emergencies were on us, one domestic and the other international. The American people in their wisdom saw fit to reelect Franklin Delano Roosevelt for a third and a fourth term as President. His dynamic type of leadership appealed to them and they demanded his retention in office.

Being human it is understandable that those who violently opposed Mr. Roosevelt are taking this opportunity to vent their spleen.

The American people should be left free to exercise the discretionary powers granted them in this democracy.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, while I am personally opposed in principle to a third or fourth term for the Presidency of the United States, I am nevertheless opposed to this resolution because it proposes the shackling of ourselves and future generations in the exercise of free will. It restricts the right of franchise guaranteed under the Constitution and makes slaves of free men.

What the proponents ask for is the imposition of a limitation of unrestricted choice, the abolishment of a sacred right which can be and has always heretofore been exercised by the free people of these United States.

There is no such creature as the indispensable man. I have always said that there are more capable and better men who have never held office than there are in office today, or who ever held office for that matter, and it is conceded that in the past intellectually great and saintly men have rendered priceless service to the country and to the people.

Mr. Chairman, the question of limiting tenure of the President of the United States by constitutional amendment has actually been put to the test on two separate occasions—in the campaigns of 1940 and 1944. The sovereign people spoke unmistakably on the subject. As a free people, they could have voted for the opponent of the aspirant for a third term, and again on another occasion the people could have rebuked Mr. Roosevelt when he sought a fourth term, but they did not do so. They established another far-reaching fourth-term precedent. Can anyone fail to understand the temper of the people on that question? Would anybody charge the people with lack of understanding of their prerogative, or worse still, with making an error in judgment? The people, so I hold, right or wrong, are always right. They can elect a man for a third or a fourth term, or they can turn a President out at the end of his first term as was done with Herbert Hoover.

It is the inherent right of a free-born American citizen to vote for whomsoever he chooses and as often as a candidate presents his name, once or 10 times. This right must not be abridged now or in the future. The citizen can limit Presidential tenure; he is the sovereign. He exercises this right freely and wilfully. He need not be shielded by a constitutional amendment. It should be and it is a matter of conscience. No restrictions or impediments should be placed in the path of the American voter. It works well for both the Democrats and the Republicans.

The people may some day desire to elect a Republican President, may reelect, and may in some emergency choose to give him a fourth term if they want to do so. They shall have that right insofar as I am concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I fear that this is a belated and a misguided attempt to head off a third term for the late and beloved Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has gone to his reward, or, reduced to its lowest common denominator, it may be an attempt to besmirch his good name.

In concluding, I ask, Why should we abridge an inherent right of the people by a fixed and irrevocable rule when the individual citizen can exercise that right freely at any time he chooses? I trust the resolution is defeated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCOWEN].

Mr. McCOWEN. Mr. Chairman, in regard to House Joint Resolution 27, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the terms of office of the President, I am fully in accord with the idea to limit the terms to two terms of 4 years each.

Eight years is long enough for a good President and 4 years is too long for a bad one.

Much has already been said on the floor today on this subject. The arguments pro and con have been pretty well covered. Of course, the passage of the joint resolution will do nothing more than give the people a chance to settle the question as to whether they desire such limitation.

It is a well-known fact that the tenure of the office of President was one of the most difficult and perplexing problems before the Constitutional Convention 160 years ago. The question was not settled until the closing days of the Convention.

In the light of the breaking of the custom of 160 years to elect a President to only two terms by the four-times elected President in very recent times, it seems quite appropriate to submit the question to the people so they may have a chance to pass on the question after such experience. If this amendment should eventually become a part of the Constitution, it would be a great step toward preventing a dictatorship or some totalitarian form of government from arising in the United States.

I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, the proposed twenty-second amendment to the Constitution presents one of the fundamental issues left unsettled by the founders of the Republic and demands the most careful consideration. The issue, moreover, is one which goes to the very heart of political theory, for the question is whether or not the "indispensable man" theory is compatible with the republican form of government.

When I speak of the "indispensable man" I am not speaking necessarily of the recent Roosevelt era, although I do think that those of us who have lived during the period when Franklin Delano Roosevelt was President recognized the dangers of continuing one man in the office of presidency for more than two terms. In lieu of the divine right of kings and the prerogatives of a dictator, we find the problems and emergencies of this or that crisis as a reason or reasons given for the continuation of one man in office.

Almost without exception we have had appointive offices filled by people of the same political philosophy as the late President Roosevelt's. This is not such a problem administratively, but the effect is tremendous so far as the judiciary branch of our Government is concerned. I have heard my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle complain that the test for filling judicial appointments was not whether the individual was a Democrat, but whether he was a particular brand of New Dealer.

There is nothing said or intended by these remarks as derogatory to the late President Roosevelt. The same dangers would exist had President Roosevelt been a Republican instead of a Democrat and I would have felt perhaps even more out-spokenly critical of the violation of the precedent of two terms for the Presidency. As a matter of fact, it was Thomas Jefferson himself who insisted that voluntary retirement was a matter of firm principle, and stated:

> If the principle of rotation be a sound one, as I conscientiously believe it to be with respect to this office, no pretext should ever be permitted to dispense with it, because there never will be a time when real difficulties will not exist, and furnish a plausible pretext for dispensation.

It is my conviction that we should limit the Presidency to two terms. If, in a country of 140,000,000 people there arises occasions where one man, and one man only, is capable of filling the position of the Presidency of the United States, then I say to the advocates of that theory that both democracy and a republican form of government are a failure. However, as we stand here today, I feel that our form of government has been a bulwark against every form of attack because it is a republican form of government and it is our responsibility and our duty to safeguard it. With dictatorships and monarchies crumbling, the people of the world as well as the spirit of our forefathers look to us to preserve our form of government. The proposed constitutional amendment helps to do so, in my opinion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this resolution, and I turn to my files of the Seventy-ninth Congress for some interesting supporting data. On June 4, 1945, I mailed to each Member of the House a questionnaire on this subject of the limitation of the term of the President of the United States. I asked only three questions—whether the Member favored a 6-year limitation; or if he favored a limitation of two terms of 4 years each, and whether the Member thought it was then an opportune time to bring up the question on the floor.

I said I would not quote any Member without his or her permission, with the result that interesting comments were received. I said the Member could sign the reply or send it back unsigned. I did not "key" the questionnaires, except on one point; I could tell which came back from Republicans, and which from Democrats, but not the individual Members. Even that was unnecessary, as a large majority signed.

Ninety-one signed replies were received from Republicans and 27 unsigned replies. Fifty-one signed replies were received from Democrats, and 17 unsigned. That made a total of 186 replies, or 43 percent of the membership of the House. You could ask, Mr. Chairman, why I never reported the results to this floor. During the tabulation, I discovered that a well-known magazine writer was engaged at that moment in preparing a magazine article on this subject. She asked me to withhold my report to you, until her article was ready. Unfortunately, the magazine, after accepting it, did not use it, presumably pressed for space, and it was then too late for me. I now take out the figures and review them in the light of today's vote.

Sixty-five signed Republicans and 19 unsigned, together with 16 signed Democrats and 3 unsigned, a total of 103, favored a limitation of two terms of 4 years. Only 21 signed Republicans and 6 unsigned, with 4 signed Democrats and 3 unsigned, a total of 34, wanted a limitation of 6 years. Only 4 Republicans disapproved the idea of some limitation. Of these, 1 was considered by his constituents to have voted too closely to New Deal principles and was not returned last November, 1 expressed the somewhat pessimistic thought that such a resolution would somehow benefit the New Deal, 1 recommended care in amending the Constitution on any subject, and 1 gave no reason.

However, 29 signed Democrats and 11 unsigned were opposed to any limitation any time, although I noted this afternoon that 1 distinguished Member of the present minority, who wrote "Never" in a firm hand last June, today voted equally firmly in favor of 2 terms of 4 years each, which indicates that time—and possibly an election—changes all things.

There were 14 Republicans who would have preferred a 6-year limitation, but with apparent resignation accepted the likelihood of two 4-year terms, hoping for any limitation as the primary objective. I included them in the 4-year count. One Republican preferred unwritten to the written law, which causes me to suggest that the position may be academically excellent, but, to quote the first sentence of the unpublished magazine article, already referred to:

When an unwritten law is once broken, should it be replaced by a written law?

Two Republicans were thoughtful enough to raise the question of the partial term. We decided that this afternoon in favor of limitation. If a Vice President serves part of a term, due to the death or removal of a President, he may, under House Joint Resolution 27, be elected only once in his own right. It would affect the present occupant of the White House, were he to run in 1948, and to be elected, and it would have affected Theodore Roosevelt who had finished the term to which McKinley was elected, and who had been elected once in his own right. It could affect a President who had risen from the Vice Presidency only a few months before the end of his President's term, but so far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, if we are to set a limitation, I prefer to go in that direction, rather than the other. I favor House Joint Resolution 27.

One Republican reply brought up the question of longer terms for Representatives, tying it to the limitation on the Presidential term. Of the total replies, 78 signed Republicans and 22 unsigned, together with 13 signed and 5 unsigned Democrats, a total of 118, evidently thought if an idea were good, the sooner we made it a law the better it would be for the country. They were in favor of bringing up the resolution 18 months ago. Eleven Republicans and three Democrats felt that the Congress should wait until the war was over, or until the men had returned from the services. That thought, even if it were the minority opinion at that time, prevailed and it was not until today that the necessary resolution passed the House. The vote has been 285 ayes and 121 noes, which shows a fairly good comparison with the replies to my questionnaires of June 1945.

In the history of the Congress, 160 bills have been introduced to limit the Presidential term; it took the present one, House Joint Resolution 27, to get started on its way to the States, for their approval.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH].

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I favor the passage of House Joint Resolution 27 providing for a constitutional amendment limiting the term of President to two 4-year terms.

The action we are taking here today is not final or conclusive. We are submitting to the several States an opportunity to determine for themselves whether they want this proposed amendment to become a permanent part of the Constitution.

Should we deny the States this privilege? Should we refuse the people of the Nation an opportunity to express themselves on this vital and important issue? I say, "No." To deny the people this right would be undemocratic and would be unfair.

If the custom and historic practice of limiting the term of President to two terms had not been broken in 1944, this amendment would not be before us today. Because it was broken and because we found ourselves under the domination of one political party and one man as President for four terms, which terminated only by death, we have this resolution before us today.

What happened under this unprecedented administration under one man is well known. Almost unlimited power grew up in the office of President. This must not happen again and the only practical and logical way to prevent it is to adopt House Joint Resolution 27 and give the people an opportunity to say definitely and finally what they want. If they do not want a limited term for President they will say so. If we do not pass this resolution they will not have the opportunity to say whether they want a limited term or not. I urge the adoption and passage of House Joint Resolution 27.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the reason I am against this resolution can be expressed in one sentence: I am against placing in the Constitution a limitation against the people. This never has been done, and I am in hopes never will be done.

All power originally resided in the people, and they still possess all power not specifically granted under the Constitution. And in granting power under the Constitution they only granted those powers that they could not, in the functioning of Government, exercise individually. And in granting powers to others, in order to protect their own rights, the people have ever been careful to place certain prohibitions. Congress, for instance, is prohibited from passing expost facto laws, or laws that would impair the obligation of contract, or laws interfering with freedom of speech, freedom of the press, or religious freedom, and so forth. But, my colleagues, read the Constitution from beginning to end and you will not find a single prohibition against the exercise by the sovereign people of the powers not granted.

One of the powers not granted by the people in the Constitution was the power to change their chosen representatives whenever in their judgment they saw fit. In order for the Government to orderly function, there was no need to grant or restrict, in any way, this power, because in the exercise of the ballot the people can not only limit the terms of the President, but limit the terms of their representatives in the Senate and House as well. And this is as it should be. Certainly the people should not be restricted, in any way, in turning out of office or keeping in office, the representatives they desire.

Amend the resolution by limiting the terms of Senators and Representatives and the resolution would receive but few, if any, favorable votes. The people should enjoy the same freedom in keeping in or turning out of office their President that they enjoy in keeping in or turning out of office their Senators and Representatives.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, as one of the authors of the legislative proposals introduced in this Congress to limit the successive terms which a President of the United States can serve, it goes without saying that I favor the proposed legislation. It was my pleasure to make a statement to the subcommittee which, under the able direction of Congressman SPRINGER, did such expeditious and efficient service in bringing this legislation to the floor of the House. I shall consequently not detain you long today in the further amplification of my views.

As has been said here this afternoon many times, this is important and significant legislation. It grows directly out of the unfortunate experience we had in this country in 1940 and again in 1944 when a President who had entrenched himself in power by use of patronage and the public purse refused to vacate the office at the conclusion of two terms, but used the great powers of the Presidency to perpetuate himself in office.

By the hard lessons of experience, this republic has thus learned how easy it is for a man with a yen for power to use the vast authority of the White House to whiplash convention delegates into abject submission and to mobilize the forces of propaganda to his support. In the Democratic Convention of 1940, when, after creating a long series of emergencies, the then President devoted his best energies to securing the nomination for a third term the newspaper accounts revealed that well over half of the delegates to the Democratic Convention were on the pay roll of the Federal Government as political appointees or they were the relatives thereof. That made the synthetic draft of 1940 an easy matter. Confronted by comparative weak and ineffectual Republican opposition in November, the nomination became almost tantamount to the election.

In 1944 it happened "again and again and again and yet once again." This time, with the war clouds upon us and the President's pious pledge that he would not let this country become embroiled in war ringing in the voters' ears as he dramatized that promise in his Boston speech, the fourth term was almost as easy to win as the third, although the caliber and the character of the Republican opposition had been improved.

While the President found it a bit more difficult to dominate the convention of his own party in the fourth-term ratification meeting—it could scarcely be called a convention—the well-recognized axiom that the fellow in the executive office who controls all the appointments can also control the delegates to the political convention operated with its unerring regularity. So we had a fourth term started. Death ended that term in its infancy and under a new President America now faces the decision as whether its experience in departing from our hallowed no-third-term tradition was successful enough so that it should be repeated or so disastrous that a constitutional barrier should be erected against it. Today this House will express its verdict on that question. If we act favorably and the Senate supports our action, the question will be decided by the various States in time-honored American manner.

Mr. Chairman, the most desperate problems this world faces today have resulted primarily from the fact that too few men have held too much power for too long a time in too many countries. Let us do what we can here today to safeguard America against this disastrous tendency.

By acting affirmatively on this resolution in our votes today we can lift up a great word of encouragement to freedom-loving people everywhere that here in this Republic our people are determined to retain the powers of government in their own hands and to prevent politicians of any stamp or kind from attempting to make the Presidency a personal possession and a position of perpetual privilege.

Only in the United States, today, is legislative government—government by the people—on the upgrade. Only in this Republic do we find the tendency away from government by the executive and toward government by those in the grass roots. Almost all of the rest of the world has slipped away from the foundations of freedom and skidded dangerously close to the shoals of executive domination, one-man rule, dictatorship, and ruthless tyranny. Let us consolidate our gains in self-government by passing this resolution to prevent any President hereafter—Republican or Democratic—from perpetuating himself in office.

In 1945, it was my privilege to visit the battlefields of France and to spend some 6 weeks in France and Great Britain shortly after D-day. One of my vivid memories is of an afternoon, near Cherbourg, France, when I was permitted to enter a prison cage in which Nazi war prisoners were kept and to converse with the prisoners through an Army interpreter. On this occasion I spent some time talking with a prisoner who used to be a city official in Berlin.

This prisoner of war denied he was ever a Nazi and condemned the Nazi ideologies vigorously. When I asked him if many others in Berlin had the same idea, he responded in the affirmative. I then inquired why it was if so many did not like the Nazi creed and had no love for Hitler that Hitler was permitted to rule the country so completely. I shall never forget the true significance of his reply although the young prisoner probably did not recognize it himself. He said, "You see, sir, the people of Germany voted Hitler into power. Then they voted again and increased his majority and added to his power. Each time he got more votes and pretty soon we found that while we had voted Hitler into power we could not vote him out again."

That, my colleagues, is the meat in the coconut. Freedom is present only when citizens can vote out of office those whom they have voted in. Mere ability to elect an official is not freedom in its essence if those who vote do not have the power and the practical, workable, effective means of voting these same officials out again. It was that the Germans lost under Hitler. It is that power which we Americans must ever keep. And by limiting by constitutional amendment the terms of any President to two, we shall have taken a big step to retain forever that precious power and that important authority for the free men and women of America.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, in any consideration of the limitation of Presidential tenure, there is a contemporary situation in military invention that must be taken into fundamental account. This fact is almost self-evident to anyone who appreciates the significance of human history and man's time-binding characteristics.

For over 1,000 years during the Dark and Middle Ages, the ordinary people were held in virtual bondage. The feudal lords and leaders with relatively small numbers of soldiers, through the means of military implements and inventions as then developed, from their castles and moats, could defend themselves and rule the people with an imperious hand. There was small chance of throwing off any tyranny.

Then came the development of gunpowder in the fourteenth century, a very simple product to make, and the development of small firearms and smooth-bore cannon that were of easy manufacture. The feudal lords and leaders gradually became more or less helpless. Their castles and moats were of no avail. The stronger and wealthier rulers survived, and national states began to grow up in self-preservation.

Freedom appeared on the horizon and began to grow in England particularly, and over the centuries flowered in the American and French Revolutions. The period culminated in the so-called victorian era which 100 years will be highlighted in man's history, despite its defects and shortcomings, as one of the golden periods up to that time. Freedom grew to maturity over much of the Western World.

Since World War I, military invention, forgetting for the moment the imminence of atomic energy—we can never forget it—has proceeded to such a point in its development that the ordinary people in this relationship are again in the position they were in the ages of the feudal lords.

Once a dictatorship develops in a country today, there is small chance for the ordinary people to throw off the tyranny. Rescue can come only from the outside. Who would rescue America from such tyranny? A turn-over could come only within the dictatorship. This would only result in the same old thing with new faces in control.

The limitation of Presidential tenure is too serious a matter to be toyed or trifled with politically. It transcends all this. It is conceivable that chaotic and confused conditions could arise in this country where the voice of the people might not be sound.

Our democratic way of life in a republican form of government thrives under a reign of law and an ordered life that can be changed through modification of or even repeal of laws. If we should lose our freedom today, it is gone; it is irretrievable. The Nazis understood this when they said the Third Reich could rule for 1,000 years. Washington and Jefferson foresaw this 100 years in advance of their time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I favor a limited tenure for the President of the United States. My preference, however, is not for the pending resolution, but for a single 6-year term. If that matter is proposed in Committee of the Whole I shall support it. If it fails I shall support the pending resolution.

There may be an element of political frustration in what we do today, but I predicate my own conviction upon reality. What we are attempting to do today is to repair a shattered political tradition—a tradition that started in 1787 and endured until 1940. It shows how wide Jefferson finally was of the mark, because he said the force of custom and usage after four Presidents had served two terms and no more would make that a rather sacrosanct tradition in American life. But you and I have lived to see it shattered in 1940.

I do not emotionalize over this subject. I start with this premise: The municipal corporation known as the Government of the United States is the biggest business in any time or generation that has existed on the face of the earth. If it is admittedly the biggest business that has ever existed, the man who serves as the Chief Magistrate and pilot of that business has no business to deviate from his responsibility to the people and the Nation for any purpose, political or otherwise. The fact of the matter is, and everybody knows, that when a President has been elected for one term he must, among other things, go about the business of being reelected to another. To that end he uses the Federal pay roll and the appointing power. I think the surveys are conclusive on that point, that it was the Federal pay roll and the possibility of having each one count for four votes that finally made these enormous majorities possible. So, there is in the hands of the Chief Magistrate a tremendous weapon that was unknown in the days of Jefferson and Hamilton and all the rest of the founding fathers. But Andy Jackson knew it and Harrison knew it and Rutherford Hayes knew it and William Howard Taft knew it, because all of them, having had experience in the White House, are on record today in favor of a single 6-year term.

As a matter of fact, a 4-year term is no 4-year term. From 1944 until convention time in June of 1948 is 3½ years. Everybody knows that the occupant of the White House is going to be busy, if he becomes a candidate for reelection, in order to trim his political fences, and will devote some time to politics instead of to statesmanship.

If we had one of our own in the White House the answer would be exactly the same. But when you have 141,000,000 people who are engaged in a business that calls for $37,500,000,000 expenditure in a 365-day period, that man has no business trifling with the destiny and welfare of the people. He should give his time to the business of the people and then step down and out.

That is the crux of the proposal for a single term of 6 years.

Another thing within the compass of time: In one of the recent elections we have noted the intervention of foreign influence. It had been said that Churchill was wondering what he could do in order to influence the political results in the United States. The powers that be, overseas, who are the recipients and the beneficiaries of the largesse of this country through UNRRA, through relief, through lend-lease, not by the millions or hundreds of millions but by the billions of dollars, have suddenly developed a vested interested in what happens politically in the United States of America. It would be far better to have one man, fresh and uncommitted, come into the White House and give entirely of his time to the people and then foreclose any opportunity of a foreign government on the basis of disposition and background and weaknesses and predilections to say, "This is our man and we want him reelected because we are confident that out of the fullness of a sympathetic heart, the dollars and largesse will continue to flow into all corners of the earth." There is only one way to meet it, there is only one way to get rid of it and that, of course, is to make a fresh start every 6 years. Then you get rid of the influence of a tremendous pay roll which at this moment numbers 2,300,000 civilians; you get rid of this foreign influence. There is behind the proposal for a single term of 6 years those who have had the benefit of experience. Twice Andrew Jackson stood before this Congress and in his annual messages gave it as his opinion that the Presidency ought to be a single term of 6 years. William Howard Taft has said exactly the same thing except perhaps not so emphatically. Other Presidents behind whom there is that wealth of experience in the White House have said it is their opinion based upon their experience that a single term of 6 years would be best for the country.

So expressing my own preference I shall offer a substitute, and if that does not prevail I certainly will go along with the committee resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DEVITT].

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Chairman, it seems a shame to me as a new Member of the Congress of the United States that such an important constitutional issue as faces the House today should be converted to one of petty partisan politics by certain members of the minority.

The issue here is whether or not we should give to the people of the United States an opportunity to express themselves on the all-important question of limiting the tenure of Presidents to two terms of 4 years each.

The vote in this body today will not constitute a plebiscite on the merits or demerits on the third or fourth terms of our late venerable President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. It is not a post mortem political issue. It is a constitutional question which never before has been presented to the American people. Some would say that the people have overwhelmingly expressed themselves in favor of more than two terms by electing President Roosevelt in 1940 and again in 1944 for a third and fourth term. It is submitted that this is not the case. The issue in 1940 was one as to the relative merits of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Wendell Willkie. The issue in 1944 was as to the relative merits of Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Thomas E. Dewey.

Now, for the first time we have the opportunity to place before the American people the clear-cut issue of limiting the tenure of office. It can be presented to the people not in the midst of a hotly contested political campaign but at a time when cool judgment and sound reasoning can prevail instead of partisan politics and petty bickering. I urge that the American people have the right to express themselves on this issue and that now is the time to permit them to do so.

It is urged by some that to take favorable action on the resolution before us will be to deprive the people of the inherent right to retain a President as long as they choose. It is submitted that exactly the opposite is true. Our affirmative vote on this resolution has the effect of inviting the people in the country to express themselves as to whether or not it is a sound, constitutional principle to limit the tenure of their Chief Executive. They are free to express themselves through their State legislative bodies or State conventions in any manner they see fit. All power of government is vested in the hands of the people. Our favorable vote on this resolution will permit the people to tell us their wishes in the matter. It is, therefore, a far cry to say that we are tieing the hands of the people.

One of the fundamental principles of our constitutional framework is the system of checks and balances. This principle, derived from Locke and Montesquieu, and propagated in this country by Jefferson, Hamilton, Madison, and others, is a most valuable one. It was early recognized by the constitutional framers of this country that the greatest danger to the republican form of government lay in the concentration of too much power in the hands of one man or one body of men. Accordingly, in the drafting of the Constitution they diffused the power of government among the States and the Nation on the one hand, and among the three departments of government on the other, and so today the framework of our constitutional government is characterized on every hand by the checks which the three departments of government have on each other.

The simple issue which confronts us today is whether or not we shall add one more check to our present system of checks and balances. I urge that it is advisable that we do so. It was not contemplated in the days of the Constitutional Convention that the power of the Chief Executive would grow so extensively as it has grown in recent years. The sprawling settlements of a few million souls spread along the Atlantic seaboard in the 1700's was quite a different country from the expansive Nation of 140,000,000 people with its mammoth government that we have today. A few hundred Federal employees then compares to the two and a half million that we have today. The handful of Government departments then compares with the thousands of departments, boards, commissions, and agencies which exist today. The office of President of the United States, especially when held by what is popularly classified as a "strong President," presents an opportunity for the exercise of influence all out of proportion to that contemplated by the constitutional founders.

The Constitution is not a static instrument. Time and again the constitutional founders recognized this and said that the Constitution as adopted was only a beginning and that the instrument would require amendment from time to time as the growth of the country required. It is submitted to the Members of the House that now is the time when we can well add to our constitutional framework by inserting one more of our famous "checks and balances" with the end in view of restraining the excess exercise of power which is possible to be exercised by a strong Chief Executive, all to the detriment of a free government and a free people. It is urged by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that by giving our approval to this resolution, we are legislating for future generations. That is true—what of it? Legislative bodies always legislate for the future. Did not the Sixtieth Congress, for instance, pass laws which bind me today although I was not living at the time of their enactment? Are we not all bound by the present Constitution of the United States although none of us had a hand in its drafting?

Laws are always prospective in their operation, not retroactive.

If, therefore, we are of the mind that a constitutional safeguard should be erected against the possible—even the probable—rise of an executive dictatorship, we should not be deterred from our action because of the spurious argument that we are tying the hands of future generations. We are, to be sure, legislating for them, but they, too, may amend our action as we today seek to amend the action of the constitutional framers.

The resolution under consideration today, therefore, is one which commends itself to us not as a partisan measure, but as a constitutional one. I urge that it be considered on that basis and that the favorable two-thirds vote of this body initiate the machinery by which the people may express themselves on this all-important question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, this debate has been carried on, in my opinion, on a very high level, as befits the importance of the subject, because we are today considering a very important matter. Always the discussion of any constitutional matter evokes that sort of consideration.

Limiting the Presidential tenure by constitutional amendment has a long historical background, a background which has been developed admirably by many of the speakers today. There is one aspect, however, that has not been touched upon and to which I will allude in the brief time allotted me.

Since 1914 when the First World War broke out it has seemed to me that there has been a tendency in this world toward political dictatorship. That tendency has evidenced itself in many of the great countries, as well as many of the lesser countries, of Europe. It is also apparent in the Far East. It has shown itself even in our own country. Even today there have been references to "indispensability" under "emergency."

In the period following the Napoleonic wars until the outbreak of the First World War virtually every new government which was brought into being in the world was based upon the idea of representative self-government on a constitutional basis. In that period new governments were based upon the pattern of the United States. Since 1914 there has been scarcely one such government brought into being. Each and every one of them since 1914, almost without exception, has been based upon the idea of a strong man—a dictator. World War II was brought on this generation by the irresponsible actions of power-maddened tyrants.

Mr. Chairman, today we have an opportunity to demonstrate to the people of the United States and to the people of the world that we oppose this tendency toward dictatorial government. We can show that we desire to go back to constitutional government based upon law and not upon men.

By submitting to the legislatures of the several States this constitutional amendment to limit the tenure of the President to not more than two terms, we say that no man shall be permitted to perpetuate himself in that office by the use of the public purse, or by the patronage of office, or by the power of the sword. Ours shall be, more than ever, a government based not upon the fortuity of one man's life, but upon the sure foundation of an ordered representative republic.

Let us pass this joint resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I wish to state that I favor limiting the Presidential tenure of office, by a constitutional amendment, to two 4-year terms. In my opinion, 8 years in office is not too long for a good President, while 4 years is entirely long enough for a poor one.

The third term is not expressly provided against in our Constitution, but historians tell us that the only reason the restriction was not written into it was because the Convention at Philadelphia was violently divided upon the proper terms of years for Presidential tenure of office. Some Delegates wanted 7, others 6, others a limit of two terms of 4 years, so finally the founders struck off the document without settling this particular question. However, the action of the early Presidents and their writings on the subject make the two-term limitation a virtual postscript to the Constitution.

It remained for Washington to set the precedent at two terms; but Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party, established it. Jefferson not only consistently refused to consider a third term, despite the urgings of the legislatures of several States, but on innumerable occasion he expressed himself most forcibly about it.

In 1809 Jefferson said:

> If the principle of rotation in office be a sound one, as I conscientiously believe it to be with respect to this office, no pretext should ever be permitted to dispense with it, because there never will be a time when real difficulties will not arise and furnish a plausible pretext for dispensation.

He also said:

> Washington set the example of voluntary retirement after 8 years. I shall follow it. And a few more precedents will oppose the obstacle of habit to anyone after a while who shall endeavor to extend his term.

I cite Jefferson because he is regarded as the patron saint of his party. Next among the Democratic Presidents comes Andrew Jackson. He maintained the Jeffersonian principle and even went further. In his inaugural message on December 1, 1834, he urged a single term of 4 to 6 years and said, in part:

> Could the office be limited to a single period of either 4 or 6 years, I think our liberties would possess an additional safeguard.

Third on the list of Democratic greats comes Grover Cleveland. Cleveland was prophetic in 1894, when he said:

> When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptation to retain public office once gained, and more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent when a horde of office-holders with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with trained political assistance, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for reelection the most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent action which must characterize a government of the people.

And finally we come, in the list of great Democratic Presidents, to Woodrow Wilson, who said in 1913:

> It is the "illicit powers" of the Presidents, not their legitimate influence with the country, that the advocates of a constitutional change—to a term of 6 years—profess to be afraid of and I heartily sympathize with them.

These are the words of four Presidents of whom the Democratic Party is most proud. They were men the greatness of whom everybody acknowledges. They were lovers of liberty and sensed the very danger which I ask the Congress to act against.

I could, of course, cite Republican Presidents who have declared for limitation, including Garfield, McKinley, Hayes, and Taft, but the record of the Republican Party on a third term is clear. No convention has ever approved it.

The last Republican President to express himself on the subject was Calvin Coolidge who, in 1928, disposed of the talk of his candidacy with the laconic six-word phrase, "I do not choose to run."

But in that year the United States Senate decided to take no chances that Coolidge might be drafted by the Republican Convention. Six months after the terse Coolidge statement, the Senate passed the La Follette resolution declaring—

> That the precedents established by Washington and Jefferson and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after the second term has become, by national concurrence, a part of the republican system of government and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 56 to 26, with the Democratic membership voting in a body for it.

I cite this background of Democratic support for limiting the Presidential tenure of office because a two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress will be required to pass this legislation. Unless the Democrats, in goodly numbers, support it, a constitutional amendment is impossible. A division along straight party lines will doom this proposal to defeat.

In conclusion, I call upon all Members of Congress to approach this issue with an open mind; to forget politics; to let their conscience be their guide; to accomplish what our founding fathers intended, and what leaders in both parties have long endorsed, by writing into the Constitution a limitation of Presidential tenure to two 4-year terms.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, at the instructions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most delightful reports I think that has ever been filed in this body. Three different groups have identically the same object in view. Every one of us is trying to be a statesman and do the job that needs doing with regard to Presidential tenure as he sees it. Therefore, there is no fence to cross. There is no place for animosity. It is a happy situation.

I gladly concede to the majority that their bill in their eyes has great merit. I concede that the minority group, with which I am not affiliated, feels just as righteously that their position is the only one that is consonant with the dignity and honor of a free people. For my part and for those of us who favor the Dirksen substitute, we feel just as conscientious in advancing the proposition of a single-term 6-year tenure.

We know the history which has been repeated here so often on the floor since this debate started. We know that single-term tenure was one of the first resolutions adopted in the great Constitutional Convention after 8 days of debate. We know that they fixed it at one term of 7 years, prohibiting reelection.

To my mind, when we come to consider the emergencies through which we have passed, the argument is sound that it was essential to do what the people of the United States did. Be that as it may, whether you agree or not, it is not pertinent in this debate. The point of this debate is, now that the emergencies have passed and we have an opportunity to consider this matter freed of personalities and everything but a sense of our duty, What should be done? I maintain, and my single emphasis here is, that the welfare of the Republic is the sole criterion to be considered, and that, therefore, inasmuch as all of us deplore political considerations and influences beating upon the White House and its occupant, we should consider everything in the light of the best possible service from the occupant of the White House.

Now, those of us who favor the Dirksen substitute insist that the best way to approximate the ideal of perfect service, plus perfect assistants, minus time-killing politics, is the way first adopted by the founding fathers, a single term with no reelection, so that before any man assumes the crushing weight of the Presidency he knows that all he will have to do is to do his job to the best of his ability, with the leadership of Almighty God, and that there can be nothing further from his thoughts than reelection. It automatically frees him of all political thoughts for his own future. It is his one ambition, his single task to do that job for that one term, the best that divine leadership will enable him to do.

The first thing he will have to do is to consider his Cabinet. Do you mean to tell me that a man who has to be reelected in 4 years and who almost certainly has it within his power to renominate himself, would appoint a man from Idaho to his Cabinet, when there was a man from Ohio a candidate for the same position? You know that to propose such an absurdity is to cause a genuine horselaugh. I would get a bronx cheer if I were to propose such a thing at the White House.

I repeat, the President ought to be saved for his own good, for the good of his soul, and for the good of the Nation, from any possibility of having to consider politics. He ought to and he would, if elected for a single term without the possibility of reelection, select the best possible Cabinet that could be assembled. The same principle would permeate throughout all his other appointments. There would be no political incentive. There could be none. Therefore, I believe that that one fact alone, which was the predominant element in the thinking of the founding fathers and which has been endorsed by no less than five Presidents as they were in service in the White House and four other Presidents——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I would be so happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know my distinguished friend is a great consitutional lawyer and I know he believes firmly in States' rights. He believes, I am certain, that it is proper to submit to the people a question of this character, to amend the Constitution on the tenure of the office of President.

Mr. HOBBS. I certainly do, I would say, however, I do not follow the gentleman in his innuendo. I do not think our job as Congressmen is to submit everything that is proposed. I think our job as Congressmen is to decide honestly, as God gives us to see the light, what should be proposed, and not "pass the buck" on to the States just because we want to be good fellows.

Mr. SPRINGER. Since there has been much public discussion throughout the country on this very question, the tenure of the office of President, does not the gentleman believe it is fair to submit the question to the people, because it is a basic problem in our Nation?

Mr. HOBBS. I said in the beginning we were very fortunate to have the opportunity which has been presented at this time by the turn of events in our history, to study dispassionately and decide what is best to submit, and let nothing persuade us to submit any proposal than the best.

The best is the Dirksen substitute to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The 4-year term of office has never meant 4 years of service. Here, twice four is not eight. It takes a new administration considerable time to get organized. The Eightieth Congress was sworn in on January 3, more than a month ago. Although the Speaker and the leadership were all experienced and skilled in legislative work, and although they have worked faithfully, organization has yet to be completed and only one piece of legislation has been passed, consuming less than 1 day on the floor, and it was merely on extension of a minor, old excise tax bill. The executive department is infinitely more difficult and tedious to organize. Much more of its personnel is new. It has been estimated that it takes a year to organize the executive department and get it to working well.

William Howard Taft, Elihu Root, and many other qualified witnesses have pointed out unanswerably that politics wrecks the efficiency of the last year or two of every 4-year term of the President. Such statements have been quoted in this debate and in the reports on the pending resolution.

Therefore, of the nominal duration of a 4-year term, efficient service is rendered in only half or less.

So, a 6-year term would produce at least 5 years of efficient service, since the last 2 years of the 4-year term now devoted to politics would be saved. And because of better, nonpolitical appointments from the Cabinet down, the quality of that 5 years of efficient service would be improved.

Many other good arguments have been and could be urged in favor of the Dirksen substitute. But my time is too limited to rehearse them. I beg your most statesmanlike consideration.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RABIN].

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of the resolution that would limit the time of the President to two terms. I believe that the people themselves can determine the limit of the term of office by the exercise of the ballot in a free election. While we have free elections, I trust the judgment of the people. I know some are concerned about the danger of a dictatorship and the abolition of free elections if one were to hold office too long. I do not fear that danger. Hitler became a dictator in less than 8 years, and so did Mussolini. If one is in office for 8 years and in that time does not assume dictatorial powers, it is safe to assume that he does not aim to be a dictator. We should not tie our hands. We should be free to elect anyone we choose in time of emergency or danger. Again I say, I trust the judgment of the people. Give them the unhampered right to exercise it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have these 1¾ minutes to advise the House that at the appropriate time under the 5-minute rule I shall offer an amendment to the resolution which will provide, if adopted, that the matter will be handled by conventions rather than by the State legislatures. In that way, the one issue can be put up to the people whether they want to adopt that amendment to the Constitution. There will not be any extraneous matters involved. The candidates for delegates to the State conventions will be elected upon that one issue and that one issue alone.

At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I shall offer the amendment. The Constitution provides that it may be done in either manner.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I hope no effort will be made to limit debate under the 5-minute rule because it is now only 2 o'clock and this is a very important matter. I do hope that broad latitude will be allowed in connection with the debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield the balance of the time remaining on this side to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, let me first assure the distinguished minority whip, who was such an able majority leader, that, so far as I know, there is no intention on the part of the leadership at this time to follow the precedent, used so frequently in the recent past, limiting debate under the 5-minute rule. I feel sure that adequate opportunity will be given to our membership to discuss this resolution.

We have had a real live debate. Every phase of this matter has been covered just as fully as it would be if we talked for 5 days, and every Member with any experience in the House knows it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] made his usual good talk, and when he finished there was very little remaining to be said in favor of the position he takes. Much of what has been said since then has been repetition. We can get nowhere by repeating the arguments. The debate has developed that the House membership may be divided into three categories: first, those who are opposed to any limitation on the presidential term; second, those who favor a 6-year term; and, third, those who favor a 4-year term, with the limitation that one cannot possibly serve more than 8 years as President. The opponents of the bill are driving for the 6-year limitation, and when the roll is called, if I do not miss my guess, every Member who is opposed to any limitation, as is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], will vote for the 6-year term. You who are familiar with the procedure here, and are acquainted with strategy of one kind or another to defeat a bill, know that the best way to kill a bill or injure it is to vote for all amendments offered regardless of their merits.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to compliment the gentleman on the fact that he has never followed that procedure which he accuses all of us of following.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is always generous. He is an astute and able leader. He is a past master at strategy.

What is the difference between a 6-year term and a 4-year term? All the arguments that could possibly be advanced for the 6-year term have been presented. I started out as a 6-year term man myself some years ago, but the more I studied, the more I watched, the more I listened, the more I became convinced that if we want to play safe, 4 years, as determined by the forefathers, is the right period.

If we have 6 years, then we have too long a term for an unfortunate Presidential choice, who can only be removed by impeachment. If we have a 4-year term, a good President will be reelected; if he is not good, the people can replace him. Six years is too long when there is a method whereby the people can pass upon the stewardship before hiring the same President for another term.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] says the President will select a proper decent and right type of Cabinet if he knows he is only going to be there for 6 years, and that he may do otherwise if he knows he is only going to be there 4 years. I do not view it that way at all. I know, as a practical matter, that many Cabinet positions are settled at or before the national convention. I know that the votes cast under the party machinery in a national convention have much weight as far as Cabinet positions are concerned. For my part I had rather take a chance on having a President serve for 4 years, knowing that he could not possibly be reelected by the American people unless he served well and unless he had a decent Cabinet.

Long tenure of the office of President leads to an undue concentration of control of government in one man. Over a period of 12 years a President can secure a firm control over the enormous and powerful machinery of Federal administration, including the so-called independent agencies, thus increasing the natural tendency of bureaucracy to behave in an irresponsible manner. The legislature can be made dependent through the Presidential patronage and the Presidential control of party machinery. Even the independence of the judiciary can be influenced indirectly by the appointment of judges whose attitudes are essentially those of the President. This danger of an overconcentration of powers in the hands of one man by long tenure in the Presidential office is much more serious than in the early years of our history because of the greatly increased centralization of powers in the Federal Government.

Another evil result of long tenure is the growth among the people of too great a dependence on a leader. Political apathy is a menace to democracy, and blind faith in a leader inevitably means an indifference to great issues and problems. Along with public apathy there is a stifling of other leaders, so that the capacity for political leadership is weakened.

To safeguard against these evil effects of too long a tenure of office of the Presidency a constitutional amendment is needed. For 150 years the sanction of tradition proved sufficient. Now that the two-term tradition has been broken, however, a longer tenure may well become the practice unless constitutionally forbidden. The argument that a constitutional limitation on tenure evidences a lack of faith in the people by denying them a free choice in the election of their President is plausible but superficial. The point is that the longer a President remains in office the more difficult it is for the people to remove him. This is largely due to the President's great power of patronage. After 8 years of office almost any President can secure his renomination because the use of patronage will have enabled him to control the party machinery. The majority of the voters of the party may prefer another man, but the nomination process is controlled by the party machinery. It is, therefore, not realistic to argue that the voters have a "free choice" in determining whether or not a President shall have a third term. The choice for those voters of the President's party who do not want a third term is to abstain from voting, vote for the candidate of the other party, or vote for the candidate of their own party in spite of the fact that they oppose a third term. The influence of Presidential patronage further restricts a truly democratic election in that a vast number of voters in our present bureaucracy are dependent on the continuance of the administration for their jobs.

Much has been made of the argument that a constitutional limitation on the tenure of the Presidential office would prevent the continuance in office of an experienced President in time of great emergency. This is, in effect, an argument that a particular man is indispensable, an idea that should be completely alien to a democratic society. Furthermore, a President can create an "emergency," or at least the impression of an emergency, and would always be tempted to do so if his tenure were not limited.

In short, the potential abuses and evils of more than two terms of office so far outweigh any conceivable advantages that the people ought in self-protection to amend their Constitution to limit tenure to two terms.

As has been stated, 18 Presidents, from Washington to Franklin Roosevelt, have expressed views on limiting the Presidential term. Excerpts from these statements have been read in the debate; however, if all of the statements made by all of these 18 Presidents are considered, one will find the consensus of opinion was that there should be a two 4-year-term limitation. True, some of them felt that this has been, and will be, accomplished by respecting the tradition established by Washington and made permanent by Jefferson. None of them, however, spoke after the tradition which they revered had been broken when Mr. Roosevelt was elected for a third and a fourth term, and died before fifth-term nomination was reached.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very interesting to talk about what the forefathers said. That is helpful, but I am more interested at the moment in what the people in this generation think. Within my memory the public during political campaigns has debated the third-term menace from the time Theodore Roosevelt was a candidate for a third term through the Coolidge tenure, as well as the campaigns of 1940 and 1944.

The only real question before the Congress is: Shall we pass this resolution and permit the States to vote "yes" or "no" on the two-term limitation as here proposed?

There has been no general discussion throughout the country about a 6-year term. However, the people do have definite views on limiting the Presidential term. They have considered two terms of not to exceed 4 years each, and, I believe, are fully prepared to pass judgment now. There should be no partisan politics here. This resolution is not aimed at any individual. No personalities are involved at the moment. The real effect of this constitutional amendment will be to give vitality to a tradition which every speaker today insists should be effective.

Yes, the Constitution itself does bind the people in certain particulars and prevents them from doing certain things which they might do under stress, prejudice, and emotion. To argue that the people should never bind themselves so far as future action is concerned is not in keeping with the spirit and purpose of our Constitution.

I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment should be submitted at once while many of the State legislatures are in session. If this is done, I am fully persuaded that the people through their State representatives will ratify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Under the rule, all time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. No person shall be chosen or serve as President of the United States for any term, or be eligible to hold the office of President during any term, if such person shall have theretofore served as President during the whole or any part of each of any two separate terms; but this article shall not prevent any person who may hold the office of President during the term within which this article is ratified from holding such office for the remainder of such term.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out all of lines 9, 10, and 11, and on page 2, strike out all of lines 1 and 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Any person who has served as President of the United States during all or portions of any two terms, shall thereafter be ineligible to hold the office of President."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. CELLER:

"On pages 1 and 2, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

" 'The President and Vice President shall hold their offices during the term of 6 years. No person shall be eligible to the office of President who has previously held such office, but this article shall not affect the term in progress or to which a President and Vice President have been elected at the time of the ratification of this article, nor the eligibility to the office of the President for such term.' "

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, this is the so-called Dirksen amendment, which amendment was praised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

It would provide, in effect, that the tenure of office of the President shall be 6 years, and 6 years only, with no right to be reelected. It would not have any effect upon the present incumbent of the White House, Mr. Truman. I think many Members on our side of the aisle believe that when you have the possibility of 8 years in the White House there is a tendency to squelch new leadership; when young men tend to get in front and have the klieg lights thrown on them they are tugged back by the incumbent in the White House. The incumbent is usually jealous of his power and discourages any heir apparent. That has been the practice for many, many years, not only when the Democrats were in power but when the Republicans were in power. Successors are not groomed, successors are not encouraged. To my mind, a 6-year term would change all that. I believe the country is hurt when you have a man serving one term of 4 years with an overweening ambition to serve a second term, because at the end of 3 years, just as the President reaches the highest point of efficiency, men in this House and men in the other body, and even men and women outside the Congress, start to hunt and hound him; they seek to snipe at him and embarrass him, and thereby destroy his efficiency.

I believe that 8 years in the White House is also bad for party welfare. Two terms as President makes the President undoubted leader of his party, but his leadership becomes personal. He becomes a great concentration of party power.

It is well to repeat what a great Senator from New York, Elihu Root, once said in the other Chamber:

You cannot separate the attempts to beat the President seeking reelection from the attempt to make inefficient the operations of government which the President is carrying on in accordance with his duty.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I simply want to make an inquiry about the effect of the amendment if adopted. A man becomes President, he is sworn in, and 30 days after he is sworn in resigns, dies, or for some reason the office is vacated. The Vice President then ascends to the Presidency. Is the Vice President who becomes President prohibited from succeeding himself?

Mr. CELLER. He would be prohibited.

Mr. ABERNETHY. In other words, he could only serve the remainder of that term?

Mr. CELLER. The remainder of that Presidential term.

We all know that the last year and a half of the first term of a President is primarily given over to the coming campaign. No President, it matters not how wise or sagacious he may be, can adequately and successfully conduct a campaign for reelection and act for the welfare of his country as President of the United States. Just as oil will not mix with water, those two functions cannot properly mix. We know also that it is not very edifying for the President to descend to the political arena and to indulge in the mud slinging and in the hurly-burly of a political campaign. The President should be above the rough and tumble of a campaign for reelection. The President would, therefore, do a better job because there would not be the hope of reelection. He would not have to cater to selfish groups. The amendment, I think, would make for more statesmanship, more courage in the Presidency because votes would not be in the balance.

Under the two-term rule, the last 18 months of the first term are primarily given over to the coming campaign. A President cannot do both and do both well; that is, conduct a successful campaign for reelection and at the same time conduct the affairs of the Chief Executive for the good of all.

Six years may be too long for a mediocre President. Remember no plan is perfect. Six years, however, is long enough for even the best President.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I happened to have been on the subcommittee which heard the evidence submitted at the hearings held on this particular piece of legislation. We had before us every theory which is here proposed. We had those who did not believe in any change or the submission of any kind of a proposal to the people. We had further the proposal providing for a 6-year term without any right of reelection. Then we also had bills which proposed two terms of office of 4 years each.

After hearing all of the evidence and hearing all of the statements of witnesses—and may I say there were 16 or 18 of them who submitted their views upon these questions—we came to a conclusion, and I think that conclusion is borne out entirely by statements made by some of our forefathers in their observations with respect to the tenure of the office of President of the United States. We must remember that the people think in the term that a President is elected for 4 years. They have never thought in terms of a President being elected for 6 years and, as some of our forefathers said—Grover Cleveland, Woodrow Wilson, and others—if we get a bad man, under the theory of a 6-year term, there is no way in the world you can get rid of him within a shorter term. But under the plan of two terms of 4 years each, at the end of 4 years the people have the right and they have the power at the ballot box to terminate the term of office of that official who has not measured up to the standards.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it not true that what we are doing here today is simply writing into the Constitution, if the States adopt the proposal, the so-called two-term tradition that has grown up in our country throughout the years?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct and I wish to thank him for that observation. We are merely proposing to submit by way of this resolution that which has become a custom in this country.

Mr. HALLECK. I just wish to say further that I trust this amendment will be defeated and that we may proceed with the proposal as submitted by the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman has so well said, there has developed a custom in this Nation of ours. We have heard what these various Presidents have had to say upon this question. Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Calvin Coolidge all have spoken. It did not make any difference who they were or with what party they were affiliated. They were thinking what was best for our country. As was said by Calvin Coolidge—and that is the most recent expression we have on the subject, and that is nearer our day, when we have reached the period at which we have airplanes, when we have radios and when we have all the modern inventions of the age—

It is difficult to conceive how any one man can successfully serve the country for a term of more than 8 years.

That is all we have before us in this resolution. We are offering to propose this resolution to the legislatures of the several States to determine whether or not they concur in this two-term custom that we have known throughout the years.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, referring again to the Constitutional Convention, it is well for us to keep in mind that it was necessary for that august body to determine the relative periods of time of service. They first determined that the Members of the legislative branch should be elected every 2 years. They first held that the term of President should be 7 years and he should be ineligible for reelection. They next fixed the term of United States Senator at 6 years, and that it would be a continuing body with one-third elected every 2 years, divided into classes. When the Committee on Revision of Uncompleted Matters in the Constitution made its report originally on September 4, which was debated through the 6th, 8th, and 12th, and finally, when the Committee on Style wrote up the last draft of the Constitution as we have it today, they then fixed the term at 4 years.

The first question that presents itself is this: Why did they fix 2 years for the House of Representatives? Why did they fix 6 years for the Senate? Why did they fix 4 years for the President? The natural answer is this: The Senate was to represent the States. The House of Representatives was to represent the people. The President, as originally proposed in the electoral college, was elected from the States. Consequently, those men felt that there ought to be a balance all the way and all through this argument there must be kept in mind our system of checks and balances: 2 years, 4 years, and 6 years; so much for that phase of it.

The second thing is this: This matter has been repeatedly presented. Since I first spoke, I have been in touch with the Congressional Library. Since 1929 to date, 60 additional amendments have been offered affecting the tenure of office of the President of the United States. All told, there have been 270 amendments affecting the tenure of office of the President of the United States since the adoption of the Constitution. So it is nothing new. In 1889 it was offered; in 1893, in 1908, in 1909, and 1912. These five amendments were all submitted with the idea of limiting the tenure of the President to a single term. In 1894, William J. Bryan introduced three amendments providing for a single-term President, and another one making the President ineligible to succeed himself.

If you will read James Bryce's American Commonwealth, you will find on page 42 that he states that the two-term tenure of the Presidential office has grown into "an unwritten law." Of course, Mr. Bryce's great volume was written before a certain President came into his ascendency about the year 1932, when this "unwritten law" was broken; nevertheless, what has happened can happen again, and we have seen the evils of it.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons stated, I am in opposition to this substitute amendment.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the observation that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], speaking a few moments ago, made the best argument in favor of limiting the tenure of Presidential office that I have so far heard made during this debate.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] was speaking in favor of his amendment of limiting the term to one 6-year period, and in the course of his remarks he stated, in substance, that it was well known to everyone that any President who knew that he would be running for reelection spent at least 18 months of his present term in order to campaign for the next term, and because of that fact that he was inefficient in his capacity as the Chief Executive for a period of 18 months.

In making this statement the gentleman from New York has practically admitted that our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, was inefficient as the President of the United States for at least 4½ years. If it is true, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] stated, that the President then in office which, in this case, was Mr. Roosevelt, is inefficient during the last 18 months of his term in office, then Mr. Roosevelt was inefficient for 18 months at the close of his first term, 18 months at the close of his second term, and 18 months at the close of his third term, making 4½ years in all in which he was inefficient.

Following this line of reasoning, and carried to its ultimate conclusion, one can readily see that if a person was perpetuated in office long enough that it would soon develop that for a good many years we would practically be without a President. I was somewhat surprised to hear the gentleman make the assertion that Mr. Roosevelt was inefficient as the Chief Executive for at least 4½ years of his 12 years and 4 months' tenure.

Therefore, I repeat that the gentleman from New York has offered concrete and substantial evidence as to why the term of office of the President of the United States should be limited.

Based on this same line of reasoning, would not one be safe in saying that a person who is elected to serve two 4-year terms in the White House does in reality only serve 5 years, since 18 months off of each term to campaign equals 3 years in which he is not efficient.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I favor the passage of House Joint Resolution 27 proposing a submission to the people of the question whether there should be an amendment to the Constitution to limit the tenure of the President to two terms, and am opposed to the proposed amendment which has been offered to limit the term to one of 6 years.

If we were legislating in a vacuum, there would be much force and logic behind the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and others, that the voters should have a free and untrammelled choice to name the same man to this high office as often as they might wish. Indeed, it is with some reluctance that I reach the conclusion in my own mind that the threat to our democratic processes from the abuses of autocracy and, therefore, the consummate evil in permitting complete freedom of choice to designate the same person for this office again and again and again transcends in importance and seriousness what I am also prepared to concede is an evil in limiting the freedom of choice of a free people.

Therefore, I hold the view that some restraint upon the tenure of the President is desirable.

It seems to me that the voters of this country are entitled to express their views as to who shall be its Chief Executive oftener than once in 6 years. The point is made that if a President is elected for 6 years, and knows that he can serve no longer, he will be entirely divorced from "politics" and will be able to serve his country without one eye cocked toward the next Presidential election. This argument is not without force. But it seems to me largely a question of the caliber of the man, not the length of his tenure which will determine whether he puts politics or the welfare of his country first.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that this Government of ours is the only Government in the world where the people have created a supreme law to save themselves from themselves?

Mr. KEATING. I think so.

Furthermore, it is submitted that "politics" is a much maligned and misunderstood expression.

If it means that he will keep his ear to the ground, remain ever mindful of the wishes of a majority of the people of this country, and, eschewing blind subservience to such majority opinion, yet always weigh carefully the expressed desires and aspirations of the greatest number in arriving at his final conclusions, then, to my way of thinking, that kind of "politics" is more to be encouraged than condemned.

A President who holds himself aloof in an "ivory tower" for 6 years will not do the best job for the country. It is highly desirable, it seems to me, to require him to go to the people after serving for 4 years, tell them what he has done, and ask them for support for the continuance of those policies for another 4 years.

The distinguished gentleman from Alabama has made the point that one of the most important jobs for any President is to select a Cabinet of capable men to carry on the important duties entrusted to them. He argues that a President is less likely to make selections dictated by political considerations and more likely to name to these high offices men of outstanding ability in their field if he knows that he is serving for one term and cannot serve again.

Here, too, it seems to me, the nub of the problem is not the machinery, but the man. One can conceive of a situation where just the opposite to the picture painted by the gentleman from Alabama would be true, where a President, not actuated by the high motives which should guide him, might feel: "Here is my chance, at long last. I can name my cronies to office and fill my Cabinet with my friends from my own State, and nothing can ever be done about it. I am sitting here for 6 years. At last I have a chance to reward my friends, and nobody can throw me out."

On the other hand, if the President knows that at the end of one term, if he seeks reelection, as seems to be the habit of Presidents, he will have to justify before the bar of public opinion the selection of teammates which he has made, he will be more, not less, apt to name men of high caliber to those positions.

I have one final thought for the serious consideration of this body. Most of us feel, as I have said, that events have demonstrated the need for some limitation of tenure. That seems to me the paramount objective. While I differ with those who favor a single 6-year term, I would shed no tears over that eventual result.

It seems to me there is a very practical consideration here in accomplishing what I have described as "our paramount objective." The 4-year term of President is firmly embedded in the finest traditions of our great country. It is no small task to secure the approval of the legislatures of three-quarters of the States. It is my considered judgment that there is a very much greater likelihood that the people, when they finally pass upon this question through their elected representatives on their home grounds, will support a limitation which retains the 4-year tradition and also gives them a more frequent voice in the selection of their President than is likely to be the case if the 6-year proposition is submitted to them.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think my very able and distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has just announced the real principle that lies back of this proposed legislation which is being so actively supported by those on his side of the aisle. If I understood him correctly, his pronouncement is that it is sometimes necessary that Congress pass legislation like this in order to help the people to save themselves.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. That was also laid down in the fundamental law, and here we are proposing to let the people decide whether or not they want to save themselves from what they have gone through during the last 12 years.

Mr. THOMASON. I still think I understand what my distinguished friend said, which is, in substance, that the Congress must do something to help the people save themselves from themselves. That is genuine Republican doctrine. I just want to make it plain for the RECORD before it is closed today that that is not my political faith and I do not subscribe to that viewpoint. I believe everybody agrees that one of the greatest men this country ever produced or that the world ever knew was George Washington. I quote verbatim his words when he decided that he did not want to be elected to a third term. He said he "saw no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who in some emergency shall be deemed most capable of serving the public." I believe I can show with facts and figures that the people have spoken very definitely on this very subject. They did it in 1940 and again in 1944. The timing of this legislation is quite interesting and in some respects a little suspicious to me. My friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], new chairman of the great Committee on the Judiciary, made some predictions about the ultimate outcome of this bill; so if predictions are in order, I make the prediction that regardless of what form this bill takes when the time comes for a roll call on the bill every man on the Republican side is going to vote for this legislation. The skids are greased and the Republicans will follow their leaders. I make one reservation. If some Member in an unguarded moment should offer an amendment here which would include Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, you will witness more running for cover than ever happened in this historic hall. In that event, I cannot predict the outcome. But I do not anticipate anything like that. I was here in the days of Mr. Hoover; and I remember a good many things that happened in the days of Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge.

During the last 14 years under the Democratic administration I have never known or heard of any such enthusiasm for this rush legislation until the convening of this new Congress, of which the Republicans comprise such an overwhelming majority. You have come fresh from the people who in the exercise of their calm, deliberate, political judgment elected you. Yet, you now announce the astounding principle that you cannot trust the people. I am not dealing in personalities, but I remember back in the dark days of 1932, under the Hoover administration, 8,000 banks closed and 15,000,000 people were unemployed. We were on the verge of internal revolution. The people, these same persons you are not now willing to trust, elected a new President. Fear was banished, new hope was inspired, and peace, employment, and prosperity started its slow march back up the hill. The country had a new leader and Commander in Chief in whom they had confidence. In that election Franklin D. Roosevelt received 22,821,837 votes. His opponent, Mr. Hoover, received 15,761,841 votes. Mr. Roosevelt received 472 votes in the electoral college and Mr. Hoover received 59.

In 1933 and 1934 the chaos that had prevailed for 3 or 4 years prior thereto was converted into prosperity and confidence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I repeat, that prosperity and internal peace came back to the country. And in 1936 the same Mr. Roosevelt was reelected and received 27,476,673 votes. And Mr. Landon received 16,679,583 votes. Mr. Roosevelt received 523 votes in the electoral college and Mr. Landon received 8. I repeat 8. That was the people speaking in a free, honest, democratic election. The Republicans have said on this floor today we must have a check on the people lest they destroy themselves. I am one of those who believe in a free democratic government, and I would give the people more rather than less power. I do not fear the majority of the sovereign people, and the votes of a free people cast at an honest election, with an honest count. No person or political party has ever raised any question about the honesty and fairness of our national elections. The proponents of the bill say that they want the people to speak. I contend the people spoke on this very question in no uncertain terms in 1940 and again in 1944. The Republicans say we must send the question back to some logrolling State legislatures. In the election of 1940, when Roosevelt was up for the third term, that was the one big issue of the Republicans and a few Democrats who opposed Roosevelt.

In that election Mr. Roosevelt received 27,243,466 votes and Mr. Willkie received 22,304,755 votes. Mr. Roosevelt received 449 electoral votes and Mr. Willkie received 82.

That is the situation to which George Washington referred away back in the early days of the Republic.

The war clouds were getting lower and lower every day in Europe and the people realized that we had a leader in whom the American people, the common people of this country as well as liberty-loving people of all the world, had confidence. So the people sent Franklin Delano Roosevelt back to the White House. I think, if possible, they might have risen up and demanded his reelection even if this resolution had then been the law. Some of my Republican friends talk as if they fear resurrection.

In 1944, while our boys by the million were scattered all over the world in a war where our very life and liberty were at stake, the people rose up again—not Mr. Roosevelt—but the people rose up again for even a fourth term, and gave him 25,603,152 votes and they gave Mr. Dewey 22,006,616 votes. Mr. Roosevelt received 432 electoral votes and Mr. Dewey 99. An interesting fact is that when you add all of the electoral votes cast in all four of the last elections, all four Republican candidates received 248 electoral votes, which was 18 short of the necessary number for election. That, my friends, is democracy in action. That is a free people exercising their right of franchise.

A great many predictions have been made here today. I will venture one more. In view of the history of that record, where the sovereign people of a free nation were speaking, I venture another prediction—and I thank God no such situation prevailed—but if that terrible World War II were still raging today and Franklin D. Roosevelt were still alive, and in good health, I predict the people of this country would again elect him in 1948. He was a great leader. He had his faults and made his mistakes, but he whipped a depression when our people were in despair and he was our gallant leader in winning the most cruel war in human history.

I join with you in hoping and trusting that no emergency will ever arise in the future that will make necessary either a third or fourth term. We still live in a sick world. Enduring peace is not yet assured. Atomic bombs may get in the hands of potential enemies. If an emergency such as George Washington predicted, or such as we faced in 1941, should ever arise again, I want the President, be he Democrat or Republican, to finish the job if he possesses unusual qualities of leadership. Anyway, I will trust the people more than a politically minded Congress and some meek State legislatures.

Our Constitution has been amended 21 times. It was always to increase and to enlarge the power of the people. With me, the people are sovereign, and can do whatever they wish. They make few mistakes in elections and are quick to correct those they do make. I want them to have more rather than less power.

It is passing strange the haste with which this bill was reported. I understand the committee considered it for 2 days and we can debate it for only 2 hours. It bears all the earmarks of politics. Some people just cannot forget. Some like to nurse grudges even after death. Why not take reasonable time for such an important matter as amending the Constitution? How about some of the promises made last fall to reduce taxes, stop strikes, and shoot the Communists? We have been in session 6 weeks. We have only voted on one bill to retain excise taxes, which the Republicans voted for after their leaders had said they would repeal it.

This resolution ought to be recommitted for careful study, and let us take up some important matters that mean so much for the happiness and prosperity of our people.

I shall vote against the resolution and all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, we have heard many appeals to leave this question to the people. The only way in which the people can express themselves on this subject, is for their representatives in Congress to propose by constitutional means that their representatives in the States vote on whether they want to make the unwritten law of the third term part of the written law of the Constitution. Now, when this can be done as a matter of principle, divorced from personalities and partisan politics. The best way in which the idolators of our late President could insure the special place they feel he should occupy in our history would be to join in breaking the mold that made the third and fourth terms possible and thus have him hold forever a unique place in American history.

Without going into past history, however, which has been so exhaustively brought before this body today, I want to call attention to contemporary world history. All over the world constitutional representative democracy, republican government, is under attack. There are those all over the world who are saying that representative democracy is decadent, that politicians who are elected to public office cannot be trusted to act in the public interest for fear they will be defeated, and who are therefore attempting a perpetuation in power of individual leaders in personal dictatorships. By the two-term proposal which the committee has made we answer these attacks on our form of government that come from all over the world. It is because of this aspect of the two-term proposition that, I who originally supported the 6-year idea, am now opposed to the Celler 6-year amendment. By the proposal made by the committee for one term, with a possibility of reelection to a second term, we say to the world that we do not think that the whole history of America is wrong, and that a President who is a possible candidate for reelection cannot be trusted to act with patriotism, wisdom, or efficiency. Every President since the founding of the Republic has been a possible candidate for reelection. We do not think this sullied the service of every one of them. That is the implication of the single-term proposal. The average tenure of our Presidents has been about 5 years. The type of politics whereby the President continues to be responsive to the views of the people and to public opinion is not a bad thing. We think that part of representative democracy is a good thing.

On the other hand, we recognize the dangers involved in perpetuation in office which finally amounts to personal dictatorship, the sort of perpetuation which Thomas Jefferson described as monocracy. He used that term as something different from monarchy, monocracy being power concentrated in one elected official. We recognize that after 8 years, with the patronage, with the other powers that rest in the hands of a modern President, we may have a tendency toward perpetuation in power of one man. Therefore, the Congress, by this proposal to the people today, does not say that we think that the President and the Members of the two bodies of Congress cannot be trusted to act wisely, if they are candidates to succeed themselves. By this logic if mere candidacy for public office automatically unfits a man to serve in public office, then this vice applies to a new man as well as to an incumbent, and the President and all public officials should be appointed; by whom, would be a puzzle under this logic, as election would automatically unfit anyone for exercising the appointing power. This is the sort of logic that leads to dictatorship, to fascism, to communism. We say that the old way of the Republic is a good way, but we are going to propose that the people through their representatives can put into the Constitution a bar against perpetuation in office which is such a danger to free government all over the world, a danger which has become more increasingly apparent every day.

There is another consideration I want to call to the attention of the Members of the House. The 6-year proposal eliminates automatically many possible candidates for President because of age. If you check on the ages of many of our Presidents and many of our prospective candidates, you will realize that they may be acceptable candidates for a 4-year term, but they would be too old to be considered for a 6-year term. This is a delicate subject. A 6-year term might eliminate certain of our leaders who will be elder statesmen in 1948 and at other times in the future, although they might otherwise be extremely available. I do not believe in indispensable men, but we make more men available by a 4-year term than by a 6-year term.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the pending amendment will be defeated.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object at this time, the Members who have been speaking held themselves to the 5-minute rule. There is no desire over here to be unreasonable. The gentleman from Texas had 10 minutes. But we do want to move along as expeditiously as we can. I am not going to object to this request but hereafter I shall have to object.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's observation is a fair one except in the case of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. He is a member of the committee and was attending important official duties elsewhere during general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] has made two of what he terms strong points in favor of the resolution. Anyway, they are the points upon which he rests his argument. The first is that the only way the people can express themselves on this proposition is by passing the pending resolution and submitting the matter to the legislatures of the various States. We all know there is a difference between people expressing themselves on a matter and the legislatures of the various States passing on the question. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to let the people by a majority vote decide every 4 years whether they want to continue a man in the office of Presidency and not let the legislatures which are not the people decide whether the people should have that right. The Colmer amendment requiring submission to conventions in the States for a vote on the proposal is more democratic than the legislative method.

I certainly believe it is more democratic to let the people of the future generations, in view of the facts submitted to them and with which they may be confronted at that time, decide for themselves whether they want a President to carry on for one term, two terms, or three terms.

The second allegedly strong point the gentleman from Ohio made was that all over the world constitutional democracy is under attack. Well, it is under attack here in the House of Representatives this afternoon also. Throughout the history of our democracy, throughout the history of our Government, we have seen the citizens assume one responsibility after another. The democratic processes have been enlarged, first, by the adoption of the amendment to elect Senators direct instead of through the legislatures. We have even gotten away, for all practical purposes, from the idea in the Constitution that the people have no real choice in the election of the President, that the electors elect the President. So that is another responsibility assumed by the people. Then by appropriate amendments a large section of our population has been given citizenship and the right of franchise. This also is an enlargement of the democratic processes.

Another extension is that we have made it possible to collect tax incomes according to the ability of the people to pay. We have passed the lame-duck amendment, which is still another enlargement of our democratic process. Then, by an appropriate amendment, we gave the right of franchise to the women of this Nation. All of these are enlargements of the democratic process showing that the people of the United States felt that additional people were capable of citizenship and of exercise of the franchise; that they should have a larger hand in the selection of their officials; that more people should have the right to vote. Yet, the gentleman from Ohio says that if we fail to pass this amendment we will be saying to the people of the world that we do not trust the democratic process. I say just the opposite is true.

I regret that the majority party in this Congress as its very first move should show distrust of the majority of the people and of future generations to govern themselves. I regret that they feel that they were bridled and put in a strait-jacket.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of the substitute amendment?

Mr. KEFAUVER. If the gentleman would read the report he would see that I am not for any of the limitations.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. This proposed amendment could also be initiated by two-thirds of the State legislatures calling a constitutional convention, could it not?

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is quite right. That is one of the ways of proposing an amendment, and I have not heard of any legislature going on record as favoring this one.

Mr. Chairman, it seems very strange to me that during the time that President Grant was considering running for a third time, when the Republican Party was in charge of both Houses of Congress, that no one espoused any constitutional amendment to prohibit the President from serving a third term. After he made his great tour of the world and came back, he came within 50 votes of getting nominated, or of getting enough votes in the Republican Convention to run for a third term.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. On 36 ballots in that convention he received 303 votes. The highest he got was 313, a majority on every ballot, with 378 votes necessary—and the third term was not what defeated him.

Mr. KEFAUVER. No. Another very interesting thing is that both Houses of Congress were under the control of the Republican Party in 1927 and 1928, when President Coolidge was considering running for a third term. Did the Republican Party at that time espouse any amendment to prevent him from doing so? Let it be said also that President Coolidge would not have supported this amendment. I have here his statement. He said that to prohibit a President from serving a third term, where he served two full terms, might be in the public interest, but that should not apply where he served only one term and a part of another. He was protecting himself. What have the people of America done to all of a sudden cause a majority party in Congress to say that it does not have confidence in the integrity and the wisdom of the people? The only thing they have done is to elect Franklin Roosevelt for a third term. Yet, are you gentlemen going to contend that the people of 45 States were misled and ignorant, that they did not know what they were doing, and that they need your protection from ever again getting the services of a great leader in time of a crisis? You know it is a very strange thing that the majority party is getting away from the idea of its founders. Alexander Hamilton made the strongest arguments against this amendment that I have ever read. He stated in a very straightforward way five good reasons why it should not be adopted.

They have gotten away from the concepts of their leaders. James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris, Roger Sherman, and many other members of the Constitutional Convention had very strong ideas about it. They were opposed to a restriction of tenure. George Washington did not mention the matter once in the debate. He voted for the Constitution and later, in a letter to Lafayette, stated that he did not join those who stated that the nations should not be able to avail themselves of the services of any man no matter for how many terms. So I cannot see any situation that would require the passage of this resolution, unless we want to admit that we do not think the majority of the people have the judgment to steer their own political destiny in the future.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has made an admirable statement showing how during the course of our history we have traveled in the direction of greater democratic control. Would not the adoption of this resolution in any form be a reversal of that trend?

Mr. KEFAUVER. It would be giving notice to the world that the House of Representatives of the United States feit that the great democratic people of America did not have enough judgment to select the official they wanted in the years to come. I think it would be a reflection. It would be an argument against other nations adopting the democratic process, rather than an argument for it.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat perturbed at the distressed way in which my distinguished colleague from Tennessee has stuck in the bark here today and ducked the question. He says that when we vote to submit this proposal to the legislatures of the States we have denied the people the right to determine this question. The opponents of this measure are the men who are afraid of the people. We propose to submit it to the legislatures of the States and let three-fourths of the States, speaking through their legislatures, elected by the people, ratify this amendment. Until then, of course, it is not a part of the Constitution.

We are in the cold, gray dawn of the morning after the night before. We have had four terms of the gentleman around whom this debate revolves. I believe in the resurrection of the dead and the life eternal, but know nothing in anybody's theology that indicates that F. D. R. will ever rise from the dead and run again for President, so it could not be aimed at him.

For a long time the people of this country were told what the New Deal had done for them. They are finally aware of what it has done to them. Our friends are now saying to this Congress and to the people that the New Deal has gotten us into such a heck of a shape that we cannot reduce taxes, we cannot lower the budget, we cannot cut Federal employment, we cannot pay anything on the national debt; we just have to go on and be ground between the upper and the nether millstones from now on. It is to prevent a repetition of that sort of thing, from which the people on November 5, 1946, freed themselves, that this resolution was introduced. It will take a long time to cure this evil.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I think it should be noted that undoubtedly the people on the other side of the aisle think that in 1948 their candidate will win the Presidency, and on our side of the aisle we have some very high hopes that our candidate will win. We are not looking to the past, we are looking to the future. The adoption of this resolution, if it ultimately is approved by enough of the States to make it effective, is certainly not directed against any one side in any partisan sense at all, but is rather, as I have said before, simply a writing into the Constitution of what has grown up to be in the minds of the people a good practice and tradition. It is not, as I view it, any reflection on anybody, and certainly no reflection on the capacity of the people to undertake to determine for themselves what they want to do.

Mr. JENNINGS. Of course not.

Mr. HALLECK. It will be as effective against a Republican President or a Democratic President who might be in office if the proposal is written into the Constitution.

Mr. JENNINGS. There is no question about that. I was asked this morning about certain elections that took place in my State. The highest tidal wave reached by the New Deal was in 1936. That ought to be known as the great relief year. Down in my State they had relief that ranged all the way from money to grapefruit and hams. There was such an abundance of it that it broke down the warehouses where it was stored. In other words, we had a manifestation of the power of a national administration when it is held together by the cohesive power of public plunder and when they can take the money of the people and finance their campaigns. We do not want that to happen again in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, during the Seventy-sixth Congress, on Mary 4, 1940, I introduced the first bill limiting the President of the United States to two terms. I took this step 7 years ago because I thought the policy of serving only two terms, which was inaugurated by George Washington, our first President, ought to be set forth in the Constitution. I think so today.

You will recall in 1940, the dictators of Europe were on the march. The war clouds hung low and the world was in turmoil. Abhorring as I always have, the centralization of power, I did not want anyone to assume such authority here in our own land.

I therefore introduced the following resolution which is almost identical to the measure which the committee has brought on the floor today. I urge the Congress to pass it so we can assure the American people that no one man can ever perpetuate himself in the White House forever.

Our Constitution cannot be abided by with concentrated authority in the hands of the executive branch. The natural love for power that men in high places often have is increased the longer they remain at the helm. They tend to shape the destiny of a whole people according to their own single mind if allowed to go unchecked.

For this reason, this Congress should take action now. Let us limit the length of time any President may serve, regardless of party. Let us guarantee America that dictatorship shall never place its yoke on this fair land.

To make my record clear, I will read to you the Hall resolution of 1940. I am so glad the House at this time is to pass one so similar to it.

House Joint Resolution 480

Joint resolution prohibiting payment of compensation for President during his third term of office

Resolved, etc., That no part of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made shall be available to pay compensation of any President for any period during which he is executing that office during a third term.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, of course, I cannot agree with the excited gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS] about what was done back in 1936; because at that time we were developing the Tennessee Valley Authority which has done more for that area than anything else that has ever been done by any State or the Federal Government.

But I am delighted to see my Republican friends get around to reading the Confederate Constitution. You know, in 1861 when the Confederate Constitutional Convention met, it was composed of the finest minds in America. At that time we were on the verge of war. At that time we had Jefferson Davis, one of the ablest military men in history as President of the Confederacy. They wrote into the Constitution of the Confederacy a provision that limited the Presidential term to 6 years, and provided that the President could not succeed himself.

At that time there had only been five men who had served 8 years as President—George Washington and four Democrats, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson. Up until today there has been only one Republican President who has ever served 8 years in the history of our country. That was Ulysses S. Grant. You have had two Republicans elected twice and both of them unfortunately were assassinated. They were Lincoln and McKinley. Theodore Roosevelt served out an unexpired term, then was elected for a full term. Calvin Coolidge served out an unexpired term and then was elected for a full term. But we have had, I believe, seven Democrats, including the four I have just mentioned, to serve as President 8 years each. Cleveland served 8 years, not consecutively. Wilson served 8 years consecutively. Roosevelt was elected for 16 years but served a little over 12 years.

I am going to support this amendment providing it is not amended. I believe the American people have a right to pass on this proposition. I cannot see that it involves any partisan politics. I do not agree with these attacks on President Roosevelt at all. We might as well attack Calvin Coolidge and say, "What if he had been elected for a third term?"

This is a matter that involves the future of this country, and I believe the overwhelming majority of the American people would agree to this limitation. I would prefer to see it changed to some extent, but I would rather have it limited to two 4-year terms than to have it one 6-year term. I say that with all deference to those who wrote the Constitution of the Confederacy, which has been pronounced by some of the greatest constitutional students of all times as the greatest document of its kind ever written. It almost paralleled the Constitution of the United States, with this and a few other changes.

I make this statement because it is the only opportunity I have to express my views on it. If the people of the United States do not want to adopt it, that is up to them. But I think under the circumstances, since the matter is before us, it is my duty to vote to submit it to the American people, unless it is altered to the point where I cannot afford to do so.

Therefore, if it is submitted finally in the form in which it came from the committee, I shall vote to submit it to the various States for approval or disapproval. Then the American people will have the right to pass upon it. I do not think it will wreck the Republic whether we pass it or whether we do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

In the situation here today, Mr. Chairman, we have the majority party starting out to limit the term of the President to two 4-year terms. It is strange that this should be the second piece of business before this House. It is evident to me that they are expressing their resentment for a man who has passed. They are permitting their feelings to override their judgment.

One of the previous speakers gave as a point in favor of his argument that in 1936 the people's money was used to win the election. At that time the late Franklin D. Roosevelt had been in office only 4 years. That argument could not be used as a substantial one to support this contention here today.

I am not in favor of a 6-year term, because if a man is not good for a second term why should he be elected for 6 years? It is better to have him go before the people at the end of 4 years and have him meet the public than it is to have him serve out a 6-year term. Therefore, I shall vote against that particular amendment. Sooner or later it may be that the Republicans will have a President who will have served two full terms of 4 years each, and there might be a national emergency and the people of this country might want to call on that Republican to serve them for a third 4-year term. If you put the people in the position of not being able to exercise that prerogative, it would be unfair to this democracy. I say to you that this is not a proposal that will work for the benefit of the people. It is merely a proposal to express resentment because a particular party had not been able to overcome a certain leader in this country.

I hope we will vote down the amendment and vote down the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I commend the leadership on both sides of the aisle in their endeavor to keep the resolution (H. J. Res. 27) now before the House above partisan politics. The attempt has been in vain, in my opinion. We ought to face the facts behind the resolution. As Republicans, it seems to me that we do not want to impose upon our country again one-man government such as we have had for the past 14 years, be he a Republican or a Democrat, be it Roosevelt or somebody else.

Our Democratic friends argue that this resolution is aimed at the late President and, therefore, is loaded with venom toward his work and his memory. Naturally there has been some reference to him because he is the man who held the office and built up such political power during his many administrations. It will be necessary, in the next few years, to dissolve much of the power that he created because it is not to the best interest of our Republic.

Mr. Chairman, the opposition party has stressed the necessity for continued election of an individual in case of a great emergency. We have had enough of man-made emergencies but it is easy to see the reason for the argument. It will require many years to eliminate the blight of new dealism. The idea that one man alone is able to run this Government in any emergency is repugnant to my concept of constitutional government. If we rely on that theory then our Government is in a perilous situation. We do not accept that theory for it is fallacious and contrary to fact. When Mr. Roosevelt died he was succeeded by Harry S. Truman, yet we have carried on, there has been no cessation of government. Woodrow Wilson said in 1912: "There is no indispensable man." And there is not. The great Thomas Jefferson likewise stated with much persuasiveness that no emergency should be permitted to break down the two-term tradition. All of the outstanding Democrats, except Roosevelt, stood by the tradition.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that should be submitted to the people; it involves their welfare. Passage of House Joint Resolution 27 will permit the people to decide. I urge its adoption by this House because it is in the public interest.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for the remaining 5 minutes.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee today will defeat the provision for one term of 6 years. It seems to me that if we are to keep both the Presidency and the legislative form of our Government responsive to the people it is necessary that we have a review of the first 4 years of any Presidential term. I was rather amazed during the remarks of the gentleman from Texas to hear his statement about the demand of this country for the election in the emergency or the nomination in the emergency of the late President Roosevelt for his third term in 1940. I remember quite clearly some of my distinguished Democratic friends coming back from the Democratic Convention in Chicago and advising of the fact that the closest man to Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Harry Hopkins, was in charge of his campaign for the demand for the third term. As I think back to the events during the immediate time when we got into this war I remember there was one particular columnist in whose column I had a great deal of confidence. When I got down to Washington I was very much surprised to find that he was a registered agent for one of the particular foreign powers that was interested very much in getting us into this war.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it not a fact that Carter Glass, Jim Farley, and Jack Garner all broke with Roosevelt over the third-term issue?

Mr. O'HARA. That is correct. I want to call attention again to what the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] said so well, and to call attention to influences that enter into our everyday lives and elections today and yesterday as to who is to be President of the United States. You have all these foreign countries attempting to influence who should be President of the United States. It is not just the people speaking, but many influences from foreign countries—people and factions interested in who is going to be the next President of the United States and in their interests and not of America's. Is it not a protection to the theory and tradition surrounding the Presidency that so far as possible we keep it controlled by the people of the United States and not these foreign influences that will come along and want the continuation of a particular party or particular individual as President? Surely we who are here today live so close to the shattered precedents of the past as to realize that if we lived in England, under English law, as a matter of the common law the President would be limited to two terms. Now, in this country let us do what the people want and pass this bill for this, Mr. Chairman. It is the only practical way the question can go to the people and to the State legislatures. I sincerely hope this resolution will pass as reported by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired; all time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] for the committee amendment.

The substitute for the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the committee amendment.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer on page 1, lines 6 and 7. At what time will that amendment be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. After the committee amendment has been disposed of, the gentleman may submit his amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to make reference to the committee amendment. As chairman of the committee I assume I am ethically bound not to oppose the committee amendment which was agreed to by a very narrow margin in committee, but I have a feeling that the members of the committee who voted for that amendment would not vote for it if they had the opportunity to vote again in committee. I make that statement because the language of a constitutional amendment is most important, more so than in the case of ordinary legislation. Every comma, every semicolon, every capital letter, every word means something in a constitutional amendment, and under these circumstances we should not lightly adopt language in a constitutional amendment that has not been thoroughly weighed.

This amendment, and I am divulging nothing, was offered by a member of the committee who wrote it out with a pencil during the reading of the resolution for amendment. Grammatically, I am told by the expert draftsman of this House, the language is not the language that should be embodied in a constitutional amendment. Of course, I did not vote for the amendment, but I did vote to report the bill and I think I may be pardoned for this explanation.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment that was adopted by the Judiciary Committee, offered, incidentally, by a majority member of the committee, was the only language considered with any care by the committee. Why the distinguished chairman of the committee would state that in the event the members of the committee had an opportunity to vote again the vote would be other than what it was is something I cannot understand.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. I want to agree with what the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania is now saying. We carefully, deliberately, thoughtfully considered the language that we adopted by a majority vote of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is crystal clear. I do not think that the criticism is well founded or that it has any merit whatever.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I have had occasion to examine the amendment. It is simply a change of verbiage which improves the grammar, that is all.

Mr. WALTER. There is no question about that. The gentleman who offered the amendment made a very careful analysis of the language contained in the resolution, then offered this amendment because in his judgment and in the judgment of a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary the language agreed upon improved the language originally proposed.

I do not think the chairman of our great committee ought to come to the floor of the House and state that the committee would not have done what was done in the event it had another opportunity to vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not want to be misunderstood. We considered the amendment for about 5 minutes, I think the gentleman will agree. It was a penciled memorandum, such as an amendment that is offered on the floor. No attention was given at all to the language, and that is what I meant. I am not saying that the intent of the amendment is not what was intended. I am saying that the language in the resolution was given very careful consideration.

Mr. WALTER. By whom was it given consideration?

Mr. MICHENER. Why, at least, the hearings in the Senate in 1940, the hearings in the House in 1945 and the hearings in the Senate in 1945 were considered. I am not going to oppose it. I just want to be on record, because I am confident that this language as now written in the amendment will not go into the Constitution after some of the people who did support it give it further consideration.

Mr. WALTER. I do not know where the gentleman gets his information from. All I know is that our committee considered this language very carefully and we, by majority vote, concluded that it was an improvement over the language as originally written.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Committee of the Whole is now in the rather interesting position, as I see it, of this resolution being reported out only yesterday. The chairman of the committee says that if a majority of the committee had another opportunity to vote for this today, they would vote entirely different than they did only yesterday, and if I construe the remarks of my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], he was in a backhanded way politely suggesting to the Committee of the Whole to defeat the committee amendment and adopt the original verbiage, and my good friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS], at least supports the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, where does that leave our friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that after this confusion, more or less, it might be a good time to recommit this measure to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. COLMER:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, after the word "by" strike out the words "the legislatures of" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "conventions in."

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "the legislatures of" and insert the words "conventions in."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes, including the 5 minutes to which the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is very simple. It is not subject to misconstruction. It simply provides that if the resolution is adopted it will be either ratified or not ratified, as the case may be, by conventions called in the several States for that purpose, rather than by the State legislatures. Of course the objective of the amendment is to give the people of the United States an opportunity to pass upon this momentous question without any extraneous matters entering into the discussion.

Article V of the Constitution provides:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

In other words, it is up to this body to say which method shall be adopted.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. While I have taken a position in opposition to any limitation, to two terms or to one term of 6 years, this is the nearest approach to having a question of this kind submitted to the people. We have heard continuously during the debate that this is going to be submitted to the people for ratification. This is one way the people can act upon it, and the only way they can act.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

This is what we are up against. We know as a matter of common knowledge that the members of the State legislatures are elected upon various issues, upon whether or not, for instance, there shall be a tax on dogs, whether there shall be a better educational system, or what have you. Under this amendment, if adopted, the people would select their delegates to the State conventions upon the one issue of whether they wanted to adopt this amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. Is it not true that the eighteenth amendment was submitted in the same manner as is sought to be done in this resolution?

Mr. COLMER. It is my understanding that the eighteenth amendment was handled through conventions rather than the State legislatures.

If you want to give the people who have the right to decide this question the opportunity to decide it, this amendment offers you the machinery to do it. What objection can there be by either those who are for or those who are against the principle of limiting the Presidential tenure to adopting this amendment, thereby giving the people an opportunity to express themselves directly by the election of delegates to the conventions upon the one and only issue involved, namely, whether or not the amendment to the Constitution shall be adopted?

Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a very important matter. Our forefathers in framing that great document—the Constitution of the United States—debated the question as to whether or not there should be a limitation upon the number of terms a man could serve as President of this great country. There were those who took the position that there might be those ambitious ones who would desire to perpetuate themselves in office, and that the office of President was too powerful to be held by one man longer than two terms. There were others who took the position that this was a matter that the people could decide upon the merits of the time and the man; that there might come a time when the country was in the midst of a life-and-death battle with a foreign foe and that it might not be wise to change at such time. The result was that no prohibition against a man holding the office for more than a specified time was written into the Constitution. Personally, I am of the opinion that the powers and duties of this important office are of such transcending importance, and the duties of the office itself are so onerous and demanding—always resulting in serious impairment of the health of the occupant—that no man should offer himself for more than two terms. But that is my opinion. There are others who feel that there should be no limitation whatever and that a President should have the right to offer himself as a candidate to the people of the country to succeed himself as often as he desired.

But, Mr. Chairman, this country is fundamentally a democracy, and because I am elected to the National Legislature does not qualify me to pass upon that question. Neither is the representative from my county in the State legislature qualified to pass upon that question. My contention is that the people as a whole are qualified to pass upon the question, and that the best way—and, in fact, in my opinion, the only way—that they can directly pass upon the question under the Constitution is to elect the several delegates from the several States to a convention where the only issue in the selection of these delegates will be whether or not the Presidency should be limited to two terms as provided in the pending resolution. I repeat that we all know as a matter of common knowledge that when a man is elected to the State legislature he is elected not upon this issue alone but upon many and varied issues, or upon his personality. This amendment offers the only vehicle through which we can get a clear-cut and unequivocal decision of the people on the question before the House.

I had been very much in hopes that this matter could be decided upon a bipartisan issue and that party politics would not enter into it. The Republican Party, being the majority party here, is fostering this legislation. If they believe that the people want this resolution passed, then why not adopt this amendment and give the people that opportunity?

Mr. Chairman, I am not laboring under any misapprehension. We might as well be candid and realistic. If the Republican leadership are willing for the people to decide this issue, they will favor this amendment and it will be adopted because those on this side of the aisle will support the amendment. On the other hand, if the Republican leadership opposes this amendment, we all know that they have the votes to defeat it. I want to give the people an opportunity to decide it, and I want to vote for this resolution with this amendment written into it as assurance that the people will have that opportunity to pass upon it. I cannot vote for it otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLMER) there were—ayes 74, noes 134.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few observations about some of the remarks made this afternoon. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] clearly indicated that no President made any contribution to the winning of any war and he referred to a remark made by Madison some years ago that we would always have a weak Executive.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman must have misunderstood what I said. I said that no President had participated in winning a war by leading the armies. I said the Chiefs of Staff, the generals, and admirals are the ones who carry on the war. While they consult with the President, yet the President is not the one who is responsible for the winning of a war in such an emergency.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman then admits by his statement that my interpretation of what he originally said is correct, because certainly you have admitted it now in your own language, unless my powers of interpretation are wrong. You are going in a roundabout way, but you come back to what I understood you to say originally.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I am not going around Robin Hood's barn. The gentleman is going around Robin Hood's barn in respect to what I said.

Mr. McCORMACK. You are talking about Robin Hood's barn. If you want to get personal, we will do that, too.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can engage in personalities, too.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am engaging in a discussion and not in personalities. I am giving the gentleman an opportunity to explain if I have made any misunderstanding of his statement. Certainly there is nothing of a personal nature involved in that

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the statement that the President himself was not the leader of an army in an emergency, but that the generals, admirals, and Chiefs of Staff, and officers of our Army and Navy are the ones who carry out the war. I said, of course, they consulted with the President and he consults with them, but the President is not the one who is directly responsible for the winning of the war in case of an emergency. That is what I said before and that is what I say now.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's statement eliminates the President as a leader in war and as a contributing factor in the determination of the outcome of a war. Does the gentleman take that position?

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not say that at all. I said he consults with the generals.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the gentleman gives sole credit to the Chiefs of Staff of the Army and Navy?

Mr. SPRINGER. I said they consulted, and they do consult, but the President does not lead the Army.

Mr. McCORMACK. In the history of our country we have had Presidents who have been strong factors and strong leaders in wartime.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not when they were sitting as President of the United States.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course we have.

Mr. SPRINGER. They consulted.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. Who was it that stepped up Eisenhower fourteen or fifteen points in order to make him Commander in Chief and win the war? Who was responsible for Marshall being made Chief of Staff?

Mr. McCORMACK. Very well, let us go back to 1861 when a man by the name of Abraham Lincoln was President and a great President. Lincoln did not know whom he could trust of those around him. He did not know what generals he could trust for a number of years until Grant came across the horizon.

According to history, Abraham Lincoln did not know what members of his Cabinet he could trust. Abraham Lincoln was the personality that led our country to victory in the War Between the States. If ever a President during wartime was a leader, not only of our civil government but in time of war, it was Lincoln. It was not until 1863, or thereabouts, that Grant came across the horizon. Prior to that time and during the remainder of the War Between the States it was Lincoln who was the leader of the civil government and also the leader of the armed forces.

When the gentleman makes the statement he does, making it in good faith, I give him back the leadership of Abraham Lincoln during the War Between the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOLCOTT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 25), pursuant to House Resolution 91, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 285, nays 121, not voting 26, as follows:

[Roll No. 4]

YEAS—285

Allen, Calif.	Andrews, N. Y.	Barrett
